GOLDWYN

THE most important production news from the Goldwyn studio this week is that work has been started on the second Mary Roberts Rinehart Eminent Authors production, "Empire Builders," by Director E. Mason Hopper. The only important member of the cast so far engaged is Cullen Landis, who will play the lead.

Advance production plans made known this week provide that "Wild Apples" will be the next subject for Jack Pickford, and this will be in charge of Al Green, who is now making "The Double Dyed Deceiver."

Reginald Barker is to film "Bunty Pulls the String," with an all star cast, and T. Hayes Hunter will make "The Christian" with selected players. Another all star number will be "Yellow Men and Gold," from the Gouverneur Morris story of the same title, which is to be directed by Wallace Worsley.

At the present time all of the above mentioned directors are at work on subjects. Barker is directing "The Branding Iron" and T. Hayes Hunter is making the big cathedral scenes for "Earth Bound," while Wallace Worsley is filming "The Penalty," a Gouverneur Morris story.

"Officer 666" is to be the next vehicle for Tom Moore, directed by Harry Beaumont, and Clarence Badger will direct Will Rogers in "Alec Lloyd," a western picture. No story has been selected for Mabel Normand. All three of these stars are enjoying a short vacation.

Mary Alden was this week engaged to play the important part of Emily Rehd in "Milestones," under the direction of Paul Scarden, and Maude George, John Hohenbest and Cesare Gravina have been engaged to support Pauline Frederick in "Madame X."

F. P. LASKY

THE big scene for "What's Your Hurry," the Wallace Reid subject now being made, is to be shot the latter part of this week when Reid willl drive a big motor truck into a break is a dam. In the making of these scenes the matinee idol is to get the most severe ducking of his screen career, for it will be necessary for him to dive out of range of the camera. Lois Wilson is playing the feminine lead in this Byron Morgan story, being directed by Sam Woods. Following this, Reid will be given a vacation, and he has planned to make a stage appearance in a North Pacific coast city.

James Cruze is making the last scenes for the Bryant Washburn picture, "What Happened to Jones," and about April 1st will begin the making of "A Full House," from the story by Fred Jackson.

George H. Melford has made all the mountain scenes for "The Translation of a Savage," from the Sir Gilbert Parker novel, and is now working on river scenes at Sacramento. From there the troup will go to San Francisco, where an Australian liner will be used. The principals of the Melford cast are Mabel Julienne Scott, Milton Sills, Elliott Dexter, Ann Forrest, Maude Wayne, Helen Dunbar and Fred Huntly.

Half of one of the big Lasky studio stages is taken up with a setting of an English hotel in the European section of a Chinese city, and another big setting erected for scenes in the Ethel Clayton picture, "All in a Night," adapted from the Samuel Merwin story by Edith Kennedy, is that of a Chinese tea house, and another is a street scene showing the dwellings in the native quarter. Paul Powell is directing this picture.

UNIVERSAL

MORE attention is to be given to comedies by the Universal Company, according to information given out at the Universal plant this week. All classes of humorous entertainments are to be made; Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in five-reel productions, and others of two reels, in addition to a series of one-reel comedies, and the Joe Martin series. The Century Comedies are to remain a part of the Universal release. These are made at the L-Ko plant in Hollywood.

The new series of comedies to be made for Universal will be produced by Allen Curtis, who was formerly identified with Universal as comedy director, and who has had a wide experience in this field both in pictures and on the speaking stage. The first to be made will be a rural farce titled "Three Pairs of Silk Stockings," with Harry Keaton and Ida Tenbrook as principals.

The series of comedies being made by Robert Anderson will consist of two reels each, and the first is titled "My Lady's Ankle." Buela Booker has been engaged as lead for this, and one of the principal roles will be taken by Jennie Lee.

Three feature productions are in the making, they being "Crossed Claims," with Harry Carey; "Virginia," being directed by Phil Rosen, and "Dodd's—His Diary," being directed by Harry Franklin.

The H. M. Shumate's magazine story, "Hitchin' Posts," has been purchased, and will be directed by Jack Ford, and the Holman Day novel, "The Red Lane," story of the Canadian Northwest, is being put in continuity and will be directed by Lynn Reynolds. Another recent purchase is the screen rights for the South Sea Island story by Ralph Stock titled "Marama," which will be a starring vehicle for Priscilla Dean.

METRO

GENERAL MANAGER JOSEPH ENGLE and the west coast producing staff of the Metro studios this week are entertaining J. R. Ruben, secretary and general counsel of Metro Pictures Corporation, who is making his first visit to the coast. Mr. Ruben was accompanied by his family and is combining business and pleasure on this trip.

The film version of "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," adapted from the speaking stage comedy drama of the same name, is to have an all star cast, it was decided this week, and Viola Dana will not appear in this picture. Instead, Eugene Pallette and Ruth Stonehouse will have the featured parts, Miss Stonehouse appearing in the part of Polly Hathaway, the reporter. The first scenes are being made by Director Eddie Dillon in the newspaper reception room set, which is quite a novelty, inasmuch as it conforms with the ideas of the woman editor of the newspaper of the play, the setting being of futurist design, with dovegray finished furniture and woodwork, quite foreign to the atmosphere of the average newspaper office.

A new climax has been made for "The Best of Luck," the Drury Lane melodrama, the scenes for which were taken at Santa Barbara last week, and consist of over and under water stuff made by the use of airplanes and diving suits. Fred Malatesta, Jack Holt and Kathryn Adams spent a week under the direction of John Ince for the making of this new ending.

Work has been started on the first Winchell Smith production, "The New Henrietta," under the direction of Herbert Blache, and Bert Lytell is making the first scenes for his new subject, "The Temple of Dawn," in which Seena Owen will be his leading woman.

The Nazimova Company is at work on "Billions," and the local rumor that Nazimova would leave for the east shortly to finish the subject has been denied at the studio.

Rex Ingram is this week selecting cast for the next Drury Lane, "Hearts Are Trumps."

Percy Heath, late scenario editor at Universal, who was recently engaged for Metro in the same capacity, is at work on his first subject for this firm, which is a preparation of continuity for "Head and Shoulders," which is to star Viola Dana.

Harvey Gates, also a new member of the Metro scenario staff, is preparing a script for "Held in Trust," adapted from the story of the same name by George Gibbe Turner.

Mary Beaton, who came to the coast to play in "Alias Jimmy Valentine," and took an important part in "Dangers to Men," has been summoned to New York to play in the Maxwell Karger production, "Clothes," adapted from the Pollock-Hopwood drama of the same title.

The Metro Film Corporation have added another $15,000 unit of equipment to their electrical department, which consists of a Liberty airplane motor with two generators mounted on a motor truck, which will be used for lighting effects by companies on location.

The Metro-Shurtleff Company, filming "Burning Daylight," is home from Truckee, where they played in snow scenes. As a result of the radical change in climate, several members, including Director Sloman and Mitchell Lewis were unable to continue work as the result of LaGrippe and colds.

BRUNTON

THE W. W. Hodkinson subject, "The House of Whispers", starring J. Warren Kerrigan has been completed by Director Ernest Warde. The last scene to be made for this was that of a fight between the feminine heavy, Claire DuBrey and Kerrigan, which was put over in a most realistic manner. The Kerrigan Company is now at work in the selection of the next vehicle.

Kathryn Adams has been selected by Director Colin Campbell to play the lead opposite Dustin Farnum in his first Robertson-Cole subject, "Big Happiness", and the company will leave in a few days for the mountains to make Alpine snow scenes.

The initial Mae Marsh-Robertson Cole release, "Mary Carey", is now all completed.

The Pathe-Jack Dempsey serial made under the supervision of Robert Brunton by Director W. S. Van Dyke, will be concluded by the end of the week, which will make a record for serial production. The first scenes were taken on December 8th, and the last on March 27th, making a total of ninety-six working days for the fifteen two reel episodes.

The Betty Compson Company being directed by Arthur Rosson have about three weeks more of work before all scenes for the first subject are completed; and the Mary Pickford Company will require at least a month more for the filming of "'Op O' Me Thumb".

The next Lew Cody production for Robertson-Cole is to be made at the Brunton studios under the direction of James Horne. Betty Blythe has been engaged as leading woman, and work will be started this week.

The Mayflower Company directed by Sidney Franklin making the Robert W. Chambers story, "Athalie", with Sylvia Breamer in the featured role, has returned from Truckee where snow scenes were secured. Supporting cast was made up of a number of well known players including Conrad Nagle, Robert Cane, Sam DeGrasse, Rosemary Theby and Edward Martindale.

The editing of three Mayflower subjects filmed by Alan Dwan is now receiving the attention of that director. The first to be released will be "A Splendid Hazard", which is to be followed by "In the Heart of a Fool", and "The Scoffer". Following this work Dwan will make one more film for Mayflower which will probably be from an original screen story.

FOX

FOR two weeks one of the big stages at the Fox studio has been tied up with the technical staff preparing a big seven room setting to be used for the William Farnum production, "The Joyous Trouble-Maker," which was started this week under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. Louise Lovely is to be Farnum's leading woman in this play.

Another stage has a mammoth dance hall set measuring 56 x 100 feet, which is being used by Jacques Jaccard in the filming of a number of interiors for "No Limit Carson." The exteriors for this play were made at Sonora, California, where a troupe of sixty people worked for two weeks. More than 300 people will take part in the dance hall scenes. Tom Mix and Winifred Westover are the principals.

William Russell and company are back from the redwood country of Mendicino County, after ten days of exterior scene making for "Big Jim O'Kane." The original screen play is by Julius Furthman, and the company is now working at the studios making interiors.

A new Fox entertainment started this week is titled, "A World of Folly," and will be the second subject starring Vivian Rich. This is an original screen play by Janie Roth, which will have Augustus Phillips, P. M. McCullough and Edna Mae Cooper as principals.

Paul Cazeneuve is a new director at the Fox plant, being in charge of filming the Madlaine Traverse production, "The Spirit of 'Good," which has a western atmosphere. Cazeneuve has had a wide experience in the entertainment field as speaking stage actor, producer and writer, and has spent some time learning the technique of the screen play.

Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director of Sunshine Comedies, is now making the final scenes for the six reel special Fox comedy which will be ready for showing within the next thirty days.

Three comedy companies are at work under the direction of Eddie Cline, Roy De Ruth and Jack Blystone in the filming of two reel Sunshine Comedies.

NATIONAL

THE series of two reel comedies being made by National Film Corporation of America and known as "Buddy Post Comedies," are to be released by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, according to announcement made by the National officials this week. The first of the series is now completed, and is titled "Love and Loot." It was directed by Mark Goldaine, and Buddy Post, a young giant but not a fat man, is featured. Helen Howard is the leading woman.

Director William A. Seiter, who has been absent from the National studios because of a surgical operation, is now reported on the road to recovery, and will shortly begin the filming of a second National feature.

The National is to make but one serial a year, it was stated this week, and that will be "The Son of Tarzan," from the Edgar Rice Burroughs book, which will feature Jack Hoxie with Lucille Rubey in the leading feminine role. Many of the scenes for this will be made on a Pacific Ocean Island.

LOIS WEBER has completed the final editing of her initial Artcraft Special release, and preview was given at the studio this week. The title, as previously announced in these columns, is "What Do Men Want."

Miss Weber, during the editing of her first film, has been giving considerable attention to story and continuity of her second production, and is now casting for this film which has not been titled. George Hackathorn, Edith Kessler and Claire Windsor, who played in "What Do Men Want," will appear in the second subject, and others engaged are L. C. Shumway, Edward Burns and Mona Lisa.

The O. L. Sellers Company filming "The Sowing of Alderson McCree," left last week for Calistoga, a small town in Northern California. Sellers will be in charge of direction, and J. H. McCloskey, late of the Louis B. Mayer studio staff, will be his assistant. This film will be made for the Humanity Producing Company.

The final episode of the Benny Leonard serial, "The Evil Eye," is being filmed this week by Director J. Gordon Cooper at Universal City, and following this it is planned that Leonard will appear in one or more feature productions.

At the same time the Tourneur technical staff is busy preparing settings for the filming of this picture which will be one of the two more subjects Tourneur is to make for Famous Players-Lasky Company before beginning work on his first release for Associated Producers.

"Men must not look" is the sign that will probably be hung conspicuously about the Fox Sunshine lot, for Hampton DelRuth has decreed that the comedy beauties must not be seen by men if they are to be retained by the Fox Company. Cupid went through the cracks of the high board fence last week, and Lois Boyd, one of the Sunshine beauties, became the bride of Ray Ramsey, cameraman for the Eddie Cline Company. Three other engagements, which may lead to marriages, have been announced.

Carbon copies of a story telling of the organization of a new million and a half corporation have reached the sanctum of HOKUM, and been deposited in the janitor's safety deposit vault. A flitting glance at this publicity piffle gave us the information that a certain star was to peek off $6,000 a week and never bat an eye, all of which was to be mere pin money, while his real income was to be one-third of the gross receipts of each production, which ain't being done. The writer of this had evidently walked across the Alexandria rug and tried some of the new Mexican hop introduced hereabouts. The writer of the aforementioned piffle is said to be a member of the P. A. organization that recently adopted the word "Truth" as a slogan, and now we see the flag dragged into the dust. Don't expel him for this.

Mayer Studio

ALL work on the Anita Stewart film, "The Yellow Typhoon," has been completed, and a preview was given at the studio Saturday evening, March 20th, by Louis B. Mayer. The preview was attended by Messrs. Balaban and Katz of Chicago; Sol Lesser, Colonel Wm. N. Selig and a number of others. After viewing the picture, all were enthusiastic concerning its merits, and it is expected it will pull more business than any previous production with this star. The play was adapted from the Harold McGrath story of the same name by Monte M. Katterjohn, and the direction was in charge of Edward Jose. The film is is said to have some wonderful camera effects worked out by Rene Guissart.

King Baggot, Familiar Star, a Leading Man

King Baggot, who is Margaret Fisher's leading man in "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver," has a past in motion picture experience which tells something of the history of the business itself. After nine years on the speaking stage, King Baggot transferred to "pictures." In those days, when the name of the player was not announced on the screen, King Baggot was known as "the man with the white streak," a conspicuous streak of gray over the temples marking him through any disguise. Realizing the actors need of getting together for mutual interests, King Baggot founded and organized the Screen Club, and was its first president.

Work Started on First "Chic" Sales Comedy

The Christie Film Company has constructed a small-town street on its new property in Hollywood, where a large amount of the action of "The Smart Aleck," the "Chic" Sales comedy now in production, takes place. Inside the studio there has been built a set which depicts the interior of the town hall on the eventful evening when the Woman's Relief Corps stages its annual bazaar.

A number of types surround the feature cast which includes a list of notable names. The chief feminine support of "Chic Sale" is Colleen Moore, who plays the daughter of the small town's leading banker.

Ruth Roland Returns to Studio After Illness

Ruth Roland returned to work at the Astra Studio last week, fully recovered from the illness which confined her to her home for four days and caused a suspension of activities of the company now producing a fifteen episode serial which will be Miss Roland's next starring play on the Pathe program.

Al Green Has Helped Direct Many Stars

Al Green, who has recently joined the Goldwyn forces as director at the Culver City studios and is now directing Jack Pickford in "The Double Dyed Deceiver," has probably helped direct more stars than any man in the business, although he is one of the youngest directors only twenty-seven. For a year and a half he was co-director with Marshall Neilan and then became author director of George Fawcett and Vivian Reed in "Reward of Service," "Lost and Found," and "Trials and Tribulations."

Producers Mother Dies After Long Illness

A clap of thunder, while she was wearing a rubber inflated suit, caused Mabel Normand to think she had a blow out while making scenes for "The Slim Princess."

Col. Selig is reported to have given a Russian wolf hound to Hedda Nova because of her excellent work in "The Mask," and the question arises whether such a present is desirable in these days of the h. c. of l.

"Men must not look" is the sign that will probably be hung conspicuously about the Fox Sunshine lot, for Hampton DelRuth has decreed that the comedy beauties must not be seen by men if they are to be retained by the Fox Company. Cupid went through the cracks of the high board fence last week, and Lois Boyd, one of the Sunshine beauties, became the bride of Ray Ramsey, cameraman for the Eddie Cline Company. Three other engagements, which may lead to marriages, have been announced.

Carbon copies of a story telling of the organization of a new million and a half corporation have reached the sanctum of HOKUM, and been deposited in the janitor's safety deposit vault. A flitting glance at this publicity piffle gave us the information that a certain star was to pick off $6,000 a week and never bat an eye, all of which was to be mere pin money, while his real income was to be one-third of the gross receipts of each production, which ain't being done. The writer of this had evidently walked across the Alexandria rug and tried some of the new Mexican hop introduced hereabouts. The writer of the aforementioned piffle is said to be a member of the P. A. organization that recently adopted the word "Truth" as a slogan, and now we see the flag dragged into the dust. Don't expel him for this.

Al Green Has Helped Direct Many Stars

Al Green, who has recently joined the Goldwyn forces as director at the Culver City studios and is now directing Jack Pickford in "The Double Dyed Deceiver," has probably helped direct more stars than any man in the business, although he is one of the youngest directors only twenty-seven. For a year and a half he was co-director with Marshall Neilan and then became author-director of George Fawcett and Vivian Reed in "Reward of Service," "Lost and Found," and "Trials and Tribulations."

Producers Mother Dies After Long Illness

Ernest Shipman, producer of "Back to God's Country," received word this week that his mother, Mrs. M. A. B. Shipman, had died at her home in Pasadena, California, after an illness of several months. Mrs. Shipman was sixty-seven years old.

Mrs. Shipman leaves her four sons, Ernest, Frederic, The Rev. Dr. Montague Shipman of Pasadena, and Joseph Shipman. The two latter sons were with her when she died. Interment will be in Pasadena.

Cissy Fitzgerald Goes Story Shopping Here

Cissy Fitzgerald, of the Cissy FitzGerald Pictures, Inc., Los Angeles, is in town for a few days. On her return she will take back several manuscripts of plays with a view to filming them.

Mayer Studio

ALL work on the Anita Stewart film, "The Yellow Typhoon," has been completed, and a preview was given at the studio Saturday evening, March 20th, by Louis B. Mayer. The preview was attended by Messrs. Balaban and Katz of Chicago; Sol Lesser, Colonel Wm. N. Selig and a number of others. After viewing the picture, all were enthusiastic concerning its merits, and it is expected it will pull more business than any previous production with this star. The play was adapted from the Harold McGrath story of the same name by Monte M. Katterjohn, and the direction was in charge of Edward Jose. The film is said to have some wonderful camera effects worked out by Rene Guissart.

King Baggot, Familiar Star, a Leading Man

King Baggot, who is Margaret Fisher's leading man in "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver," has a past in motion picture experience which tells something of the history of the business itself. After nine years on the speaking stage, King Baggot transferred to "pictures." In those days, when the name of the player was not announced on the screen, King Baggot was known as "the man with the white streak," a conspicuous streak of gray over the temples marking him through any disguise. Realizing the actors need of getting together for mutual interests, King Baggot founded and organized the Screen Club, and was its first president.

Work Started on First "Chic" Sales Comedy

The Christie Film Company has constructed a small-town street on its new property in Hollywood, where a large amount of the action of "The Smart Aleck," the "Chic" Sales comedy now in production, takes place. Inside the studio there has been built a set which depicts the interior of the town hall on the eventful evening when the Woman's Relief Corps stages its annual bazaar.

A number of types surround the feature cast which includes a list of notable names. The chief feminine support of "Chic Sale" is Colleen Moore, who plays the daughter of the small town's leading banker.

Ruth Roland Returns to Studio After Illness

Ruth Roland returned to work at the Astra Studio last week, fully recovered from the illness which confined her to her home for four days and caused a suspension of activities of the company now producing a fifteen episode serial which will be Miss Roland's next starring play on the Pathe program.

Unique Gown Is Stolen From Fox Studios

An unusual costume which was worn by Miss Vola Vale in a Sunshine comedy, was stolen recently from the Fox studios in Hollywood, California. The dress consisted almost entirely of pearl beads, and was in reality a novelty bathing suit.

This costume was one of the sexty five gowns which were purchased by Fox for the beauties in the Sunshine comedy recently completed under the supervision of Hampton Del Ruth. They were designed by Miss Margaret Whistler, of the Fox studios, and are said to be exceedingly striking of pattern. Including the head dress about 45,000 beads were required for the costumes.

Talmadge Sisters Lead in "Fan" Contest

A popularity voting contest for choosing the world's most popular motion picture star is now being conducted by the Minneapolis Journal. At the present counting Norma Talmadge is several thousand votes ahead. Her sister Constance Talmadge, stands a very good chance of coming in second.

The winner will receive in addition to the regular prize, a full page write up in the Minneapolis Journal, and if Miss Talmadge wins, it is suggested by the Norma Talmadge Publicity Department that exhibitors can use this full page to considerable advantage as a lobby display.

Hall Back After Three Weeks "On Location"

Thurston Hall who is playing the title role in Lewis Selznick's screen version of Willard Mack's "The Prince of Pines" returned to New York this week from the White Mountains of New Hampshire after three weeks spent "on location" under the direction of Burton George.

Here and There

Dan Carter, title editor of Vitagraph productions, claims that "The Eyes of Hunter" and "Deadline at Eleven," complete Vitagraph releases for the end of January, to be long enough with the Big V. Mr. Carter acted and supervised the editing of all the Vitagraph serial among which were "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance and the Woman," "The Light for Million," "The Man of Might," "Something Barrier."

Hamilton King has just painted a garden study, said to be full of charm and poetry of Marion Davis. Cosmopolitan star Miss Davis posed for Mr. King before he was taken ill and the portrait led to posing for other noted artists. The same painter is to be responsible for a poster of Miss Davies, a "jewel poster," showing her literally clothed in a web of her birthstone, the sapphire.

Emma Dunn, a well known legitimate actress, who recently completed her work in a picturization of "Old Lady 31" for Metro, declares that her advent into the picture field was a most enjoyable experience which she wouldn't have missed for anything. While she likes picture work quite as well as stage performances, she thinks that her stock experience is an asset that can hardly be overrated, and advises every young actress contemplating motion picture work to have two or three years training in stock first.

Charles Maigne is directing Mary Miles Minter in her latest Realart picture founded on one of the Cumberland mountain stories of John Fox, Jr., for which Mr. Maigne also wrote the scenario.

While William Russell, Emmett J. Flynn and Elliot Percy were at Fort Bragg making exteriors for Big Jim O'Kane, Miss Percy who is a real Irish colleen, suggested to Director Flynn that the Russell Flynn company give a reception and dance to the lumberjacks on March 17th. There were 80 lumberjacks and after Mr. Russell made a speech of introduction, he added that Miss Percy would dance with every man present. In spite of the heavy hob nailed boots of her partners, Miss Percy fulfilled the promise, and the next morning she received a big green log. It had been polished on one side, and on the smooth surface was inscribed: "This green log is a present from the lumberjacks of Camp No. 5 Union Lumber Company, Fort Bragg, California, presented to the fairest of Ireland's fair daughters, Eileen Percy, Fox Film Corporation, pretty actress, in grateful appreciation of her showing the members of the camp how truly delightful the Irish are. We are for Ireland from this day until the end of the world." The log was signed by the 80 men with whom Miss Percy had danced.

Delighted that Pearl White is making an Alaskan picture under the direction of Charles Giblyn, the Native Sons and Daughters of the Golden North, an organization composed of boys and girls "born North of 53" have decided to send the Fox star a piece of nugget jewelry as a token of their appreciation for her work in "The Tiger's Cub," the Alaskan story by George Goodchild which is being finished at the Fox studios in N. Y. Thomas Carrigan who plays opposite Miss White, followed carefully in his make-up, a former Alaskan who sent him one of his photos snapped in the early days of the rush to the goldfields of the Tanana region.

Mary Pickford Entertains

Los Angeles Orphans See "Pollyanna" and Meet Star at Theatre

TOUCHED by the pathos of a letter from a child, who signed her name, "one of your admirers, who has neither father nor mother," Mary Pickford entertained the orphans and friendless children of Los Angeles at a gigantic party at Clune's Auditorium, to see "Pollyanna," the United Artists' production.

The letter from the orphan child giving no address, was post marked Los Angeles, and Miss Pickford hoping that she would be able to accomplish a real purpose, arranged with the management of Clune's Auditorium to entertain the orphans and friendless children of Los Angeles at a special morning matinee so that she could carry the "Pollyanna" philosophy into the hearts of all the little folks in that community.

The orphan's party was during the fourth week of the successful run of "Pollyanna," at the Clune's Auditorium. During all that time capacity houses prevailed. A great deal of praise has come to Miss Pickford because of the screen portrayal and the opinion of critics is that this joyous blend of humor and sentiment, which she brought about in this production, is one of the most picturizations she has ever accomplished.

"The Silent Barrier" Company Returns

William Worthington, director of "The Silent Barrier" first of the series of Louis Tracy Pictures to put in production by Louis Tracy Productions Inc., at which C. C. Burrs producer, returns this week from Lake Placid, where the Swiss mountain scenes of the picture have been filmed.

On the return of this company work is to be resumed at the Leah Baird studio, Cliffside, N. J. where several important interior sets are already awaiting Mr. Worthington's approval.

Indianapolis Theatres Visited by Robbers

Losses of nearly $3,000 were sustained by five Indiana photoplay theatres last week through a series of bold robberies. The Auditorium at Connersville lost most heavily. The robbers gained entrance to the theatre through the alley door, muffled the safe in the box office and then set off a charge. They escaped with $1,500.

Four neighborhod houses in Indianapolis were visited by vandals. From the North Star, owned by A. C. Zaring, they carried away the entire projection equipment, valued at $800. They took lenses and other valuable parts from F. W. Neal's house, the Alcazar and the Garrick.

George Melford Leaves for Mountain Locale

With a complete equipment, a great number of extras and the entire cast for his special production, "The Translation of a Savage," George Melford has departed for the high Sierras in quest of snow scenes, which will form an important part of the picture. In the cast are Mabel Juliene Scott, Milton Sills, Elliott Dexter, Winter Hall, Ann Forest, and a number of others. Mr. Melford will remain for at least two weeks in the mountains.

Serials Head List of Universal Releases

Universal announces that for the week of April 12th no Special Attraction will be offered. The tenth episode of "Elmo the Fearless" entitled, "The Fatal Bullet," heads the list of the releases, together with "Relentless Renegats," an episode of "The Lion Man." Other releases will be "Stop That Wedding", an Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran comedy, a western, and the International News and the New Screen Magazine.

ORPHEUM THEATRE
TERRE HAUTE, INDIANA

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., Dec. 20, 1919.
564 West Randolph Street,
Chicago, Illinois.

Gentlemen:

Having used continuously, two (2) Motiograph De Luxe Projecting Machines for more than a year, we wish other Exhibitors to benefit by our experience.

Previous to using the DeLuxe Machines, we had two other well known Manufacturers' Machines, which were used in a period of four years, but not until we have had the DeLuxe model has a projecting machine been so perfected that our screen has never been dark through any fault of the machine.

Regardless of speed, fast or slow, we have a picture on the screen as steady as a marble statue, light through shutter which cannot be improved on, and entirely flickerless. The breaking of old film never clogs in machine, but passes through without interrupting picture, and the double automatic fire-shutter is perfection for safety and prevention of fire.

The adjustment for lamp-house is highly recommended. In fact, the whole machine is far above our expectations.

As for service, the Enterprise Optical Company is prompt, energetic and reliable, no delay in exchange of machine parts, or correspondence, and can say they do fully guarantee all parts of machines by replacing with new parts.

These two machines, which have run eleven hours every day for more than a year, have not yet cost us a cent for repairs.

Hoping the above information will be not only a money saver, but a money maker for all other Exhibitors, we are

Sincerely yours,
FOX & KEATING,

Oakland, California, Claims Larges Theatre in West

T. & D. Theatre Besides Its 3600 Seats Has Other Claims to Pre-Emine

THE largest theatre west of Chicago is in Oakland, California, a city whose last census amounts to a quarter of a million population. It has 3611 seats about equally divided between orchestra and balcony and these have proven themselves inaedquate to accommodate the patronage of the East Bay section despite the fact that there is the usual competition at almost every corner within the city limits, as well as nearly fifty neighborhood houses. But Turner & Dahnken, under whose management the house is operated, saw the possibilities of a mammoth modern theatre, installed 100% program including a twenty-five piece orchestra and the experiment has put the scoffers to shame as well as the of the near competitors out of the ning entirely.

Eugene L. Perry, under whose personal ection the house has been made a re-kable success was formerly general ager of the Stanley Company of Phila-ia, and prior to that was connected Messrs Shubert as general Southern sentative. The prices that Mr. has schooled the Oakland theatre-relish, range from 25 cents to A double bill is offered contain-atures on every program, one vaudeville act, a prologue, an concert consisting of 3 or 4 ers and a news weekly. Suffice it to hat the theatre, through gigantic in even for cities boasting of vaster ation, has been proven to be too all to accommodate the crowds that ek admittance.

The estimated cost three years ago slightly exceeded $250,000. It was built for the Moffitt estate, the owners, by Cunningham and Politeo, architects whose main offices are in San Francisco. The theatre is a class A building of solid concrete and steel. The only wood it contains is in the office door. Outside dimensions are 100 ft. by 175 ft. inside dimensions exclusive of stage are 85 ft. by 153 ft. Three wire system used throughout. The floors throughout though concrete are covered with interlocking rubber tiling which absorbs the noise of the countless thousands of feet.

The projection room is in the rear of the orchestra enabling a straight throw to the sheet. Two mirroroid fibre screens are used, one in the stage front when the stage crew is preparing a prologue setting or for a vaudeville act, though the screen used the greater part of the time is sta- ar of the stage. Two are bons and all of the modern equipment and accessories have been provided for. There are also two spot light machines and stereopticon as well as a baby spot stationed in this projecting room. The dimensions of this room are 20 ft. by 9 ft. wide and 12 ft. high. The throw to the rear sheet measures 100 ft. Seventy-five amperes are used with excellent results.

About ninety people are employed at the Oakland T & D Theatre including the orchestra. It really takes this number to operate the house properly. This is especially due to the crowds that they are forced to handle.

The decorations inside are rich but dignified throughout, the color scheme being buff, colonial blue, ivory white and gold.

There is not a step in the entire house, not a stairway, every elevation is approached by a series of ramps or gradual inclines.

Stained glass windows illuminated from the back have been installed recently, one on the left of the stage portraying the woman of ancient times, Joan of Arc, the one on the right showing the woman of modern times, the Red Cross nurse. This idea in itself has gained a world of publicity for Turner & Dahnken, for the patrons recognize the fact that although the installation of these costly effects were superfluous from a box office standpoint, the spirit of progression displayed by that company was rare and most pleasing.

The theatre has an outside frontage of 122 ft. in height, 175 ft. in length with sensible but telling decorations as can be seen from the accompanying photograph. A decided novelty is obtained by ten large steam pots in which are inserted varicolored lamps. At night the effect of steam coming through these ornamental pots or baskets with colored lights showing up onto the floating vapors is a most beautiful one and has caused much comment.

The employees have several sets of uniforms and costumes which are changed weekly for relief to the eyes of the attending multitude.

A point that is valuable to remember in connection with this theatre, is that it was built in a neighborhood that was around the corner from the main thoroughfares and street car lines. The know-it-alls proclaimed Turner & Dahnken most idiotic for the selection of this site for such a large undertaking, especially when theatres were operating on the main corners in Oakland. But as Mr. Dahnken and Mr. Perry figured it out us seating capacity, we can afford to put in the biggest shows a the best attractions obtainable. By suc offerings they will find our around-th corner location and they will make their favorite rendez-vouz." And, i this has happened in Oakland, f T & D Theatre, mammoth as it pecially for a city of the size of Oa has proven itself too small.

Apropos to this statement com news that Mr. Dahnken has just cl deal for a 5,500 seat theatre in San cisco, which, by the way, is "just the corner" from Market St., the thoroughfare. But in closing we that Fred Dahnken knows what he ing, knows how to do it and, ther gets results.

From Talking Machines to Talking Pictures and Now to Exporting

Is the Story of Eugene Kaufmann, Exporter of Accessories

BACK in 1896 or thereabouts when Thomas A. Edison was taking his first fling in motion pictures there came to work for him a young man who was cut out to be a salesman. That man was Eugene Kaufmann, now manager of the Accessory Department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

Soon after going to work for Edison, Kaufmann was sent out through the country as the Electrical Wizard's special representative. He had no definite route to travel. Wherever he was needed or wherever he perceived an opportunity for further sales there he went. And his line, too, was one of considerable variety. He handled the Edison motors, X-ray apparatus, talking machines and other electrical devices. One of the first X-ray equipments to be installed in a hospital was placed in a Southern institution by Mr. Kaufmann.

During those times when he happened to be in East Orange after a trip through the States he was accustomed to spend the days carrying out experiments of his own. Although not originally a skilled mechanic, this constant dabbling in the art finally made one of him. His connection with the industrial life of America was at a time when several important inventions were passing through their periods of improvement. One of these was the talking machine. Naturally, as Kaufmann traveled over the country demonstrating the phonographs he became vitally interested in its possibilities and also realized its drawbacks. The latter he sought to overcome. His periods at the workshop gave him the opportunity to carry out some ideas of his own, and this he did. From out of this work there evolved a number of important improvements which are being used today.

But, as with many other far-seeing men, Kaufmann did not believe that the motion picture with its silent appeal was the ultimate in cinematography. Accordingly, his interest was turned toward the evolution of "talking pictures." What his thoughts were can best be given in his own words:

"When I first realized the possibilities of talking pictures, I made a thorough analysis of the schemes that have been used and those that had failed and I came to the conclusion that the first necessity was a device to insure perfect synchronism between picture and voice. I also realized that such a device must be one that could be understood and operated by the usual operator. Unless these two points were gained there was no use in going ahead further. So I experimented and experimented until finally I hit on an idea that worked.

I took the machine and with two men who had been my helpers during the development of the invention, secured a booking at the Tremont Temple in Boston. There we set up the machine and ran it for two weeks. It worked perfectly all the time. We ran two performances a day and the sound was always exactly in synchronism with the picture.

After that we signed up for a run at several other large theatres between Boston and Chicago, and in every place proved to be the greatest novelty of the times.

But our greatest trouble and the thing that caused me to give up the exhibition of the "talking pictures" was the lack of a library of films and records. Without a constant change of subjects there was no attraction. People would not come more than once or twice to see and hear the same subjects.

When he left the exhibiting game Mr. Kaufmann took up the business of importing. He travelled all through the European countries in order to get a comprehensive view of the people and their customs. This knowledge has stood him in good stead in his present connection.

In 1914, when Paul Cromelin took over the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, he remembered Eugene Kaufman and sent for him to assume charge of the Accessory Department. On account of the latter's intimate contact with the countries with which his firm deal, Mr. Kaufmann is enabled to select goods that will have the greatest appeal to the buyers and users in those countries.

Mr. Kaufman's business creed is one that is built up and made valuable only by sticking close to a policy and that policy is, "Make the customer feel that when he buys something from us it cannot help but be satisfactory." And although he has been installed in his office but a short while the effect of adhering to this policy is already being noticed. The word has gone abroad that the Inter-Ocean Corporation does not agree to handle a device or accessory until it has assured itself that the article will come up to their standard. And Eugene Kaufmann intends that his department in its dealings with "every country in the world" will continue to live up to this reputation.

Big Chicago Theatres Will Have Typhoon Systems

The Typhoon Fan Company of New York and Chicago have recently closed contracts for the entire cooling and ventilating of two of Chicago's largest and most beautiful new theatres—the Panacea and the Stratford. Both of these theatres were designed by Chicago's foremost architect, Walter W. Ahlschlager.

A detailed account of the installation of the Typhoon system in these theatres will be published in this magazine very shortly.

It is not surprising that the Typhoon Company have been able to secure the contracts for cooling and ventilating for these enormous theatres, as during the past few years the Typhoon equipment has been installed in a great many of the largest and finest theatres throughout the country.

The Typhoon Company this year are showing a great deal of activity owing to the fact that ventilation has become one of the most important items in theatre construction.

A new branch office of the Typhoon Company has been opened in Philadelphia, corner Thirteenth and Vine streets, where Jack Brown, a well known and experienced motion picture expert, has been put in charge. Mr. Brown reports that he has already closed in his territory several very important contracts for the Typhoon System, and before the arrival of the hot weather he fully expects to close many of his present prospects.

New Design Gives Low Walls and Steep Roof

Novel Method of Truss Construction Worked Out for Newark Rialto

A NOVEL scheme has been used in the design of the structural steel for the Rialto theatre now under construction at Newark, N. J. This design was worked out because of the unusual width of the theatre and because it was wished to avoid all columns.

As finally erected the system employs a cantilever construction with trusses running diagonally across the corners of the building as the fulcrum. The ends of the cantilever were counterbalanced by the weight of the upper portion of the walls. This served two purposes: first, it shortens to a minimum the spans of any one member of the steel; and second, it takes as much weight as possible off the foundations of the side walls. Just how this is worked out and arranged is clearly shown in the illustrations. The upper view on page 3334 gives an excellent idea of the arrangement of the diagonal trusses and the members leading from fulcrum to side wall.

The designers have also been able by this scheme to reduce the heights of the walls to a minimum and increasing the slope of the roof to a maximum, therefore avoiding any accumulation of weight, such as snow, etc., on the roof, also giving a perfect drainage system to the roof.

The theatre is of the latest type with the rear portion of the auditorium raised to give the effect of a balcony, and which portion is easily accessible from the middle of the auditorium. At no places are the steps higher than 9", and when walking up them one hardly notices that he goes up to a height which at the rear end of the balcony is nearly 16' above the auditorium.

The plastering and decorations and other interior features are novel and unique, especially the ceiling, no portion of which is a straight line, but all in beautiful curves and highly ornamental. The ventilation is of the most modern type; at one end of the building air is blown in through the bottom (mushroom system) while at the other end of the building it is exhausted by means of a series of exhaust fans. There are a number of features in the theatre for the comfort of the patrons which have been incorporated from long experience in the needs of such features in theatres. There is no regular stage provided but the theatre is built so, and provisions have been made that at any time it becomes necessary to have one, it can be built without any unnecessary expense. The setting is all made of ornamental plaster and marble, and is to a certain degree permanent.

The theatre has been designed by Mr. Thos. W. Lamb, and is built by the Jardin Company, Inc., of 507 Fifth Avenue, New York city. The structural features of the theatre have been designed by the contractors, who are also engineers.

Installation of Double Orchestra Turns Theatre from Failure into Success

Bingham and Cohen Inaugurate Idea That Is Now Being Taken Up by Many Houses

ONE of the most interesting stories in the theatrical history of Indianapolis is the story of the Colonial theatre and the almost superhuman efforts of Edmund H. Bingham and Harry E. Cohen, the owners, to "put it over." For 102 weeks these two men held on to a losing proposition until they had plunged so deep that they determined to "hold on to the last," although the "holding on" might mean financial ruin for them.

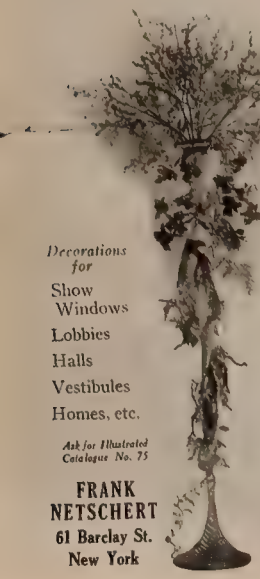
As is characteristic of many businesses, an idea, backed by an intensive advertising campaign, saved them from financial ruin and put the Colonial theatre on a paying basis for the first time since it had been built. And this idea, which was largely responsible for the success of the Colonial, is now winning a reputation for both Bingham and Cohen throughout the United States.

In 1916 these two men took over the Colonial determined to make it a high class theatre. The fact that some nine or ten individuals or firms had been unsuccessful in similar attempts did not deter them, nor did the fact that the house had been dark for more than a year stop them.

Extensive repairs were made and the house thrown open to the public as a vaudeville theatre. And it was then that the start was made on a 102 weeks' losing proposition which nearly ended in financial ruin for both, after almost a good-sized fortune had been spent.

In vain did these two men look for an "audience." But "audiences" could not be found at the Colonial during those times. And so it continued for 102 weeks, until at the end of the one hundred and third week a net profit of 50 cents was made. But that 50 cents looked like a fortune to Ed Bingham and Harry Cohen. They realized, or devoutly hoped, that that was the beginning of what they called "the ray of light." And it proved to be.

Both men had invested every cent they were worth or could borrow. In the words of Mr. Bingham they "couldn't quit because we knew that quitting would mean ruin for us and at the same time would have been an injustice to our friends when even the slightest possible chance remained to make the theatre a success."



One day, while a widely-known band was playing in the theatre, the two showmen conceived the idea that it would be a good plan to have two orchestras, in boxes on opposite sides, so that the music would be continuous. The two showmen saw how restless the audience became when the band that was playing there at that time stopped for an intermission. So the owners decided to obtain two novelty orchestras, men who could not only play every kind of instrument but who could sing as well.

Boxes were torn out on both sides of the theatre and elevated. The walls were attractively decorated and two "singing orchestras" obtained. These orchestras have since been known as the American Harmonists and the Liberty Quintet.

Since that time officials of many of the leading motion picture producing companies have visited the Colonial and commented on the unique arrangement. These men realized that Bingham and Cohen originated the idea which is now being followed by many motion picture theatres over the country..

San Gabriel's Mission Style Theatre

In the little city of San Gabriel, California, situated near Los Angeles, there is a small plaster-finished motion-picture theatre where the residents are entertained three nights a week. The house has a seating capacity of about 300, and is generally well patronized. In a small tile-covered booth nearby are dispensed soft drinks and candies. The San Gabriel theatre is located but a few rods from the historic old Franciscan mission from which the town takes its name and just across from which has been produced for a number of years John S. McGroarty's famous "Mission Play."

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

General Electric Control Devices for Motion Picture Projection

A MOTION picture theatre is a store with just one kind of merchandise to sell A GOOD PICTURE.

The comfortable seats, beautiful decorations and harmonious music are but the show window display to invite the public to buy

It is therefore, reasonable to expect that every theatre manager is interested in any device to improve the quality of this picture, and will listen with interest to any suggestion as to the way and means of obtaining better results in his picture presentation.

The screen, projection machine, film and lamp are all important factors in producing these results, and skilled designers have given their best efforts to perfecting the various devices.

The light source is of prime importance and it is generally agreed that the electric light is the most nearly perfect source of screen illumination and is universally used, wherever available Great progress has recently been made in adapting the incandescent lamp to this service, but so far its application has been limited to the smaller theatres.

For this reason the arc lamp is required in the majority of cases and suitable apparatus is required to assure a satisfactory light under all conditions. The subject of lamp houses, carbons, projection lenses and condensers will not be discussed here, and we shall confine ourselves to the consideration of the various devices for adapting the conveniently available sources of electricity to the particular requirements of the electric arc.

There are two kinds of electric current produced commercially -the direct current and the alternating current. The direct current is usually found in the downtown districts of our larger cities; 110 or 220 volts, 2-wire; 220 volts, 3-wire (or Edison 3-wire, as it is usually called) and 500 volts, 2-wire or 3-wire By Edison or three wire is meant a circuit or 3-wires with, say, 110 volts between the middle (or neutral) and either outside wire and 220 volts between the two outside wires. This may be 550 volts across the outside wires and 250 between the outside and neutral wires

In the case of the alternating current we have not only the various voltages of 110, 220, 440, 500 volts, but in addition the current may be single, two or three phase and 60, 25 or 40 cycles.

These voltages are too high for the operation of the arc lamp which requires only 50 to 60 volts at the arc, and therefore some intermediate device is required to reduce this voltage to the proper value for the operation of the arc lamp. In many cities, however, (and this is particularly true of the outlying districts) direct current is not available, and it is necessary not only to reduce the voltage available to that required by the arc lamp, but in addition it is also necessary to transform the alternating current to direct current, before an arc light can be secured satisfactory for projection purposes.

In the early days of the motion picture when the electric current was first used for the arc lamp, the proper reduction in voltage was secured by using a resistance inserted in the circuit, and either a direct current or alternating current are used, depending on the kind of current available. This method was very wasteful of energy and the alternating current arc was unsatisfactory in operation, being unsteady and of low candlepower. Since alternating current was the only kind available in many cases the first efforts were directed toward reducing the energy losses existing in the rheostat and resulted in the design of the G. E. Compensarc, the first device of its type.

A. C. compensarc

TYPE A COMPENSARC

The Type A compensarc is a transforming device by means of which it is possible to connect an alternating current arc projection machine directly to any alternating current source of supply, and obtain results which are comparable to those of the direct current arc.

This device consists of a transformer core and coils, rigidly supported in a cast iron frame, making a construction which is both substantial and convenient of operation.

EASE OF OPERATION

Four cable leads are brought through the top casting Two of these are connected to the source of supply—the other one to the projection machine. A means of a switch handle projecting through the top casting, variation in the arc current through a considerable range is possible.

At no time in the adjustment of this switch is the current to the lamp interrupted and, therefore, lamp flicker is eliminated.

WILL NOT BURN OUT

The compensarc complies with the standards of the National Board of Fire Underwriters. Because of its design characteristics it cannot

METHOD OF OPERATION

On open circuit this machine generates a voltage of approximately 180 volts. The first arc is struck in the usual manner, the second lamp being short circuited by means of the switch. When ready to change over to the second lamp the carbons are closed together until they touch. The short circuiting switch is then opened and the carbons gradually separated, the machine voltage automatically increasing to take care of the added resistance of the arc maintaining the current practically constant. To shut off the first lamp the carbons are gradually brought together until they touch and the short circuiting switch closed. Machine voltage will automatically decrease as the first lamp carbons are brought together and the current will remain constant.

EQUIPMENTS SUPPLIED

The complete equipment as covered by the catalog number includes the motor generator panel and two short circuiting switches. The steel panels supplied are arranged for conduit wiring and have mounted in the panel a 6″ diameter field rheostat and on the face a 3″ diameter, special scale type DM ammeter. The small panel for 2-35 ampere lamps alternately has an ammeter with a 50-ampere scale the panel for the 50 ampere a 65 ampere scale and the 70 ampere outfits a 100 ampere scale respectively. On the two larger sizes the ammeter is connected to the circuit through a shunt.

With each outfit is supplied two short circuiting switches; one for each lamp. These are single pole knife switches with sheet metal covers all ready to be mounted on the picture machine along with the lamp disconnecting and motor drive switches. They short circuit the arc, that is out so that while one picture is being projected the other lamp is extinguished.

This device is designed with low current densities, and the best grade of steel is used in its construction, insuring minimum loss and high efficiency. Because of these features, the cost of operation is less than that obtained with any other scheme which has been suggested for this purpose.

SIZES FURNISHED

Type A compensares can be built in any size and for operation on supply circuits, of any voltage and frequency. Standard sizes are as follows:

CAT. No. 94312, 2 KVA, 110 volt, 60 cycle, 30-40-60 amperes.

CAT. No. 94313, 2½ KVA, 220 volt, 60 cycle, 30-40-60 amperes.

GENERAL ELECTRIC MOTOR GENERATOR SETS

The development of arc lamps for projection purposes proved that the direct current lamp was steadier and more efficient from a light-giving standpoint. Most of the current available was alternating, so it was necessary to provide some electrical device to not only maintain the proper voltage at the arc, but also to change from alternating to direct current. Furthermore, every theatre of importance installed two projection machines in each booth, so that it was necessary to provide electrical equipment to operate one lamp continuously with reserve capacity to carry two lamps during the period of "change over" in order to prevent interruptions between reels.

To meet all these requirements the General Electric Company designed A. C. to D. C. and D. C. to D. C. Motor Generator Sets consisting of an A. C. or D. C. motor mounted on a sub-base with and connected by a rigid coupling to an especially designed direct current generator.

The design of these outfits is based on certain specific requirements of the electric arc, modified by the limitations imposed by the alternating current supply. Briefly, the results desired are:

(1) A steady arc.
(2) A white light free from discoloration.
(3) Current must stay at set value.
(4) Current at arc easily raised or lowered.
(5) Arc strike and settle down quietly.
   a. The outfit must be as simple as possible.
   b. Must stand overloads without damage.
   c. Must be quiet in operation.
   d. Must successfully operate two arcs at the same time.
   e. Must be easily and quickly repaired in emergency.
   f. Must not be affected by changes in current conditions outside itself.

The General Electric equipment is the very latest development in motor generators for picture projection, and is the result of many years of practical experience in building this particular line of machines.

This new motor generator differs materially from the former type, in that the lamps operate in series instead of in multiple, when changing over or dissolving the pictures. The new type of motor generator has been developed for two reasons: First—to improve the overall efficiency when operating two lamps, and second—to produce a machine which is more easily handled by an inexperienced operator, particularly on two lamp operation.

GENERAL MECHANICAL CONSTRUCTION

These equipments are built in three standard sizes for 35, 50 and 70 amperes, each machine capable of operating two lamps in series for a short period of time. These two lamp outfits are intended for use on two or more picture machines where it is desired to operate two machines for a brief interval, in changing over the picture from one machine to another to give a dissolving effect. There is, however, no objection to putting a greater number of arcs in series so long as only one arc is burned continuously and not more than two lamps are burning at the same time. In this manner the two picture machines and the spot light could be operated from the motor generator with the understanding that only two of them will be used at the same time and the same current is taken by each lamp.

These three standard sizes will meet the requirements of practically all picture theatres, except perhaps the very largest, in which case the other requirements to be met, would doubtless require the use of a special machine. The smallest outfit for 35 ampere arcs, is only suitable for the smaller theatres, as our experience over a number of years shows that the outfit for 2-50 ampere lamps is preferable, even though the requirements at the time the set is sold may be somewhat less than this. A 100-ampere size is not listed, but several have been built and sold with entirely satisfactory results, so that this larger size can be listed if desired.

ELECTRICAL CHARACTERISTICS

These motor generators are built with special generators and standard induction motors. These are mounted on a cast iron subbase and connected by a rigid coupling, forming a three-bearing set. The name plate rating of these sets indicates the drooping characteristics of the generator voltage.

The Uses and Abuses Portable Projectiofon

By Ernest M. Reynolds

THE possibilities of the portable projector prophesied a few years ago are now fast becoming a reality. What is more the field is unlimited and as time and experience progress, new and heretofore unthought of opportunities will present themselves. For the good of the trade and to the public in general, it is time an understanding be reached for the benefit of both. The writer ventures to say there is little in the way of portable and semi-portable motion picture projectors that have not been given considerable thought and study to enable him to determine the advantages and disadvantages of the respective makes.

Naturally they all have the three fundamentals of projection, namely, the mechanism for intermittent and general passage of film; lens system and lastly the light source. The object of this article is to place fairly and squarely before the public the essentials of good portable projection under the multitude of unfavorable conditions which are bound to arise in this type of picture exhibiting. Another point wished to be impressed is the fact that few, if any, portable projectors today are so-called "fool-proof," for it takes thought and some experience to operate one in a proficient manner.

It is best to place these various machines in two classes; the fireproof or slow-burning film users; and the standard guage, inflammable film type. These two distinct classes of machines have their respective advantages. First determine the variety of subjects you wish to exhibit. If for instance it is for straight commercial use with a special made film to exploit a certain article and to be exhibited before audiences of varying sizes, a narrow gauge, fireproof film is recommended. The narrow gauge film suggested takes much less room and for the use mentioned will answer the purpose admirably. It is not inferred that only special subjects can be used on narrow gauge machines for a fair sized library is at disposal already. It is also probably safe in saying that this type of equipment can be set up anywhere in the country and will pass the different fire authorities over the country.

Let us next consider projection of standard size films of the ordinary stock. To the layman this should be a matter of considerable thought. In the first place the fire danger is increased, but to balance this the variety of subjects is increased most tremendously. For the safety of all concerned it is essential that the operator must be right with his machine every second both mind and body. A careful inspection about every minute to insure proper passage of film through machine and that the film take-up device is winding up the film as fast as it is being emitted from the projector is a rule to safety. In general much more care should be used in the operation of this type machine; at the same time the film costs less and is more easily obtained and finally it is a question of whether the operator is willing to use the care.

After selecting the type of machine there arises the question of mechanics. It is hardly necessary to say that there are some machines very poorly constructed from a standpoint of mechanics. By this is meant the general make-up of the mechanism and ways and means of operation. As has been mentioned there is no machine with the label of "Fool-proof," but in making the selection of a projector it is essential to pick one as least complicated as possible yet producing a clean-cut, steady picture. The path in which the film travels from one reel to another in the process of projection, is a feature worth consideration. The tendency is to have the film travel in as straight a line as possible and traveling over as few surfaces as is practical, thus reducing to a minimum the wear and tear on both film and machine. The various optical systems or light sources should be carefully studied. The safest machine is that which produces a bright white light on the screen with as little heat as possible on the film at point of projection.

Probably the most important feature of a clean cut picture lies in the ability of the projection lens. The best lens is none too good in portable projection, therefore a standard lens in an interchangeable mount should be preferred in the equipment. Another important link in the chain of good projection is a good screen. There has been considerable experimenting with screens of various compositions and textures. In portable projection with the audiences viewing the picture at an average of fifteen feet, a plain white opaque surface of a smooth texture is most ardently recommended.

A general summary might well be voiced in requesting the users of portables not to expect too much from this smaller tribe of projectors. They are built small to produce a small picture and up to date a machine that will make a large picture is unsafe for inexperienced hands to operate. A picture five by seven feet or thereabout is really the best one should expect and keep within the bounds of safety. There is absolutely no need of projecting a large picture in a small room or even a room of average size, for after all it is the ratio of the distance your audience is from the picture which controls the size of the screen.

Gentlemen:

We take pleasure in advising you that over 95% of all projectors used in all studios and film laboratories in and around Los Angeles are Powers Cameragraphs.

In almost every case other machines have been carefully tried out with the result that the respective studios have standardized on your projector.

We are subscribing our affidavit certifying the correctness of these several statements. We are also sending under separate cover letters from fifteen of the more important organizations which show beyond question that we have made no extravagant claims for the popularity of the Powers Cameragraph.

With best wishes for continued Powers success, we remain,

Should Have Better Inspectors

J. J. Keough, Williamsport, Pa.:

Here of late I have taken a big interest in your MOTION PICTURE NEWS, especially the part where the fight is to better the conditions of projection and the different suggestions from operators, etc., regarding the improvement on the Simplex Machine. I am myself doping out something which will be the biggest factor to all projectionists if I am successful with it. I would like you to print a letter in your book:

To All Brother Projectionists

To fight against the film exchanges and compel them to employ some one that understands the danger of bad patching, especially making of patches without cleaning off the emulsion—I think it a shame to see some of the work, especially from the exchanges in Philadelphia. I believe they got school children for makers of patches and inspecting the film; there is no use trying to make any improvements on the machine or in the booth as long as the film exchanges continue to make such patches. Also a patch should be made with at least one and one-half hole overlap, not cutting the film 1/32 or 1/16 from the framing line. You cannot expect a piece of thread to hold the same weight as rope. Out of all the exchanges in Philadelphia to only three can I give credit for their good work, Fox, Peerless and Republic Famous Players publish on the front page of your book asking operators to be careful in making patches, etc., but while their exchange sends films with such patches as mentioned, the projectionists can not do all. Of course, I do not want to knock the Famous Players. Their film is in good shape, mostly, only here of late I have found a few patches without the emulsion cleaned off. Not until those troubles are done away with will projection become perfect. Inspectors come into the booth and raise Cain with the operators. The owner of the house must spend all his money doing this and that, yet the film exchanges can send film out any old way and if there is a fire why it was due to a bum operator. Let the exchanges employ licensed operators to patch and inspect their film and have the inspectors watch them as they do the booths and you will not read of so many fires. In a short time if I am successful with my outfit I will give you something to publish which will be one of the biggest improvements ever put in a booth.

Reports New Daylight Screen

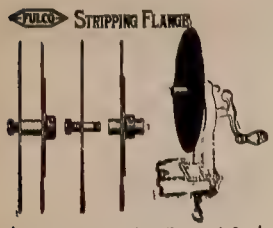
When Robert Andersen of the Universal Company recently returned from his vacation abroad, he brought with him the story of a new German invention which, if developed, may revolutionize the film industry.

By means of the discovery of a new compound which absorbs light, German cinema scientists now assert they can show photoplays in broad daylight. The Germans use their new compound in making moving picture screens.

The first broad attempt to capitalize the new discovery is in the formation of a company to install miniature moving picture machines in private homes. German families, it is promised, will soon be able to see the latest features while eating dinner or pursuing other household activities. The home movie machine will take its place beside the piano and the phonograph.

As an adjunct of the new company's activities, it is planned that the new home machine will be a combination projection machine and camera. Events in the home can then be photographed for future generations. The greatest good of this novel project, it is said, will be the doing away with the family album

The new screen compound is called Petragaggan. It is cast in big flexible sheets and looks something like leather. Its make-up is zealously guarded as a secret. It also is expected to supplant present day billboards, its makers say, since it can show moving pictures on the housetops in day light.



Andersen has returned to Universal City carrying with him a long term contract to direct pictures as well as to act in them. He is now at work on his first production, which he says will bristle with new ideas in directorial art. His ultimate object is to produce a picture with no subtitles.

Wants 110 Volt Mazda

We are operating with a Mazda equipment on a Simplex machine. Our screen is 9′ x 12′ and the throw is 64 feet. We have a private 32-volt plant that supplies us with current. We are having a good success with our equipment and consider it far superior to the arc light for our work.

In addition to our private plant we now have 115 volt A. C. in our theatre. We should like to be able to connect up to the 115-volt line in case our private plant broke down or connect to it in case we find it cheaper than the private plant. The Westinghouse Lamp Co. are putting out a 1,000 watt, 110 to 125 volt lamp which corresponds with the 30 volt lamp we are now using. Would this lamp give us satisfaction?

Also what is the cost of an automatic regulator suitable for our needs and where can we write to get information concerning them?

Reply: There is no reason why you should not get excellent results with the Mazda equipment, as all the factors are in your favor. A 9 x 12 picture is about the limit for the Mazda under the present stage of development.

Probably the best way to connect up the a. c. 115 volt service for use as an emergency is by means of one of the automatic regulators being manufactured. These regulators are a combination transformer and regulator and when once set and adjusted should maintain the voltage at exactly 30.

We understand that the lamp companies are experimenting on a 110 volt projection lamp, but that it has not been placed on the market. There is a 110 volt stereopticon lamp that has been used to a certain extent in projection work but it is rather doubtful if you could use it. Better get a device that you can use with a regulator at 30 volts. You will get better results.

We cannot quote costs on the regulators. Write to the Rutledge Co., 35 So. Dearborn St., Chicago, and to the Argus Lamp and Appliance Co., Cleveland, Ohio.

Has Double Dissolving Device for Sale

A few weeks ago we published a letter from R. V. Plew, in which he asked for the name of a manufacturer making a double dissolving device. We have received a statement from Mr. D. E. Kepler of the Arc Amusement Co., of Crawfordsville, Indiana, to the effect that he makes a device for this purpose. Will Plew and any others interested get in touch with this man?

A 1920 Model Automaticket Register

JUST as the best and best known automobiles are "first" in adding improvements to their models each year, so the automatic ticket selling and cash register company, constantly improves the automaticket register.

Exhibitors demand one thing above all others of a ticket selling mahine, and that is that it should give consistent day-in and day-out service and not get out of order.

Realizing this, the automatic ticket selling and cash register company subjects its models to a five-year continual running test by operating a machine continually day and night by electricity, which, of course ,is a much harder test than daily usage in a motion picture theatre box office.

The Company does not simply claim that their machine will stand every working test, they actually put their model to a harder working test in their factory than it meets in five years of service in a theatre box office.

Automaticket Register users are satisfied users, because the device not only gives them all the advantages that its makers claim it will in the way of rapid ticket selling service and cash protection, but because it also makes good in every way on the claims that the company makes on the service the machine will give.

White Light for Motion Picture Photography*

By Wm. Roy Mott, Rersearch Laboratory, National Carbon Company

The moving picture industry is the only industry dominated geographically by the question of light. While in ordinary artificial lighting 5 and 10 foot-candles is good illumination, yet on the moving picture stage at least a hundred times this should be used. This means a stage illumination of 500 to 1000 foot-candles as a minimum.

II Daylight

The larger the number of days of good clear sunshine, the lower is the cost of motion picture production, because of the saving of time of high salaried artists. But little has been done as yet to use artificial light in conjunction with outdoor scenes for which daylight is ideal except for the interruption of the photography by dark, cloudy days. (In England some use of the arc lamps has even been made for outdoor scenes) even on consecutive clear days there may be a large variation in actinic light as shown in Fig. 2 (see page 128, Sheppard's Photo-Chemistry).

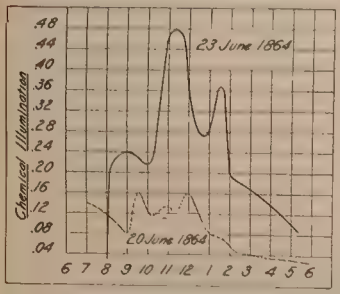

Fig. 2—Daily Variation of Photographic Light with Daylight

For interior scenes daylight must be diffused to avoid outdoor appearances caused by direct shadows from the sunlight. This diffusion is secured by using prism glass in the roof and sides of the studios. If the studio work for interior scenes is done outdoors then awnings of light sheeting or muslin are used to secure proper diffusion and this is sometimes done in studios with glass roofs especially if clear glass has been used. A serious objection to daylight in such studios is the hot-house effect, especially in summer. As these glass houses receive continuously one to two horse power of solar energy per square yard of projected area normal to the light, the heating effect is many times greater than with good artificial light alone, because the full amount of artificial light is used intermittently and seldom for more than a total of an hour a day. The artificial light (used generally for side illumination) with daylight should be given by the light of the greatest photographic power in proportion to the energy liberated in the studio.

For this reason flame arcs are commonly used with daylight. In the winter daylight is rather poor after penetrating the glass and screening and so dependence is then largely placed on the artificial light. This seasonal variation and hourly variation of sunlight and skylight is shown in Fig. 3 taken from Eber's Handbuch der Photographie. Again the changing direction of sunlight has been a serious objection and the studio, known as the Black Maria, of the Edison Company was arranged on wheels so that it could be moved to face the light.

Finally there is one class of interior scenes for which daylight in any form is

MARTIN JOHNSON

Sydney, N. S. W. Australia.

November 9th, 1919.

Universal Camera Company,
J Burke and James,
240 Ontario Street,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sirs:-

On account of the nasty letter I wrote you just before I left for the New Hebrides, seven months ago, I thought you would be glad to know that both Universals stood up great, we spent six months among the head hunters and cannibals of Malekula, and used only the two Universals.

I have just finished printing the positives, and without a doubt they are the finest films I have ever made--in fact there is not a foot of poor film among the twenty-five thousand feet.

The old camera that I used down here two years ago stood up as well as the new one, and outside of scars and scratches caused by long expeditions through the jungles and over mountains, it is as good as new--in fact, it's like an old shoe, it is like a part of me, and I will always use it in preference to any other.

Will send you some photographs on the next steamer.

Sincerely yours
Martin Johnson

You may use this letter or any part in advertising, my next feature that will be released in about six months will creat a sensation, it is the most wonderful film of exploration that has ever been made, and the photography is perfect--it was all made on the two Universals.

It will probably be called WILD MEN OF MALEKULA.

'Shooting' the wild men with a UNIVERSAL

IN a climate of intense heat, averaging 130 degrees, traveling in whale boats and through trackless forests, Martin Johnson, the noted explorer, carried the Universal Camera to which he refers in this letter.

With this camera he made 25,000 feet of perfect film, and it came through this endurance test as sound and perfect as the day it left our factory.

When you see Johnson's wonderful pictures of the savage South Sea Islanders, you will have demonstrated to you the kind of film the Universal makes. This is the camera used exclusively by explorers, travelers, the United States Army and educational film makers.

Write for illustrated booklet on the Universal. It tells why the Universal will one day be your camera.

entirely unsatisfactory. This is in night scenes where sharp shadows and brightly illuminated parts must come in the same picture. Again all motion picture work in actual interiors such as subways, mines, caves, hotels, theatres, churches, etc., must be done with artificial light. And of these the closest to daylight photographically is the light of the white flame high amperage arc lamps which will next be considered.

III White Light from the Flame Arc

3-A Spectrum.

The white flame high amperage arc gives a light which is remarkably close to daylight in both color and photographic values. Like daylight the spectrum is not entirely continuous, but the effect of being practically continuous is obtained by the enormous number of light giving lines in every part of the spectrum, including the ultra violet which with the white flame arc is very similar to that given by sunlight.

In Fig. 5 is shown in the outer parts of the spectrum of a white flame arc (25 amperes) in the region photographically important for the common materials. The pure carbon arc for the same region is shown by the middle spectrum which has marked gaps between the cyanogen bands (the cyanogen bands are due to the reaction of carbon and nitrogen at high temperatures). This duplication of daylight is so good and the intensity of light is so great that this light is being used by large clothing concerns as a reliable substitute for daylight in making dye fading tests. In fifty hours of testing with the flame arc, dyes are faded to the same degree as by about three weeks of ordinary daylight in June in Cleveland. The white flame arc is also used for color matching.

3 B Psychological Value of Color of Light

It is a part of the highest management of motion picture producers to give actors and actresses a background of reality and not of ghastly unreality. "The living interpreter must have the living scene to do his best." And so it is now recognized by motion picture producers that pleasant scenes need pleasant light in order to get the best out of the artists, as witness the use of music. White light is the best for ordinary drama and comedy. A blue or blue green light is especially good for very sad scenes, such as death-bed scenes. Mr. Edward L. Simons, (Trans. I. E. S. 6, p. 295, Jan., 1911), at a time even before the use of flame arcs, pointed out the effect of blue green light on the actors by saying, "but without the arc lamp, it would be pretty hard to go through a real love scene, because everybody would look sick." Hence the value of the red content of the white light is of great importance to motion picture productions (although photographically of no value for ordinary purposes), it is of value in giving the artists a suitable environment for their best artistic expression. Much of the modern film is sensitized to long wave lengths and then the red and yellow light are important.

3-C—Relation of Color to "Make-Up" and Film Sensitiveness.

In make-up the motion picture artist soon learns that red will photograph black because the ordinary film is not sensitive to red light. For this reason the make-up of a moving picture artist should not have rouge on the cheeks (and it is best to avoid having gold-filled teeth). On the other hand an excessive amount of white clothing should be avoided as this may give rise to halation which results in a blur. Hence yellow, gray and other colors of clothes are used. This halation needs to be watched carefully with the lights having low latitude on the photographic plates. It is interesting to note that the light of the white flame arc shows a very wide latitude on films. This means the picture will show parts highly lighted and dimly lighted with clear definition.

In regard to film sensitiveness the ordinary motion picture film has a maximum sensitiveness in the violet with considerable sensitiveness in the blue and ultra violet and much less in the green and yellow and no sensitiveness in the red. Some motion picture laboratories are making orthochromatic films fairly sensitive to yellow light. For pamchromatic photography and color photography, of course, all parts of the light are used. Because of the use of yellow screen with these, special flame carbons can be used not only to give more light, but such light that a screen of better transparency can be used. This, of course, is very important because color photography film calls for a great deal more light for motion picture work than ordinary films. For motion picture production the yellow flame carbons with special screen have been found very good. Calcium fluoride is used and gives a spectrum rich in red and green bands with very little spectrum yellow.

This interesting and valuable paper on "White Light for Motion Picture Photography," is but one of the features that are to appear in the Equipment Section of Motion Picture News. It will pay you to watch for them.

Here With Colored Raw Stock

Mr. Leopold Sutton, special representative of the Gevaert Co., of Antwerp, has arrived in this country to demonstrate the products of his firm. Raw stock containing the desired tint is one of the specialties of this concern and it is Mr. Sutton's intention to give practical demonstrations of the possibilities of this film. Mr. Sutton is accompanied by an expert chemist from the Belgium factory.

Screen Intensities Analyzed

Mr. L. H. Porter, chairman of the committee on papers, of the S. M. P. E., announces a forthcoming paper on the subject of "Tests of Screen Illumination from Motion Picture Projectors" by W. F. Little, of the Electrical Testing Laboratories, New York.

Some of the points touched upon by the paper are: the light intensity of the screen by measurements taken at 16 different points representing 16 equal areas on the screen surface.

The measurement of light intensities taken at a larger number of test locations, each test location representing a small area. This method makes possible the comparison of brightness changes throughout the field.

A verification of both methods by a single measurement.

A verification of the light flux upon the screen, using the one-point method and standard lamps of known light output. Measurements showing the reproducibility of this method.

New Lighting Effect

The patrons of the Criterion theatre were treated to one of the most surprising events that has so far been shown in the way of lighting effects by Mr. Huff, Chief Protectionist and Electrician for that theatre. It is the most radical step taken by anyone here before and exceeds any of his past endeavors. There appears to be a kind of a "halo" back behind the picture screen or between the audience and the screen, which is of a very peculiar tinge or color and is one of the most wonderful effects that I have ever beheld in a picture house here—it gives wonderful depth to the picture and is pleasing and restful to the eye. The auditorium of the theatre is lighted by a light-brownish hue absolutely strange to the picture houses of Atlanta.

In the different houses here they have stage lighting effects, once in a while but this is out of the ordinary.

New F 1.9 Lens Gives Satisfaction

News Weekly cameramen will be interested in the good reports concerning the performance of the newly designed Minor 50 m.m. F 1.9 objective. By casting aside many of the old formulae for high speed lenses and working more from the basis of the telephot objective the manufacturers of the F 1.9 have evolved a workable lens that gains speed without the sacrifice of other essentials.

Those who have been fortunate enough to secure one of these Minor lenses report that the lens has been so well corrected for the various aberrations, curvature of field and coma that at the greatest aperture the definition is not impaired even on the outside margins. The depth secured is remarkable considering the speed obtained.

An Easy and Effective Way of Increasing the Durability of Motion Picture Film

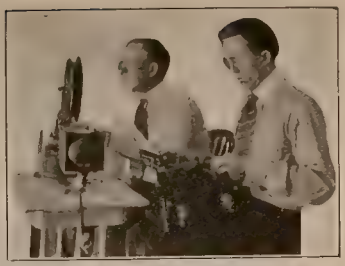
A Communication From the Research Department of the Eastman Kodak Company

THE difficulty sometimes experienced in projecting new film, frequently resulting in unsteadiness and premature breakdown, may be largely avoided by the application of a thin coating of wax along the perforations. Machines that do this work rapidly and inexpensively are available at small cost.

In the making of the light sensitive emulsion of motion picture film one of the chief ingredients is gelatine, a glutinous substance which readily absorbs from and gives off moisture to the air. In freshly developed film, the gelatine contains a considerably higher percentage of moisture than seasoned film, and when in this condition is easily affected by heat, tending to render it soft and tacky, particularly in moist atmosphere.

As used in motion picure fim, th first point at which the gelatine comes in contact with unusual temperature is at the aperture gate of the projection machine, where the light from the arc is concentrated, producing heat to a degree which softens the gelatine and causes it to collect on the tension springs or shoes where it rapidly dries and forms a flint lick deposit

As the film passes through the projector, the hardened deposit of gelatine continues to accumulate and offer further resistance which produces deep scratches along the perforations, with added possibility as the resistance increases, of the teeth of the intermittent sprocket tearing and damaging the perforations, sometimes to an extent where injury to the print is irreparable.



Careful waxing produces, under the action of heat, a smooth and polished surface on the gelatine along the perforations; provides against the liability of strain in the first projection of new prints; materially benefits successive runs, and greatly prolongs the commercial life of the prints.

In view of the benefits to be derived, and of the comparative simplicity with which waxing can be accomplished, the advisability of its use will be readily understood.

New Method of Title Making

After many months of experimentation Ernest Stern reports the perfection of a new method of making titles. Any type face may be used with the certainty of obtaining negatives as perfect as desired. Illustrated backgrounds may also be used in conjunction with the lettering.

Among samples recently received from Mr. Stern is a direct positive illustrated title which he claims as a new accomplishment. He says: "This latter is intended for foreign titles and will allow you to present your foreign prints with the same dignified titles as are used in the American copies and does away with the cost of a negative."

Newman Catalog Out

The Newman Manufacturing Co., has recently issued a catalog describing and illustrating their extensive line of motion picture theatre supplies and equipment. The catalogue consists of over 60 pages well printed and arranged. After looking through the pages the reader is astonished at the completeness of the stock and is made to realize that the modern theatre supply house can in reality "equip the theatre from sidewalk to screen and from basement to roof." Nothing would be gained by enumerating the articles displayed. It is sufficient to say that if a manager wishes anything at all for his theatre he can get it at Newmans.

Cue Sheets Latest Hits — Music — Musical Equipment

Foreign Music in America

THE motion picture theatre of today can justly be considered the greatest competitor to the legitimate stage. Developments in the past five years, have in an indisputable manner proven that music plays a great part in developing the art of exhibiting pictures. In fact, music is indispensable. A modern motion picture theatre requires the employment of an extensive music library of variety, unequaled in any other enterprise where music is considered a necessity.

The question now arises, have we enough music in America. In 1872 when the American music publishing business was in its infancy, foreign music played an important part in music centers. But, today, America can boast of such famous standard orchestra Catalogs as that of Carl Fischer, G. Schirmer, Belwin, Inc., Walter Jacobs, Sam Fox, Oliver Ditson, Boston Music Co., Cundy Bettony, M. Witmark and many others. The editions of these American publishers combined, represent the greatest variety of practical musical literature obtainable in any part of the world. Practical musical literature, that's what America possesses. We may not be first in quantity, but we can boast of practical quality.

Most foreign publications are bulky, symphony orchestrations, without any piano accompaniment parts, or they are of the typical salon orchestra type for strings, with flute and clarinet, and in very few instances, for piano. In spite of all this, we can still find a great many musicians hunting for foreign publications. I have seen, as many as ten or twelve foreign publications mentioned on a musical cue sheet. Why all this waste of energy. I don't intend to criticize these music cues from the standpoint of their musical value but I do say that they are impractical. There are very few music houses in America handling foreign music, in sufficient quantities to supply the demands of musicians receiving such music cues which in every instance cause unnecessary delays and inconveniences, because, firstly, foreign publications are too excessive in price and secondly, are in most instances, not obtainable.

Why not resort solely to American music? To my knowledge there can be no scene portrayed on the screen which can not be appropriately accompanied by music published in America. By American compositions I don't mean compositions written solely by American composers. I mean works written by such men as Liszt, Shubert, Massenet, Grieg, Korsakoff, Tschaikowsky, Paderewsky, Wagner, Strauss and thousands of others. The works by the above mentioned gentlemen are world known and represent the acme of musical perfection from every angle. Nevertheless, I earnestly suggest that musicians in America don't use the foreign publications by the above masters. But, I do suggest that they only use such compositions which have been republished in America and have been rearranged and condensed with the point in view to serve American orchestra combinations.

I'm not making the above suggestions because I'm an American fanatic, considering that everything "made in U. S. A." is the best, but because I have been governed by common sense, and am trying to advocate the policy which is most useful and practical for American musicians.

THE EDITOR.

"Let's go to a Show where there is Good Music"

How often one hears this remark. Good pictures are taken for granted—but good music attracts the crowd. The country's leading Motion Picture Houses have installed

THE ESTEY THEATRE ORGAN

Because—The Estey will render the most delicate incidental music or great dramatic crescendos with equal effect. The Estey almost exactly duplicates the music of a full orchestra—but its operator only draws one salary.

The Estey isn't temperamental—it won't go on strike—and the Estey Service Guarantee insures its upkeep and maintenance.

An Estey will pay itself in no time in increased box office receipts—and many times over in prestige and popularity.

We can build an Estey—large or small—in your theatre—at a price you are justified in paying. A word today will bring an Estey expert to study your needs—give a quotation—and take you to a nearby theatre where an Estey is now making good.

Here It Is Again

C. H. SPEARMAN, EDMUND, OKLA.:

You will find herein, application blank filled out for admittance into the N. A. M. L. For some time I have been a member in spirit but that didn't produce the stickers, also, the do-it-as-others-do-it germ began working and as a result, this letter.

I have taken the NEWS for over a year and I don't see how any up-to-date projectionist or manager can stay up-to-date without it.

Don't you think some common sense judgment should be used in our "Small Town" vs "City Man" debate? Our fellow projectionist, Mr. Stone of Huron, Ohio, through his statements in the February 14th number of the NEWS, showed partiality and his ability for imaginative story writing, but as to facts, he was somewhat short.

The Small Towners or any other set of nonde-gumps, who allow conditions to exist as described by Mr. Stone (in all due respect to him) are just as negligent in getting film. The manager of such a place usually gets pictures as old as his machine. If we get anything under one year old it hasn't as yet reached the "supposed-to-be-operator" and his thresher.

The fact is, that practically new film shows sign of punch marks and rough usage. Sould it be that some "city man" on account of his theatre using vaudeville as a specialty and pictures as a "fill in," has to hurry his film through, so that the vaudeville may start on time. Might it not be that some are so heavily laden with "Spot Light" cues and the like that they haven't time to properly fix the projectionist's cues in their minds and resort to more harsh means? Let's hope not, but yet the "Small Town" man has time to get his cues down pat and a manager who has no acrobats, freaks, magicians or toe dancers to rush the "side line" so that the matinee will be over in time for dinner or supper according to the locality or for the set time that the vaudeville begins.

We fellows who show courtesy to the film should call off our forces from one another and sick 'em on the managers and oil squirters who really do the punching and splitting, be he Jay or Dude from the "Small Town" or "Big Town."

Reply:—First run film has oftener been found to be well punch-marked, thus there is no reason to blame all the trouble on the man in the small town who never sees film that is less than ten days old. In fact the seat of the trouble is the operator who has no interest in his work nor any feelings for the projectionist who must run the [illegible] after him. This type [illegible] often found [illegible]

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Kissed in a Harem"

(Gayety Comedy—One Reel)

A LIGHT comedy which goes merrily on its way because it is built upon an amusing idea is "Kissed in a Harem," the latest release from the Gayety camp. Permit a man to run foul of a sheik and to escape his anger, disguise himself as a member of the Harem Chorus, and you have the basis of a workable comedy. Here one finds Billy Fletcher, the chief funmaker, in bad with Omar Cayenne for flirting with his beautiful wives. Of course the wily Turk is duly insulted and gives chase. But what does Billy do? Why, he dresses as a woman and joins the wives of the visitor from Salt Lake City. (Harem is the correct word when traveling in Turkey with a flock of women.) It happens that Omar and the figure from Utah meet in the upper chambers, and both are so taken up with each other's wives that they indulge in a free for all trade. Thus Billy finds himself in Omar's room again. And he registers coyness by refusing to take off his veil. This so excites the Turk that he chases the other wives out and makes our comedian his favorite. When he finally recognizes Billy, he is hanging over the edge of a skyscraper. Quite an idea for a one reeler and worked out with plenty of humor by Craig Hutchinson.—Laurence Reid

Mutt and Jeff Comedies

(Two One Reelers—Fox)

MUTT and Jeff continue to go through their usual antics in the two forthcoming Fox releases, "The Price of a Good Sneeze" and "The Chemist." The former excels. It presents our two friends as the proprietors of a ladies' aesthetic dancing class. Jeff does the teaching and Mutt entertains the pupils. The little fellow draws forth a lot of laughs in this "Isadora Duncan" act, and as he is only drawn with a pen, the censors won't object to his abbreviated "nature costume." The reel ends when Jeff's wife comes to take a lesson and learns her husband's occupation.

"The Chemist" is not so original. Jeff drinks a concoction which gives him unusual strength and proceeds to beat up Mutt for the remainder of the reel. However bits of the super-exaggerated action presents some good laughing matter. MATTHEW TAYLOR

"The Song of the Paddle"

(One Reel Bruce Scenic—Released by Educational)

WHILE there is quite a sameness to this offering being a trip in a canoe down a Canadian river from near it's source where the [illegible] and shallow to it's mouth, yet quite a variety of scenic background is provided and there is also an element of human interest in the two men and their canoe as it runs rapids and dances here and there on the swift moving water threatening to dump it's occupants in the river many times.

The reel has been nicely tinted, and one scene is never held long enough to become tiresome. We call the offering quite a bit above the average scenic release.—J. S. DICKERSON

"Such Is Life 'Mong Dogs"

(Hy Mayer Travelaugh)

HY MAYER'S entry to the ranks of producers has not been heralded with the usual blare of trumpet when such events take place but the product which he is sponsoring, a combination of cartoon, news weekly, scenic and educational subjects, are clever, highly original and interesting releases entitled to recognition and praise.

This reel is especially good. It takes a lot of dogs for it's base idea, and then Mayer draws cartoons of various types of the so-called human race which when they fade out on the screen to pictures of the canines have a striking resemblance to the "purps."

The titles used are excellent. There is, of course, no plot, nor any attempt to connect the various strips together into a story. For that reason a "review" is absolutely impossible. Take our word for it, the series so far has been good.—J. S. DICKERSON

Three Christie Comedies

("Pants and Petticoats"—"Eta-Bite-A-Pie"—"Going, Going, Gone")

BOBBY VERNON is the star in a two reel Christie Special reviewed under the title of "Petticoats and Pants". The story of this offering concerns a college cut-up who is sent down on the farm in the hope that he will mend his ways. Here he meets, along with two pals, a couple of chorus girls who take him for a "rube." Later Bobby still posing as a sod buster invades the shop where the show dames are working and manages to create a surprising amount of disturbance. The comedy starts off rather well but soon degenerates into a lot of chase stuff, interspersed with views of the Christie bathing girls doing a dancing act in the cabaret with not many real laughs apparent, although it will undoubtedly hold the interest of those who enjoy slap stick and is not offensive or suggestive at any time. Bobby Vernon plays his role with characteristic pep and succeeds as well as the rather pointless business provided for him will allow. The picture is elaborate for a comedy, the attention to detail being very commendable.

"Eta-Bite-A-Pie" is a one reel Christie with Vernon in the leading role. In the ladder [illegible] bid for the hand of a damsel who has a pa[illegible] cut who objects to suitors for his daughter's hand. Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to November 29, 1919.

"Dr. Jeykll and Mr. Hyde"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Screen Acting in Its Highest Form Presented Here

AN assertion often made that the masterpieces of fiction are unsuited for motion picture purposes is disproved once again. A body blow to this fallacy is the filmization of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," starring John Barrymore. As long as the works of this author and other great writers of the past remain to be drawn upon there is no reason why producers should depend entirely on the sterile living when the fertile dead are at hand. Stevenson's wonderful story of dual personality, in which he brings out that every soul has its good and evil nature, is given wonderful vitality here—thanks to painstaking direction and the truly inspired acting of John Barrymore.

There is no reason to go into detail concerning the story, since most every one is familiar with it. Suffice to say that Dr. Jekyll, a scientist, experiments with the two forces in his nature and transforms himself from a benevolent figure into the most depraved wretch imaginable. And vice versa. His evil side triumphs, bringing with it the inexorable climax of death. It is the consummate skill of the star which lifts this picture above any thought of theme or construction. The spectator is conscious when the title is flashed that the depraved Hyde will triumph over the benevolent Jekyll. But how? That remains for Mr. Barrymore.

His portrayal is fairly Titanic in its dominance and force, in its shadings and contrasts. It is a rare work of art in its variety of emotional and psychological detail. We say without fear of contradiction that his is one of the greatest performances of a dual personality ever shown on the screen. He makes the terrible Hyde so repellant that it is positively fascinating. By means of clever "dissolves" this awful character seemingly merges from the soul of the goodly Jeykll.

When all is said and done this is Mr. Barrymore's picture despite the fact that Mr. Robertson's composition is masterly in breadth and outline and rich in effective details. The original story has been enlarged upon to supply a note of romance. Which is necessary to soften the harrowing depiction of Hyde. All the roles are well acted, but the star's work so far overshadows the others that it appears like inspiration compared with mere earnest enthusiasm.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Robert Louis Stevenson's powerful story of dual identity, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," has reached the screen and according to reports will earn a niche in the film hall of fame. John Barrymore, considered by many the greatest living actor on the American stage, has been entrusted with the interpretation of the memorable character, and gives to the screen one of his greatest performances. The play has aroused intense discussion. Were the author alive he would be immensely gratified in the humanization of the strange and fascinating story. As many readers are doubtless familiar with the tale it would be repetitious to go into detail, but suffice to say for the benefit of the younger picturegoers that it concerns a physician, who by the aid of a compound he has discovered, is able to transform himself at will into the character of a depraved murderous wretch who, when his drug fails him slays himself.

The story has created a profound impression in the literary world and did much to establish a vogue for the author and make his fame world-wide. For the purposes of giving the story a balance the element of romance figures conspicuously and this feature is excellently commingled with the dramatic situations. Mr. Barrymore's portrayal of the physician will linger in the memory as one of the most outstanding character studies of all time. Others who acquit themselves creditably are Martha Mansfield, Brandon Hurst, Cecil Clovelly and George Stevens. John Robertson, the director, has given the story a wonderful atmosphere aside from emphasizing its powerful dramatic strokes.

PROGRAM READER

You have all heard about Robert Louis Stevenson's powerful story even though you may be unfamiliar with it in book form or as a play. The chance is yours to see the acting treat of the season when John Barrymore comes to the ———— theatre next ———— in the role of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. For the benefit of those who are unacquainted with this memorable story of Stevenson's allow us to say that it concerns a physician who transforms himself into a wretch of the lowest form of depravity when the mood strikes him. He leads a dual existence. And those who know Dr. Jekyll would not know him as Mr. Hyde. Mr. Barrymore gives to the screen one of its greatest performances—one that will linger in the memory. The picture is a dramatic treat if only from the standpoint of acting. But it is blessed with more than that. It carries a plot of tense situations which are softened by scenes of fascinating romance. Don't miss this Paramount-Artcraft picture. It will hold you spellbound.

CATCH LINES

He wanted to yield to all that appeals to flesh but leave his soul untouched. See John Barrymore in his greatest triumph, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," a screen version of Robert Louis Stevenson's powerful story and play.

"SEX"
(J. Parker Read-Hodkinson)

Powerful Theme, Clever Acting and Rich Production

THE cry that is going up "What's become of the original scenario writer?"- can be silenced when C. Gardner Sullivan sits down and writes such a powerful story as "Sex." Those producers who have been loud in their assertions that the photoplaywright has faltered in his ability to turn out clever screen material should go and look Mr. Sullivan's product over. They will come away convinced that an able scenario writer is a pretty handy fellow to have around a studio, especially when "favorite authors" grow stale. "Sex" has everything that constitutes a good picture. With its powerful theme, its volume of truth, its sound moral, its well-drawn characterization expressed through clever acting, its perfect continuity presenting a line of action that is as sure as the tide, and its lavish production with every scene in harmony the subject should merit (and will if we're not mistaken) the highest praise.

Mr. Sullivan exposes a new twist of the eternal triangle and one that is true to life. It is remarkably simple, which is perhaps the reason that makes it appear so genuine. Using the idea of a chorus girl's philosophy "to get all there is out of life," even though it may involve the separation of a man and his wife, he brings home that her doctrine is false to the core. For a time comes when she is placed in the identical situation of the sorrowful wife and made to suffer likewise.

And Fred Niblo's direction is in perfect keeping with the story. There is a reason for every scene. Naturally, not a bit of padding is visible. The incidents flow from the situations spontaneously and build to the only conclusion possible. The picture has been mounted with lavish expenditure, a fact noticeable in the roof garden scenes and those that constitute the mad orgy in the actress's home. Certain details here are overdone and not entirely in good taste. But spectacular as the picture is, the powerful dramatic strokes are what make it effective. Miss Glaum, having such a clever vehicle, is able to show her emotional capabilities in their fullest development. A well rounded cast renders perfect support. Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Adrienne Renault ..... Louise Glaum
Philip Overman ..... William Conklin
Mrs. Overman ..... Myrtle Stedman
Dave Wallace ..... Irving Cummings
Daisy Henderson ..... Peggy Pearce

By C. Gardner Sullivan.
Directed by Fred Niblo.
Supervised by J. Parker Read.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

An interesting theme is exposed in Louise Glaum's latest J. Parker Read production, "Sex," which will appear at the ———— beginning ————. Presenting as it does the idea that it isn't profitable to trifle with a woman's affection for her husband else it may act as a boomerang with the party who is attempting the intrigue, C. Gardner Sullivan, acknowledged by many to be the best scenario writer in the business, has concocted a story the strength of which cannot be denied. He has used the eternal triangle in a new way, bringing out in the telling not only an absorbing drama but a sound moral. Undoubtedly the offering is the best thing that the star has ever had and she rises to the occasion by giving a portrayal marked for its emotional depth.

Miss Glaum plays the part of a chorus girl whose philosophy is to get all that there is out of life even though it may involve the breaking up of homes. Adrienne has lured Philip Overman away from his wife and when the latter remonstrates the chorus girl presents her selfish attitudes. There comes a time when the pleasure-loving girl falls in love and casting Overman aside she marries Dave Wallace, a Pittsburg millionaire. They live happily together for two years and then she finds that her husband finds more pleasure in the company with her successor in the chorus, a girl whom she had tutored in the same philosophy. The latter tells her that she has no right to question her conduct. The realization comes home to Adrienne that her idea is wrong. And so she suffers in silence. The picture builds with scenes of absorbing interest and is staged in a true and lavish manner. Director Fred Niblo has emphasized the dramatic scenes with a keen sense of their value. Miss Glaum's support is most praiseworthy.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ———— takes great pleasure in announcing that J. Parker Read's production, "Sex," will be the feature attraction at the ———— next ———— with the emotional actress, Louise Glaum, as the star. This is a picture written by the gifted C. Gardner Sullivan and of the abundance of stories which he has sponsored "Sex" may be said to outclass them all in its dramatic elements and the strength of its moral. The author has looked at life and painted it truthfully, and the director, picking up the finished manuscript has staged it realistically. In fact, Mr. Niblo has brought out its scintillating high lights with remarkable dramatic insight. The picture is undoubtedly the finest offering in which the star has ever appeared and it permits her to display her emotional capabilities. The management feels sure that the patrons will vote "Sex" one of the most entertaining pictures that has ever played the ————. Miss Glaum's assistants in the cast are perfect in their respective portrayals.

"JACK STRAW"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Obvious Light Comedy Has Amusing Moments

HERE is an exceptionally thin but quite often amusing light comedy, this screen version of W. Somerset Maugham's whimsical play of the same name. Skilled as he is at writing dialogue and investing his subjects with clever situations and climaxes, it behooves one to ask if he might not have lacked inspiration when conceiving "Jack Straw." If the original was a gem of its kind than the adaptation is proof again that physical action and subtitles cannot take the place of pointed dialogue.

But obviousness aside and the fact that it is hopelessly old-fashioned, the picture furnishes a fair quota of interesting moments. William De Mille is clever enough director to have seen to that. It is the "business" which he has injected which keeps it going and overcomes the weakness of the plot. It is a slight thing at best, presenting the ancient formula of an Archduke (a change from a Prince or a Count) traveling incognito in America and assuming the disguise of an ice-man to be near the woman he loves. The fun is derived in watching him pose in his true colors for the sake of humiliating a socially ambitious dowager who believes he is a genuine fakir. Not much to it, is there? The ice-man is merely another name for the disguise that is usually presented.

Mr. De Mille's "business" sturdily holds the picture together. And this treatment is rendered necessary, of course, by the fact the story itself is not of sufficient weight to carry it along. The result is the secondary characters are thrown in bold relief. It is the father and mother of the girl, played by Charles Ogle and Sylvia Ashton with sure comedy strokes which keep one's interest at attention. Credit must be given the director for steering clear of burlesque. He stopped quite short of that line. As the title role calls for repressive acting Mr. Warwick is a good selection. He isn't the same Warwick of old. Fire, persuasion and authority are missing in his work. Doubtless he will strike his stride when the effects of the war are overcome. Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Robert Warwick, the Paramount-Artcraft star, who appeared successfully in "Secret Service," "In Mizzoura," and "The Tree of Knowledge," will be seen at the ———— theatre beginning ———— in his latest photoplay entitled "Jack Straw," a screen version of W. Somerset Maugham's light comedy of the same name which met with popular approval in England and America. Mr. Warwick, being a romantic actor, has a subject here which is ideally suited to his personality and talent—it being a whimsical love story. The star plays the part of an iceman who turns waiter to be near the girl he loves. Later he impersonates an Archduke, then, when apparently exposed as a fraud, turns out to be the genuine article.

The Ambassador of Pomerania arrives and learns that he is the long missing son of royalty. The girl's mother has learned of the trick played upon her, but when she is furnished proof of the pseudo-iceman's identity she gladly announces her daughter's engagement to him. The picture gets off to an excellent start and maintains its rapid tempo throughout. "Jack Straw" may be defined as a wholesome light comedy which is cleverly sustained with a pleasant vein of romance. Mr. Maugham is highly successful with the type of story he uncovers here and the high lights which were found in abundance in the original have been maintained by the scenarist and the director. Mr. Warwick gives a breezy portrayal of the title role, assisted by a cast that contains such clever players as Carroll McComas, J. M. Dumont, Charles Ogle and Sylvia Ashton.

PROGRAM READER

Did you ever think when the ice-man comes around to your door that he may be a member of blue-blooded aristocracy? Perhaps he is a Duke or Count who has taken up this occupation to hide his identity. You never can tell. Speaking of the ice-man, Robert Warwick, the Paramount Artcraft romantic actor, appears in such disguise in his latest photoplay, "Jack Straw." This offering is an adaptation of W. Somerset Maugham's celebrated light comedy of the same name which met with popular success on the English and American stage. Now that we have told you that he plays the part of an ice-man it is up to you to guess the rest. He may be a banker's son who has run away; he may be working his way through college; he may be an Archduke in disguise. You can find out what he is when you come to the ———— next ———— "Jack Straw" is a pleasing romantic comedy which we are sure will highly interest you

SUGGESTIONS

This time Robert Warwick gets away from his dramatic roles and appear in something of a humorous character. So it would be well to announce the fact that this star presents himself as a light comedian. Play up his previous pictures such as "Secret Service," "In Mizzoura," and "The Tree of Knowledge." By doing so your patrons will be reminded of the excellent calibre of his plays. Feature his present vehicle as a pleasing romantic comedy which permits him to score his personality and talent to the highest advantage. Play it up humorously and take care to exploit it through catch lines and teasers. You can make up some clever rhymes around the title and your artist can paint a likeness of the star carrying a cake of ice in his hands. Feature the author, too, and mention that he has a number of popular successes playing at present on the stage. Mention the director. By doing so your fans will be assured of a clever production.

"OLD LADY 31"
(Metro)

Tears and Laughter in Excellently Produced Comedy-Drama

THE picturization of Rachel Crother's stage success, with Emma Dunn, who starred in the play on Broadway, in the stellar role, pulls at the heart strings and knocks at the funny bone through six reels. Emma Dunn, in a most delicate and effective piece of acting, is responsible for most of the quivers of emotion, and Henry Harmon in a characterization well nigh equal to the star's gives us our laughs. And Director John Ince deserves the credit for the perfect detail and the splendidly trained supporting cast especially the "girls" in the old ladies home.

With the exception of omitting the romance of the boy and girl, the picture resembles the play. Mr. Ince, however, has been able to enlarge upon the incidents in the old ladies home, where the well selected "girls" harass poor Abe with their feminine thoughtfulness and attention. The picture opens at a high emotional pitch when the old couple are forced to leave their homestead. If the six reels were all like the first Emma Dunn would have your whole audience wringing out their handkerchiefs. From then on the emotion descends until it is at times pure comedy when Abe becomes the thirty-first "lady" in the old ladies home.

Why the two young characters are introduced is hard to see, as their romance is entirely neglected. The dream of the women-pestered Abe is a little too long and the point could have been gotten over in less footage. The character of Blossy may be thought by some to be slightly overdrawn, but she plays her frivolous part very well. And the rest of the cast is up to the high standard set by the appealing star.

The only thing to regret is that the plot is not strong enough to give Emma Dunn more opportunities to thrill us. If your patrons are educated up to this type of picture, and will not miss the pretty heroine and the rapid fire action, you can't lose on this. Length, 6 reels. Matthew Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Another appealing stage play has found its way to the screen in "Old Lady 31," which will be presented at the ———— theatre on ————. Emma Dunn, who starred in the play during its successful run on Broadway, plays the lead in this screen version. The production was directed by John Ince and is from the pen of the successful dramatist, Rachel Crothers.

Angie and Abe have been married many years when bad investments force them to sell their old homestead. Angie is to go to the old ladies' home and Abe is to live on the poor farm. But when the twenty-nine inmates of the old ladies' home see how hard it is for the old couple to part, they agree to take Abe in, so in he comes, listed as "Old Lady 31." There is an almost endless succession of comedy situations as Abe wins his way into hearts of his many female companions. The story ends as the old couple return to their home after some apparently worthless mining stock has proved to be of some value.

Emma Dunn is one of the most appealing "mother" actresses on the stage to-day, and her work in this picture is such that the production will be eventually rated as one of the classics of the screen.

PROGRAM READER

Perhaps, after all, the old people are the most interesting! At least they prove so in "Old Lady 31," the successful stage play, which will open at this theatre on ————. There are only two young people in the entire cast, and all the rest are inmates of the old ladies' home. But there is not one moment when you will not be laughing or crying—Emma Dunn and Henry Harmon will see to that. Both of these players appeared in the original stage production.

SUGGESTIONS

Better than any stunts is the cast, author and story of this production. The play made a great hit in New York, and Emma Dunn has a number of friends, especially among the "old timers." Do not forget that both Emma Dunn and Henry Harmon appeared in the original stage production. The play is by Rachel Crothers, who wrote also "The Little Journey" and "39 East." Show as many stills as possible of the appealing scenes which the picture offers. Maxwell Karger and John Ince will probably be known to some of your patrons. Get the story in your program, in the papers and everywhere you can. The setting is so different from the average motion picture setting that it ought to draw for that very reason.

CATCH LINES

There were thirty ladies in the house and one man. And when the man began [illegible] to one of the ladies had a different remedy for his cold.

"THE BRAND OF LOPEZ"
(Haworth-Robertson-Cole)

Role Hardly Fits the Japanese Star

SESSUE HAYAKAWA essays a new role in this picture, appearing as a Spanish Matador, instead of a Japanese. The picture is a heavy melodrama of bull-fighters and bandits of Seville. The story is an average one built up around a suggestive theme, and the star hardly satisfies in his Spanish role, although the memory of his former productions and his own nationality may influence this opinion. But Hayakawa is a typical Oriental, and it is difficult for an Oriental to register the hot passions, especially the diabolic revenge, of a quick tempered Latin. It's like having hot tamales without the pepper.

Your melodrama fans, however, unless they dislike unhappy endings, or the plot, which is that of an illegitimate child taken from his loving father, will be pleased with this latest offering. The dramatic incidents start in early, and there are one or two oases of light spots. There are no unusual sets, and don't expect to see the star in the arena, waving red before an infuriated bull. The fact that he is matador is proven by a sub-title and a Spanish costume.

As a bandit he wrongs a girl brutally and in disgustingly realistic manner and later, when the child is taken from him, he vows more revenge upon all humanity. He dies in the end, with the little boy, found at last, murmuring "father" into his ear.

While our revengeful and brutal friend meets a just end, the picture evidently tries to raise sympathy throughout for one of the most unscrupulous characters ever filmed. The branding incident has little to do with the story, and even the branded heroine forgets it the next minute.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew Taylor.

Story by E. Richard Schayer.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Sessue Hayakawa, the noted Oriental actor, is the star of the new picture, "The Brand of Lopez," a Robertson-Cole projection. Mr. Hayakawa essays a new kind of role in this feature, playing the part of a Spanish matador. The Spanish atmosphere is faithfully represented and the whole production is one that is filled with vivid melodrama and swift action.

When the dancing girl foresakes Vasco Lopez, he duels with his rival and leaves him for dead. Then he flees to the hills and becomes the leader of a robber band. There his child is born, and the fact that he is a father softens his hard heart. The child is taken from him, however, and once more he roams the hills, bent only on revenging himself on humanity and particularly upon the dancing girl who is the cause of all his evils. His opportunity comes at last, but with it comes death, and he dies with his little son in his arms, who has been restored to him in his dying hour.

The picture is one that is different, and will remain long in the memory. There is a wealth of melodramatic material, and the star, together with his excellent supporting cast, get the utmost out of the many gripping situations.

PROGRAM READER

Sessue Hayakawa, the famous Oriental actor, will be seen at this theatre on _____ in his latest production, "The Brand of Lopez." This time the star departs from the kind of roles he has been playing continually and comes forth as a Spanish bull-fighter, an idol of the populace. Stories of old Spain, with its gayly dressed senoritas flashing their brilliant smiles upon their dark skinned gallants, are always appealing, and "The Brand of Lopez" is no exception. Here we see the true Spanish type, with burning passions of love, hate, revenge and jealousy. The star is seen in each of these emotions and portrays them in such a way that the picture is not easily forgotten.

SUGGESTIONS

There is hardly any end of exploitation stunts which can be worked if you care to go to the expense of doing them. Dress a man up in Spanish costume and have him ride through the streets. If it is practical, obtain a bull and chain him in front of your theatre. Spanish atmosphere can be created by lobby decorations, and especially by clever box office decorations. Dress the Spanish costumes. The star, of course, should be mentioned ... His latest successes have been "The Dragon Painter," "The ... "The Tong Man" and "The Beggar Prince." There are plenty ... that can be worked out to accompany the picture. If you want a soulist, "The Toreador's Song," from Carmen, would be the most appropriate. The picture has bandit scenes, so place a sign in front of your theatre reading, "Wanted—Dead or Alive, the Bandit Lopez." A hand and finger should point to your entrance.

CATCH LINES

A story of fiery emotions, and a Spaniard's cruel, torturing revenge.

Sessue Hayakawa as he appears as a Spanish hero of the bull ring—in "The Brand of Lopez."

"THE TATTLERS"
(Fox)

Society Melodrama Too Heavy for General Entertainment

"THE TATTLERS," starring Madlaine Traverse, comes to us saturated with the heroine's tears. It is a typical melodrama of modern society life, dealing with the timely question of divorce, in a story that gives the Fox emotional star nothing else to do but "emote." There are few light spots in the entire picture and the subtitles especially are overweight. The story comes perilously near to ending unhappily, but after murder and suicide the heroine discovers that all her troubles were only dreamed after all. It appears as if the producers had planned to make a real tragedy, but, fearing the great majority of "happy ending" fans, has lost courage at the last moment and resorted to the dream situation.

The story is that of a middle aged woman, who is slandered by gossiping tongues. Madlaine Traverse plays the part of this well-to-do American mother. She divorces her husband, who has a weakness for drink and a cellar besides, and goes with another man, who promises to marry her, but doesn't. Her son's romance is about to be shattered because of his wronged mother, and the long-suffering lady shoots the villain. The man dies; the murderess drinks poison, and then wakes up to find that she dreamed it all and that her first husband is promising to henceforth keep out of the cellar.

It is doubtful if such a character as the heroine will awaken sympathy. The star's efforts to arouse emotion are a little too patent and overstudied. The cast is not above the average, and one or two little improbabilities and poor details may not escape notice. On the whole the cast and direction are not quite big enough to put across a story that is crammed to excess with tears, sighs and screams of anguish. Length, 5 reels.—Matthew Taylor.

Story by Henry Clifford Colwell.
Directed by Howard M. Mitchell.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Madlaine Traverse, the Fox emotional star, will be seen at the _____ theatre on _____. The picture is "The Tattlers," and it was written by Henry C. Colwell. Howard M. Mitchell, the well known Fox director, produced the picture.

The story deals with a typical American family in well to do circumstances. Mr. Rutherford has but one weakness—drink. One evening he tries to force his son to drink a cocktail, humiliating his wife, played by Madlaine Traverse, before her guests. Mrs. Rutherford, taunted by her husband, obtains a divorce, and goes to James Carpenter, who has promised to marry her. But he keeps postponing the date of their wedding, and finally the gossip reaches young Jack Rutherford, who is at college, and the mother of the girl with whom he is in love. Jack goes to his mother to learn the truth, and when he hears how Carpenter has deceived her, he tries to kill him. But Mrs. Rutherford takes the revolver and fires five shots into the body of the man who has caused her so much misery. Then, frenzied by the thought of her crime, she takes a bottle of poison from the doctor's chest and drinks it.

It is not the end, however, for Bess Rutherford finds that she has merely dreamed all her horrors, and that her husband has sworn never more to touch liquor. The story is emotional throughout, and Madlaine Traverse is sure to bring forth tears and laughter from her many admirers in this, her latest triumph.

PROGRAM READER

Madlaine Traverse, the "empress of stormy emotion," will be the attraction at this theatre on _____. The picture is "The Tattlers," a Fox production, and one that is intensely dramatic throughout. The scenes are all laid right here in an American city, and the characters are just such as you meet every day about you. The picture deals with divorce and the evils that follow it. It answers the question vividly and impressively.

SUGGESTIONS

Boost this picture as one that is crammed full of emotion, and one which will surely please all those who like heavy motion picture drama. If you have showed "The Hell Ship," the star's last picture, recall this to your patrons. In your advertising state that it is a picture of modern American life, and deals with a question that plays an important part in society to-day. If any local clergyman should be preaching of the evils of gossiping, extracts from his sermon would furnish good exploitation, as the story is one of a woman whose troubles are caused by gossiping meddlers. There are some good stills which will show your patrons that the picture is full of action. Plenty of catch lines can be formed to get across the fact that it is a gripping society drama.

CATCH LINES

Unwittingly, she was ruining her son's life. How she made amends and revenged herself upon her deceiver, is told in "The Tattlers."

Madlaine Traverse, the Fox emotional star, in a five-part drama of modern society.

Her husband had but one fault, but out of that fault grew all the troubles of his beautiful wife.

What are the consequences of divorce? "The Tattlers" gives the answer in a powerful drama of modern society.

"MOLLY AND I"

(Fox)

Shirley Mason Pleases in Entertaining Light Comedy

As light as a chocolate wafer, and just as pleasing is "Molly and I," the new Fox production starring Shirley Mason. There is hardly a serious moment in the entire five reels. The star, dainty, chic, and vivacious throughout, will make a chorus of "isn't she cute!" arise from your audience. And the director has helped considerably by getting the most out of some good comedy situations.

The story is not unique, but it affords Miss Mason some fine opportunities to impress her delightful personality upon the audience. "Molly," to gain an inheritance, marries a blind author, and when he recovers his sight, keeps her identity a secret and tries to win her way into his heart. She impersonates a little Alsatian orphan and employs herself as his housekeeper. Pretending not to speak or understand English, the star here puts over the best spots in the picture, but the director must share the credit with her.

There is little doubt but that the story is not five-reel material. It is padded in the earlier reels, but its padding is pleasingly done. Some subtitles are on the slapstick comedy style, and as the picture is not a farce, they appear a little out of place. The star is well supported, especially by Albert Roscoe. There are no big exteriors or interiors, but the photography is good.

In general the picture is a wholesome, clean, light comedy, which your patrons may enjoy as a surcease from heavy, emotional drama. They will be entertained for five reels, and then probably forget all about it, unless they remember the little star, who has been given a part that suits her perfectly. Length, 5 reels. Matthew Taylor.

THE CAST

"Molly"	Shirley Mason
Philip Smith	Albert Roscoe
Jack Herrick	Harry Dunkinson
Marion Sutherland	Lilie Leslie

Story by Frank R. Adams.
Directed by Howard M. Mitchell.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the most delightful little stars of the screen, Shirley Mason, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ———, in her latest Fox production, "Molly and I." In her last picture, "Her Elephant Man," Miss Mason had the part of a little circus girl. In "Molly and I" she is an ordinary little stenographer, who impersonates a typical little French maiden to win her way into the heart of the man she loves.

Shirley Brown, or "Molly," as she is nicknamed, is to inherit $10,000 on the day she is married. She meets and falls in love with Philip Smith, an author, who is totally blind and penniless. She persuades him to marry her, for she says, "she has been waiting forty years for a husband!" In reality she wishes to send him to Italy where he may regain his health.

When he returns with his sight, "Molly" begins her efforts to make her husband fall in love with her. She impersonates an Alsatian orphan, and finds employment in his apartment. She makes believe she can neither speak nor understand English and there is no end of the complications that ensue. There is another woman, of course, who also loves the young author, but "Molly" finally wins his heart, and after a misunderstanding that threatens to separate the two, the husband and wife are united.

The picture does not pretend to be highly dramatic, but it is a wholesome little comedy that is sure to please.

PROGRAM READER

If you want a little rest from emotional actresses, who "emote" with blinking eyelashes, and dastardly villains who do their villainy with the help of many cigarettes, then your place is right here in this theatre on ——— evening. You will see the delightful, pretty little star, Shirley Mason, in a comedy-drama that harmonizes perfectly with this springtime air. We guarantee you no murders, throttlings, or heavy "drawma" to make you feel that maybe life isn't worth while. But you will see five reels of one splendid comedy situation on top of the other, and you will see the prettiest, most vivacious little screen star in what is probably the best picture she has ever done.

SUGGESTIONS

You cannot feature this picture from any spectacular angle or from the story angle. The best bet is the star, who is going to please in this picture. If you have shown "Her Elephant Man" or any of the other earlier pictures of the star, mention this fact. Also show as many stills of the star as possible, but avoid the close-ups, if possible. She looks better in a full-length view. Several catch lines could be profitably employed dealing with the situation of a girl who marries a blind man. Boost it for what it is—an entertaining light comedy, that is bound to entertain.

CATCH LINES

He wanted to "fire" his cute little housekeeper. He gave her some wages, but she couldn't understand English, so she came back. All this and a lot more in "Molly and I."

Molly married a blind man, so how could he know when he regained his sight that his pretty little housekeeper was his wife?

Nothing morbid. Nothing depressing. Just a clean, irresistible comedy with Shirley Mason, "95 pounds of pep, personality, and prettiness" in the leading role.

"LOVE WITHOUT QUESTION"

(B. A. Rolfe-Jans)

Crook Melodrama, Rich in Mystery and Suspense

An old-fashioned crook melodrama is unfolded in the initial Jans production, "Love Without Question," and that means it has for its background a series of plottings and counterplottings which are so remarkably interwoven that the element of mystery is impenetrable. The very character of this story calls for such treatment inasmuch as it touches on spooks, murders and other features which are calculated to keep one in suspense. There will be some who will say that Mr. Rolfe has relied too heavily on the spectator's deductive powers and that his purpose may be not effective in providing such an abundance of mystery. If these skeptics will appreciate the fact that this picture is quite a departure from the ordinary crook melodrama that its prime purpose is to mystify through sequences of unadulterated action regardless of its unreality then they can sit back and enjoy it. Which they will probably do anyway.

The incidents are really quite startling and each builds upon the other with increasing suspense. It is quite a feather in the director's cap that he has been able to arrange his scenes with good continuity considering the play and counterplay of events. It is only natural that the love interest would be a negligible factor because it relies upon steiner stuff than romantic interludes. The question is who killed old Silas Blackburn? Before the spectator is certain he is almost convinced that the hero had a hand in the crime. Which is a natural conclusion because no character must escape suspicion.

The action is revealed at such a high tension throughout that when the climax does clarify the atmosphere the observer realizes that the pace has been too rapid to maintain. The abrupt finale enables one to catch his breath again. Olive Tell plays the feminine lead with charm and authority, and her support is praiseworthy. The technical details have all been well arranged. The title may not be in harmony. It is easily forgotten once the melodrama starts. Length, 6 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

The beautiful Olive Tell is the star of the first Jans production, "Love Without Question," which will appear at the ——— theatre for three days beginning ———. Miss Tell, always a finished actress, gives Majeroni a commendable performance in the role of Katherine who loved perhaps not wisely but too well. The picture may be called a mystery melodrama and it is adapted from "The Abandoned Room," by C. Wadsworth Camp. The story concerns the unfolding of one of the most mysterious crimes ever brought out on the screen and in the telling of it the elements of action, suspense and romance are found in abundance.

From the time that old Silas Blackburn is found murdered in the abandoned room up to the moment when the mystery is solved the spectator is held in a tight embrace by the wealth of melodramatic events. Three deaths have occurred in this room and Katherine, the ward of old Silas, and Robert, his grandson, have been accused of conspiring for the old man's fortune. When he is found murdered the next day, suspicion naturally rests upon the young people. The guilty party is one that could never be guessed. The direction is praiseworthy the details have been worked out with care and the mystery note has been kept in a dominant position. The picture was produced under the supervision of B. A. Rolfe and he has seen to it that it is technically perfect. Mrs. Tell is supported by a cast of well-known and talented players among whom are James Morrison, Peggy Parr, Ivo Dawson and Charle Mackay.

PROGRAM READER

A murder had been committed in the abandoned room—the door of which was locked on the inside. Who could have killed old Silas Blackburn and left no trace of the crime? Were his ward and grandson guilty? They were circumstantially implicated in the crime since it had been said that they would inherit the old man's fortune. The solving of this mystery affords the patrons of the ——— theatre one of the most fascinating stories ever shown on the screen.

The management feels that the spectators will welcome the opportunity of seeing this exceptional photoplay—the initial production of Jans Productions with the beautiful and talented Olive Tell as the star. It provides everyone with the chance of becoming an amateur detective, but we defy a Sherlock Holmes to penetrate the mystery so carefully is it concealed. "Love Without Question" will appear at the ——— next ———.

CATCH LINES

She loved a man that many other women would have cast aside. Could you love someone who was suspected of a crime? See Olive Tell in the absorbing drama "Love Without Question."

Will Get by Except as to Logic

THIS starts out with Edith Roberts a Texas "Peg o' My Heart" and breezes along as a very entertaining bit of film until they begin doing things with the "papers" after which there isn't much to really commend until the very tag of the feature when an unexpected twist marries the heroine off to the ranch foreman instead of the English chap.

The story is about a Texas girl who falls heir to a fortune and a title, but before she is fully accepted either by family or the solicitors is accused of being an impostor by a crooked lawyer who has stolen her father's "papers" and with a dance hall "dame" shows up in England claiming the estate and title for the chorus girl. There is also a counter-plot in the attempt of the lawyer to swindle Edith out of her Texas ranch. Both plans of course fail.

Most of the English characters resembles those of the famed "Peg" and are rather interesting. Miss Roberts is a very captivating "Lady Ellen" both in cowboy togs and as the lady. She enacts the role with a sincerity and naturalness that goes a long way in bringing the picture up from the mediocre class.

So far as the production goes if an audience will overlook the disregard the producers have evidenced to plausibility in complicating the plot, this will get over in fine shape. We are afraid, however, that the exacting will see the holes in the logic of the thing and that it will suffer in their opinion for that reason.

A very good cast enacts every role and the technical part of the feature is extra good. Some wonderful scenic backgrounds have been secured and there are two or three good camera tricks in dissolves which register as new with us.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Her Five Foot Highness" is the title of a new Universal picture starring pretty petite Edith Roberts which has been secured for a ——— days' engagement at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

In "Her Five Foot Highness" Miss Roberts plays the role of a Texas girl who, after growing to womanhood finds that she has inherited a title and a fortune from an English relative. The star appears equally to advantage as the "cow girl" who romps and works with the cow punchers on her ranch or as the "lady" in Old England. She rides a horse like Bill Hart and wears her gowns, some splendid ones, like Clara Kimball Young.

While the picture is a drama, it's story having to do with the efforts of her father's villainous lawyer to cheat her out of her inheritance and her wooing by two lovers, one the illustrious scion of an old family, the other her own big hearted ranch foreman, there is plenty of lighter moments and much that may be justly termed characterization. In a way Miss Roberts is another "Peg O' My Heart" in this picture only instead of being Irish and from New York, she is from Texas and English to begin with and American, when she decides to stay in America in spite of her fine offer of marriage by her English lover.

PROGRAM READER

Pretty Edith Roberts, who has proven to you that she is a talented actress, is coming to this theatre in a new picture called "Her Five Foot Highness" for a ——— day engagement beginning ———.

Her vehicle in this case demonstrates her versatility for she plays the romping, broncho riding, breezy Texas girl who has spent most of her life on a ranch with the best of them and then later dons the fine clothes and does the "lady" over in England where she has gone to accept an inheritance and a title from a deceased uncle. This, of course, is not the plot, which is dramatic with some high lights of comedy and about which we will not tell you since to do so would be to spoil part of your enjoyment. Suffice to say that you will be interested in the picture and be surprised at its unusual twist. The story is one which O. Henry himself might have written since on the last end when you have "figured it all out" you find you are wrong.

In support of the star are such well known people as Katherine Kirkham, Virginia Ware, Leonard Clapham and Harold Miller. Some of the most beautiful scenic backgrounds of any picture have been secured in which to enact the various sequences.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill this as the story of a cow girl who thinks she wants to be an English "lady," but who finds that her old free life suits her better. Give Edith Roberts all the boost you can since her work in the picture is worthy of it. Don't dwell much on the plot nor explain the "twist" at the tag. Promise a picture which will fool the wise ones. Mention Kathleen Kirkham and Virginia Ware in your advertising. Use plenty of stills, as the picture has a wide range of action and some very fine scenic shots. Make a lot of the title. We call it an extra good one. In this connection, it seems to us that this title would lend itself well to the "teaser" method if you approve of that plan of advertising occasionally.

"The Fighting Shepherdess"
(First National)

Colorful Melodrama with Star as Western Hero

IT may seem strange to the steady picturegoer to find Anita [S] taking up the burdens of a Western heroine, but if he has p[aid] ticular attention to her work he will notice that she has h[ad] courage the past few months to try something new. "The Fightin[g] herdess" is of the same character as "In Old Kentucky," a previo[us] lease. While not so primitive in its character drawing and eclipsed melodramatic incident, the offering overshadows the other from a duction standpoint as well as from such sure elements as patho sympathy.

Whereas "In Old Kentucky" relied upon swift and compact actio its interest, "The Fighting Shepherdess" holds attention chiefly thr its character appeal. Show us a patron who doesn't react to a gir pressed on all sides by enemies and we'll show you a figure hereth humanity. The town scoffs at her and hurls its insults from every an but instead of folding her tent and stealing away she elects to stay fight it out. And she wins, make no mistake about it. At times one fe that the heroine has a single-track mind, particularly when she dismi her lover. But then one recognizes the fact that she is guided by a sin motive to win out.

Except for a few brief lapses the picture goes forward with well a ranged sequences and the climaxes are very effective. A discrepancy noticed in the case with which she becomes the "grand lady." The prim itive, headstrong girl puts on evening dress and addresses her enemie with all the poise and bearing of a social queen. And the title writer put words into her mouth that would do credit to Daniel Webster. This is minor flaw in a story which is generally convincing throughout. Th pictorial side is exquisite particularly the long shots of sheep graz and the scenes of elemental nature. The acting is efficient. What m could it be with Gibson Gowland in one of his fine characterizations

PRESS NOTICE STORY

A picturization of Caroline Lockhart's thrilling story of the open range, "The Fighting Shepherdess," will be presented at the ——— theatre the week ——— with Anita Stewart in the title role. This is said to be the great woman's book in years and it offers the star an opportunity to display her versatile talent. The plot centers around the tireless, remorseless, implacable str of Kate Prentice to find enjoyment in life. Hard riding cattlemen recogniz sex in their efforts to drive Kate and her flocks from their domain. They her life, her good name and bar her way to love—but she fights alone and a battle with man's weapons, but not in man's way.

The picture is uncommonly rich in exciting episodes and the primitive is in perfect harmony with the locale of the story. The trials and trib that she goes through would overcome the average girl. But Kate P a fighter and she is so determined to succeed that her enemies are capitulate. "The Fighting Shepherdess" is brimful of action which go without any recourse to arbitrary incident. It is a worthy companion p Old Kentucky," Miss Stewart's previous offering. Edward Jose, o ing directors, has provided it with plenty of human touches and atmosph has also seen to it that the picture is adequately staged. The star gives a and vital portrayal of the leading character and her support is excellent.

PROGRAM READER

You have seen Anita Stewart in society roles—you have seen her as a wild-flower from Dixie—you have seen her in roles of sweet simplicity, but you ha never seen her as a Western heroine. In playing the character of a shepher of the open ranges she gives further evidence of her remarkable versatility. Th time she appears in a screen version of Caroline Lockhart's gripping novel, "The Fighting Shepherdess," and it is not a misstatement when we declare it to b of the most vital pictures of the year. As she is chock full of personality makes the character of the heroine a memorable figure in the film theatr figure comparable to her study in the previous offering, "In Old Kentuc The current picture takes the spectator to the boundless West where again background of gripping action the star and her players hold one in a tight emb It is the story of a girl's fight to maintain her good name and self-respect. The picture will be at the ——— next ———.

SUGGESTIONS

The point to bring out in the exploitation of this picture is to state that it is a worthy successor to "In Old Kentucky." Be sure to say that the star shows her versatility here and that the role is peculiarly adaptable to her personality. Make mention that it is a screen version of Caroline Lockhart's novel of the same name. Here is your chance to link up with your bookdealer by having him exploit the book in a window display. Run stills of the star in her various costumes. Play up the fact that the picture is a great, big, sweeping Western which will hold the spectator completely fascinated from inception to conclusion. Feature it as an Edward Jose production. The steady picturegoer will recognize then that it is a superior product. Feature it as an absorbing melodrama of a girl's efforts to fight her way to honor and self-respect.

"THE BLOOD BARRIER"

(Blackton-Pathe)

Action and Suspense Will Hold

HE two elements involved in "The Blood Barrier" that, in our opinion, will do most to recommend the production to its future audiences are action and suspense. The story itself becomes involved in the course of its development: The hero, at the open- pitted against the inordinate jealousy of a criminal investigator; he is beset by conspirators, who seek to wrest from him a secret da of value to the government. In overcoming the opposition set in on by these two hostile forces, the hero is soon enmeshed in the led skeins of a complicated story. The acting leaves something to be ted in the way of a smooth, natural interpretation of the principal

Despite the complications, however, and some instances of stilted per- nances, action helps to keep the interest aroused; and suspense-situa- ns, injected into the action at various intervals, serve to sustain the erest throughout. The heroine rushes into the courtroom towards the se to submit the evidence that will save her sweetheart from the electric air. "Old stuff," you may say. Certainly, but the "old stuff" is given n unexpected twist because the evidence submitted more deeply involves he hero, on trial, instead of freeing him from the clutches of the "Law." This element of "the unexpected" is in evidence at other points in the ction also. It reinforces capably the interest, originally stimulated by he action and suspense-situations.

Excellently appointed interiors, long shots of attractive scenery, humor- us touches in the action and sub-titles and consistently good photography re also to be found in "The Blood Barrier." Length, 6 reels. E. F. upple.

"THE HARVEST MOON"

(Gibraltar-Hodkinson)

Star Makes Play Entertaining

IF is the adaptation of Augustus Thomas' play that is to blame for the fact that "The Harvest Moon" does not please as well as it might. The opening reels do not even attempt to get over the reasons for some of the action, and for that reason the whole story seems to be built upon an unstable premise. Doris Kenyon, the star, does much to overcome the story, for besides being easy to look upon, she is well directed in the emotional scenes. There are some good society scenes in the picture as well as some fine theatrical interiors.

The story opens in a farmhouse in Normandy, where an unknown woman dies, leaving a baby girl. A cable brings her divorced husband from America, and he takes the child away. We see husband number two searching for his wife, who has fled from him because he failed to register her marriage in France, and she is not recognized as his wife. As he is a noble character we can't see why he caused her all this misery. And we can't see why number two, during his eighteen years' search for his daughter, does not suspect number one of the kidnapping act and search for him.

The greater part of the story is laid in America where the daughter is brought up by her supposed father and tyrannical and likewise supposed aunt. Her real father, now a learned French dramatist, finds her at last, but does not reveal his identity because she is "so happy." Happy despite the stern lady who strives to thwart her ambition!

The point of the story is the power of suggestion, and how the suggestion of evil influences a noble soul. The cast supports the star well, especially George A. Lessey. There is plenty of beautiful moonlight to make Miss Kenyon more beautiful. Good acting, sets and photography provide sufficient entertainment. - Length, 6 reels. Matthew Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

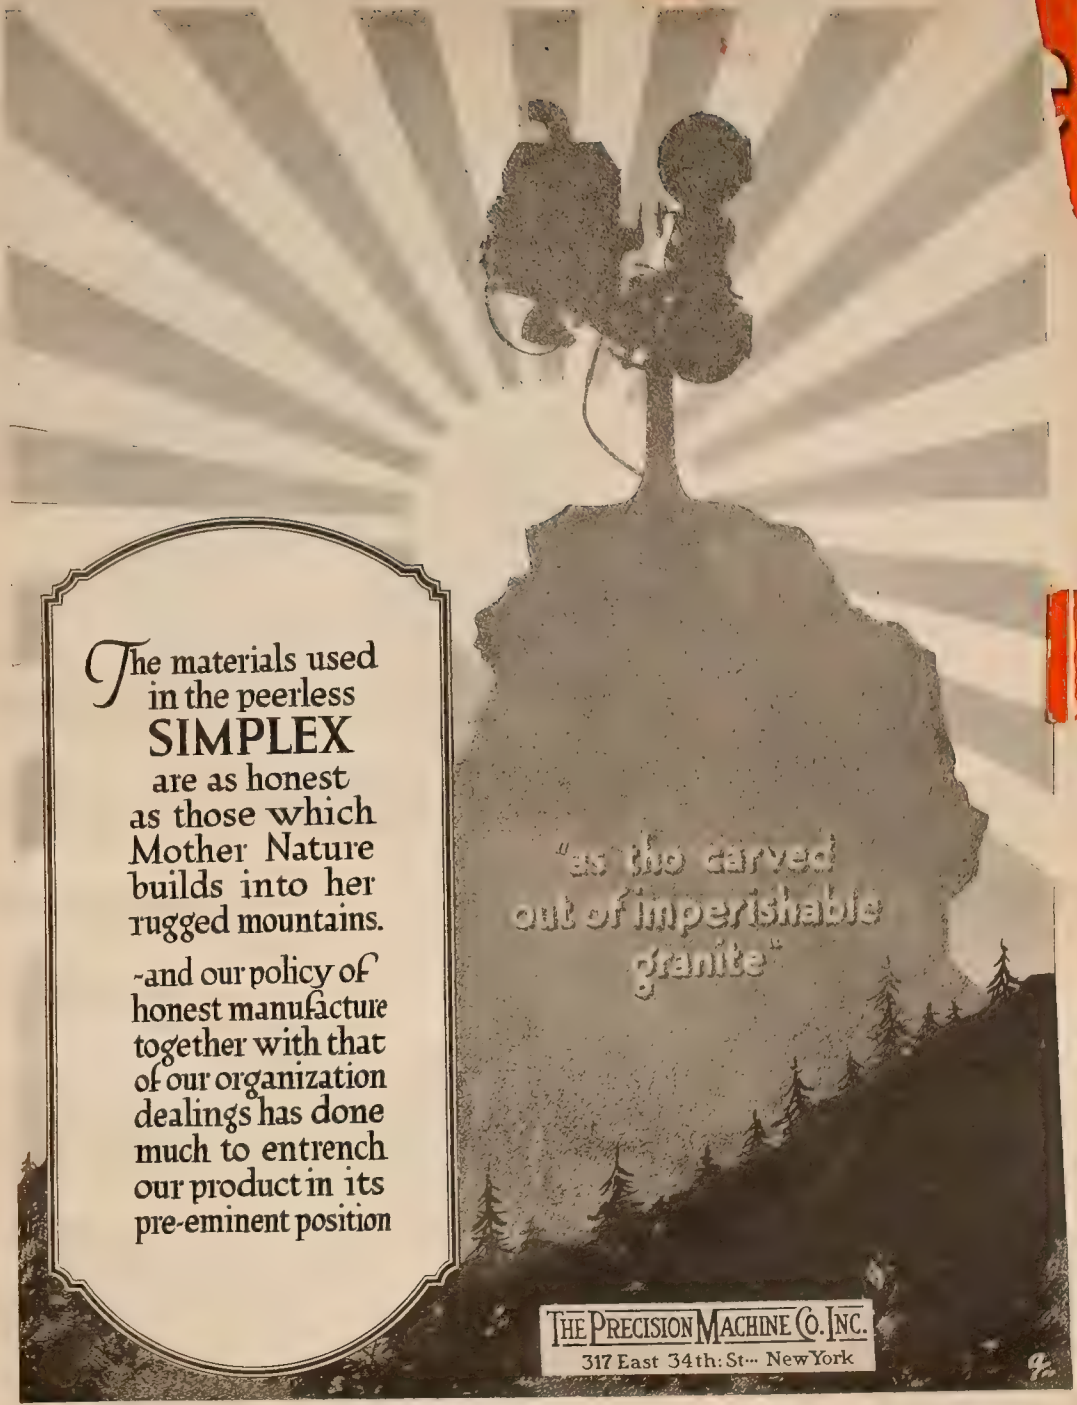
One of the most beautiful stars on the screen to-day will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— in her latest picture, "The Harvest Moon." The play is from the pen of Augustus Thomas, one of the authorities of the drama in America, and likewise one of the most successful playwrights. Mr. Thomas has written of a theme which he well knows, for "The Harvest Moon" is a story of the theatre, with its successful and struggling authors and actresses.

Doris Kenyon plays the part of a young American girl whose ambitions the stage. She is brought up by the man she supposes to be her father, and his tyrannical sister. Her real father, a French dramatist, finally discovers her and is instrumental in bringing her and her young lover together.

Besides some beautiful scenes in a French farmhouse, where the story opens, there are some exquisite scenes of the interior of a theatre in New York during the rehearsal of a new play.

PROGRAM READER

Doris Kenyon, who appears at this theatre on ——— in "The Harvest Moon," is considered by some to be the most beautiful actress on the silver sheet to-day. We will omit comparisons, but it is an undeniable fact this star is beautiful, and besides her beauty, she has unusual histrionic ability. The play is from the pen of the leading playwright in America, Augustus Thomas. There are scenes in France and scenes in America and scenes that are full of emotion and human interest. The story carries a wholesome point of the evil of continually suggesting evil, but it is not a sermon, and the producers do not for a moment go off from their plot to preach a lesson. A notable cast supports the star.



SUGGESTIONS

From the title of this picture you can get some good lobby decoration in the form of bright orange discs with the words—"The Harvest Moon—the time for love and lovers" printed upon them. Throwaways in this form would also be advisable. Of course, you have the star, whose photograph in the lobby would attract attention. And Augustus Thomas is such a well-known playwright that his name alone will draw some. Take a look at the calendar and see if there will be a full moon on the day you show the picture. If there is, start off your advertisement by "There is a full moon to-night—an ideal time to see 'The Harvest Moon' at the ——— theatre." If you want a teaser campaign use the slogan—"What is the ideal time for love-making? The answer will be at the ——— theatre on ———."

CATCH LINES

Here's Another "The Witching Hour"

A Great, Sweet,

Clean Love Story

Here is a big play made into a sincere and beautiful motion picture. It is frankly a directly-told story of the human heart—the heart of a girl; the heart of a father; the heart of a lover.

You remember—all exhibitors do—"The Witching Hour." You remember the basic theme as embodied in the title "As A Man Thinks." Here it is again as the basis of another play by the same celebrated author: that the human mind and many minds working together can make a good woman bad.

This is a big story of a beautiful girl tormented by those around her who "remembered her mother."

"The Harvest Moon" has a meaning that is developed in the story. It is the wonderful moment of maturity. It is the moon of the lovers of all ages; the moon of romance and achievement.

Frankly, none of us can imagine what a wonderful story Augustus Thomas has developed or how beautifully Doris Kenyon acts it. Nor can you imagine how deftly and tenderly J. Searle Dawley has directed it. You must see the picture to do so.

Prints of "The Harvest Moon" have been shipped to all Hodkinson managers and and now await you.

"The Harvest Moon" is more than a star, a story and a director. It is a human voice, it is many real, gripping, touching human emotions caught and transferred to celluloid. It is a group of well-chosen actors forgetting that they are actors while they grip you as very human beings.

Pre-releases of "The Harvest Moon" can be had for April 25. This first Gibraltar production has been five months in the making. No one has hurried or shirked. Perhaps that is the reason for the strength and the beauty of the screen version of this famous play.

That equitable WANDA HAWLEY contract: Atlanta was "influenced by our declining to ask series purchase at outset."

REALART PICTURES

SOUTHERN ENTERPRISES, INC.

ATLANTA, GA

Mr. J. S Woody,
General Manager,
Realart Pictures Corp.,
New York City.

April 3rd, 1920.

Dear Mr. Woody

We are mighty pleased to advise you that we have booked your first starring vehicle featuring WANDA HAWLEY in "MISS HOBBS"--covering our entire circuit of theatres to the extent of the maximum run for any picture we play.

Perhaps you will be interested in knowing that we did not adhere to our policy of requiring a preview in contracting for this feature (though it is seldom we make such an exception), because of our confidence in REALART and the knowledge of MISS HAWLEY'S ability and the popularity which she enjoys in our houses through her recent portrayals in De Mille and other productions. It hardly seemed essential in this instance. We might add that our judgment was further influenced by your policy of declining to ask for signed contract for the series of HAWLEY pictures at the outset.

Indeed, we welcome and acknowledge the opportunity which has been granted to us as former customers to sign up for the first presentation featuring MISS HAWLEY as a star, because she is precisely the sort of girl who so quickly gains the favor of the public and one who depicts her characters with surpassing skill. One of the film's fairest.

For your information, we call your attention to the attached memorandum, which should show without doubt our faith in your judgment of the merits of MISS HAWLEY'S first attraction. Note that we have booked this for a week's run in our three key cities, while we have also given it dates of split weeks for eleven other of the most representative territories which function under the direction of the Southern Enterprises.

We will be pleased to advise you of the assured success which we shall enjoy with the featuring of this attractive little star.

Meanwhile,

Very truly yours,

Dan Michalove

Director of Theatres.

A domestic drama that all can enjoy.

OUR OPINION

The public has come to the point where they desire entertainment of a nature that is more applicable to the kind of lives they lead. They will find this to exist in this production and for that reason the picture is going to prove pleasing to the majority of houses. The material is interesting and has been consistently and wholesomely presented. It is much along the lines of "The Luck of Geraldine Laird." Bessie Barriscale has one of those roles of "The understanding wife who is always misunderstood and she gives a pleasing performance. She has been surrounded with a supporting cast of ample strength and the staging of the play is pleasing and in keeping with the story.

STORY OF THE PLAY

An hour before Robert Knight believed there was nothing in life worth while and but for Madge Graham he would have ended it all. It was an hour later he found life was worth while after all and soon he and Madge were wed and but for a little too much flattery from Mrs. Alden that his wife craved their lives became greatly tangled, and it was only through the healing influence of love that they once more found themselves back in the fold of happiness.

PROGRAM COPY—"Woman Who Understood"—Featuring Bessie Barriscale

Another one of those thoroughly delightful domestic dramas that makes us like the Barriscale so much. The story is one that is quite true to life and the producer's handling of it makes it something we will all enjoy. Bessie Barriscale is delightful and a good cast supports her.

Jottings

By the Editor

YOU can't force a good man to stand still, can you? They just keep moving right ahead—even after you think they have reached the top. Don't they?

For some fellows the top rung of the ladder just seems to be a temporary breathing place while they look around for a taller ladder.

Which brings us to the point of mentioning that while it may not be the longest story in this week's News, the most interesting account to us is the recital of Arthur James' latest discovery of a taller ladder.

"Arthur Jimmy" is going into business for himself—and on the same big scale that he has been accustomed to placing other folks' business. Arthur will begin operations within a few weeks, getting off to a flying start with offices in New York, Washington and Chicago. Independent advertising and publicity will assuredly be possible on a scale never before attempted.

Which only proves, as we said at the outset of this column of small talk, that a good man can't stand still even at the top. The handling of the big Fox national and trade campaigns seems close enough to the top to suit us—but there's always another step for a good man. Selah!!

We are almost ready to hint to you that Arthur will soon be ready to hint to you concerning some "Super-big" accounts—to use film phraseology. For a little birdie has whispered news to us which indicates that the James organization will be wide-spread in scope, handling some of the choicest general publicity accounts in the country in addition to such picture propositions as may come up.

Proving, that in the case of a good man our wishes for good luck are hardly needed. But nevertheless, here they go.

To you Jimmy!

The Ritchey Objective

TO produce a motion picture poster vastly superior to any other on the market, is, and always has been, the main concern of the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. To produce such a poster it has developed and built an organization so complete and finished in its every branch that its resultant work is as perfect as it is possible to make it. As an incidental result of these things the output of RITCHEY posters has risen to a tremendous volume. That has been an inevitable result, for there has always been a tremendously large demand for really great motion picture posters. The RITCHEY poster fulfils that demand.

It is based upon a sound knowledge of crowd psychology, and its message is voiced in a language that the general public speak and understand. It is a product of intensive and collective effort, and it is designed to sell seats that would otherwise remain unoccupied.

We sing the praise of the RITCHEY poster but it sings the praise of the photoplay it advertises!

VOL. XXI APRIL 17, 1920 No. XVII

Watch the Germans!

INTERNATIONALIZATION of the film industry is only a vague term as yet.

In characteristic American fashion we are looking largely at the market within our shores and mostly upon the immediate present.

We wish to introduce here some facts not well known perhaps to the American trade; and then to ask the reader to look ahead two years and see if he does not agree with our conception that:

In 1922 the film industry will be thoroughly internationalized and the supremacy in the world field will be held either by the United States or Germany.

At that time Russia will be opened up, and there will be under way there the development of as many theatres as this country now possesses. If Russia produces her own pictures, she will, like the United States, be able if necessary to subsist upon her own self-contained theatre field.

France will have added one thousand modern theatres; Great Britain at least 1500 new theatres; Japan several hundred (we are already advised of the formation of a large consolidation in Japan, one company controlling 400 houses, which houses are to be modernized at once); Spain, Italy, the Central States, Australia and the Far East will be in line with the remarkable theatre development arrived at here and withheld from Europe on account of the war.

THIS new world market will make heavy demands upon production. There will be room for many pictures from many countries. There will be sharp competition unless producer control develops upon a large scale. In the past the United States has supplied almost entirely its own theatres and at least 80% of the foreign market. What will we do in the future?

Let us see what Germany is doing.

Professor Dr. Leidig, of Berlin, the Government authority, says that Germany today has one hundred producing firms, three thousand theatres and a daily picture house attendance of one million people. We are told that there are at least 60 producers with a regular output.

These producers have, many of them, been producing during the war and with increased activity since the signing of the armistice.

Their combined output today includes about 15 features a week—considerably more than the present and reduced feature output of the United States. We might add, for the benefit of our foreign readers, that the reduction here is for the purpose of quality only.

Ufa, the leading concern in Germany, is a combination of ten producing firms, including such well-known trade names as Nordick, Union, Messter, May, Maxim, etc. Ufa has large resources, including the ownership of its exchanges; Ufa owns outright over one hundred and fifty theatres in Germany, Holland and Switzerland, and controls as many more. The Government owns a third of the stock of Ufa and when Germany believed she was winning the war this concern was made ready to serve as a powerful producer and distributor of propaganda films.

Considering this one firm alone whose size will compare favorably with any film organization in the world, it is well to remember that by all present indications Germany will have commercial control of Russia. If so, it is as probable that Ufa will control the Russian film market.

There are a number of other German producers of consequence, including Decla, which several weeks ago absorbed Bioscope and took over the famous Hagenbeck menagerie and garden at Hamburg.

THE most significant thing about German production today is the fact that it is deliberately guided by international standards. We have seen stills from a set of eight-reel superpictures recently made by the director, Joe May, who may be styled the Griffith of Germany. The sets would do credit to "Intolerance." Money has been lavished upon them. There is an utter absence throughout of the provincial. These pictures were evidently made for a world market. They were produced by May at Wilmersdorf, where a large and costly film city has been built.

"Du Barry," another German superpicture, is acclaimed by the Italian press to be the most notable picture of the past five years.

"Veritas Vincit," by Lubitsch, another director of great ability and resources, is likened to "Intolerance" in scope and artistry.

The former price of production in Germany of only 30,000 marks per picture has been raised to 250,000 marks, and in the case of the new and very pretentious pictures to as much as 1,000,000 marks.

As for stars Germany has an imposing aggregation, including names famous in Central Europe like Genny

Porten, Mia May, Poli Negri, Zella Moya, etc. Their beauty and talent and there are many others suggest that they are quite capable of achieving, perhaps exceeding, the international popularity of our own leading film stars.

All of the best German authors are creating directly for the picture. Through the film Authors' Society of Berlin some two thousand novels are now available for the screen. At the present time large editions of paper covered novels are issued simultaneously with the photoplays.

WE give these few facts as evidence of our surmise that Germany is well under way, both as regards quantity and quality of production, to compete with this country in the near future. There has been no contact moreover as yet with our pictures, nor any inspection trips of our studios, nor have the German studios because of the exchange rate availed themselves of our recent advances in studio equipment.

And now for economy in production—a factor which in the near future will prove as decisive, in competition, as production resources.

Genny Porten, the highest priced star in Germany, receives just $7,000 a year. The highest priced camera man gets $15 a day.

More important still, in the way of all around efficiency and economy, is the fact that studio work is hard and sincere. The studios open at eight o'clock in the morning and at critical stages in the development of the play the work goes on for twenty-four hours, with no rest period to follow.

We have no criticism to make of production in Los Angeles. There is too much of a cry of waste from lay people who know too little of picture making. The leading studios in this country today are expertly built, equipped and managed. Picture making is slow, because quality production demands infinite care; it is necessarily expensive. With the players, however, and with many directors, there is altogether too much of the affluent, reckless attitude of the people of a Klondyke. The unnecessary delays occasioned by temperament (real or assumed) blind vanity and the downright slothfulness bred of over-prosperity makes a yearly bill of millions of dollars.

In the competition we are inevitably facing, whether Germany, or Great Britain, or Italy, or France leads in it, the budget of waste will not be countenanced; and the trimming of it had best begin now.

WE are going to have international pictures—that is to say, pictures made for the taste of the world public; we are going to have them from countries other than the United States; we are going to have them shown to a considerable degree right here in our theatres; we will have foreign companies working here in our country, just as our own companies are now going abroad; we will have several thousand new theatres in foreign countries calling for higher class pictures and exploitation.

And just so soon as trade equilibrium is restored between the world markets—as it will be—we shall find the film business in the very same situation as every other international business. There will be sharp competition in quality, price and advertising.

There will be big developments here this year in the making and marketing of pictures for our domestic trade. But this development will be nothing like that which surround the future position of the country's film industry in the new and greater world market.

Films Illustrating British Industry Tour World

Exhibition Leaves England in Three Sections on Trip to Aid Trade

IN a special section of the weekly edition of the London Times of recent date, an account is given of the World Tour of Exhibition of British Industrial Films. This tour was organized for the purpose of promoting British industrial expansion and developing British export trade. A number of British chambers of commerce as well as a great many British firms are participating in the tour, which plans to visit the principal cities of western Europe, Canada, United States, Mexico, South America, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, India, and Egypt.

The plan was first conceived in 1913 but with the outbreak of the war in the following year activities ceased indefinitely, although The Motion Picture Exhibition of British Industries, Ltd., had already been formed and a number of contracts signed. With the cessation of hostilities, the company recommenced its work, with a result that the tour was ready to start in January of this year.

It is expected that through the tour buyers abroad will have ocular demonstration that British industry is unimpaired, and that British factories can supply many of the world's needs, from ships to pins and needles.

The explanatory matter of the films is in four languages, viz., English, French, Spanish, and Portuguese. Free invitations to the exhibitions at the cities visited will be issued through the local chambers of commerce and other official organizations. A program and time-table will accompany each invitation, so that the recipient may attend at the time the films which particularly interest him are being shown. Moreover, provisions are being made for inquiries being dealt with in a methodical manner.

Prior to proceeding overseas, exhibitions were given in important British centres, and the tremendous interest and enthusiasm which has been aroused augurs well for the success of the exhibitions abroad.

At Sheffield on January 16th, the municipal authorities combined with the Cutlers' Company, the chamber of commerce, and leading manufacturers to give the enterprise a most successful "send-off"; while at Glasgow on January 23rd, under the auspices of the chamber of commerce, influential business men and their friends, even at the somewhat inconvenient hour of 11 a. m., crowded one of the finest and largest halls in the city. At Birmingham on the 29th inst., also under the auspices of the chamber of commerce, the applications for admission to the exhibition greatly exceeded the accommodation available.

The tour is divided into three sections, the first of which is known as the Latin-American section. The advance agent and manager of this section will personally accompany it through South America. These men are British subjects who have lived in the Latin-American countries and who will be prepared to explain the films and answer all inquiries in the language of the country visited. The following itinerary through South America has been planned: Manaos, Para, Pernambuco, Bahia, Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo, Rio Grande do Sul, Monte Video, Asuncion, Buenos Ayres, Rosario, Santiago, Valparaiso, La Paz, Lima, Guayaquil, Panama, Bogota, Caracas, Vera Cruz, Mexico City, Tampico.

The second section will touch South Africa, India, New Zealand and Australia. Cape Town, Port Elizabeth, East London, Johannesburg, Pretoria, Salisbury, Perth, Adelaide, Melbourne, Auckland, Sydney, Calcutta, Bombay and Samarang are some of the cities which will be visited in these countries. The third section will tour western Europe, Canada and the United States. In Europe, Paris, Genoa, Amsterdam, Copenhagen, Christiania, Stockholm, will be shown the films and in Canada they will be exhibited in Halifax, St. John (N. B.), Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Edmonton, and Vancouver. In this country it is planned to stop at Seattle, San Francisco, St. Louis, Chicago, Detroit, Boston, New York, Baltimore, New Orleans, and Galveston.

Besides the world tour, which is now under way, a second motion picture exhibition illustrating British manufactures is now being organized. This tour, however, will not leave the British Isles, and will confine its activities to 200 cities and towns at home. A second world tour is also contemplated.

Among the prominent public bodies and British firms who are participating in the present tour are, Sheffield Development Committee, of Sheffield; the Sheffield Chamber of Commerce and Manufactures, Inc.; Arthur Balfour and Co., Ltd., of Sheffield; Sanderson Brothers and Newbould, Ltd., of Sheffield; Edgar Allen and Co., Ltd., of London; Cammel, Laird and Co., Ltd., of London; the Stalker Drill Works, Ltd., of Sheffield; John Brown and Co., Ltd., of Sheffield; Thomas Firth and Co., Ltd., of Sheffield; Hadfields, Ltd., of Sheffield; George Bennett and Co. (Sheffield), Ltd.; Crookes, Roberts and Co., of Sheffield; William Smith and Co., of Sheffield; J. Beardshaw & Son, Ltd., of Sheffield; the "Masta" Steel Works, Ltd., of Sheffield; W. A. Tyzack and Co., of Sheffield; John Nicholas and Sons (Sheffield), Ltd.; Spear and Jackson, Ltd., of Sheffield; Richard Ibbotson, Ltd., of Sheffield; the Sheffield Twist Drill and Steel Co., Ltd.; Lawton Bros., Ltd., Sheffield; Brown and Polson, Paisley; James Howden and Co., Ltd., of Glasgow; the Gourock Ropewalk Co., Ltd., of Glasgow; Lobnitz and Co., Ltd., of Renfrew; the Glasgow Herald; the Glasgow Chamber of Commerce; Lea and Perrins, Worcester; Liverpool Chamber of Commerce; the Midland Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool.

Harry Crandall Chosen President of Associated

HARRY M. CRANDALL of Washington, D. C., was elected president of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., during the course of a meeting of the Board of Directors held this week at the offices of the organization. Mr. Crandall succeeds Messmore Kendall, whose resignation as president was accepted by the Board in view of the fact that extreme pressure of other business made it impossible for him to continue in an executive capacity.

Mr. Crandall's office as treasurer is to be filled by H. H. Wellenbrink, who now is secretary and treasurer, as well as a member of the Board of Directors

A number of important negotiations were virtually closed during the two-day meeting.

Mr. Quimby stated that the changes in executive personnel would in no wise affect the workings of the organization. He is known to have been negotiating with many important individuals and factors in the industry during the past few weeks, and it is said that the Associated Exhibitors are holding off from making definite announcements until they have lined up propositions formidable enough to make the organization a leader among the "big fellows" from the moment the first gun is fired.

According to members of the Board of Directors Mr. Kendall's resignation was accepted with regret. It is understood that Mr. Kendall stated that no matter what his personal wishes in the case might be, he felt that the affairs of the Capitol Theatre and affiliated business interests required so much of his time that he could not possibly do justice to the Capitol and to the Associated Exhibitors at the same time.

Mr. Kendall explained that, inasmuch as the Capitol Theatre Enterprise already is engaged in the production of pictures to a small extent and, undoubtedly, will go into production on a much larger scale soon, he felt that such activities would not be consistent with a continuation of his holding office in the Associated Exhibitors.

Pitched Battle in "Twin Cities"

United Artists Lease Minneapolis Auditorium to Combat Finkelstein and Ruben Control and War to the Finish is in Sight—Every Resource Tossed into Arena

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. (Special to Motion Picture News) Minneapolis is experiencing a war of competing exhibitors which has reached such a tremendous pace through vigorous and expensive advertising that the average theatregoer cannot help but stop and wonder to which of the opposing theatre interests he will give his patronage.

Moving picture men who know the Northwest field are acquainted with the fact that Finkelstein and Ruben control all the leading downtown picture houses in Minneapolis. The control has been completed in the last two years following the taking over of the Strand theatre, the last of the downtown theatres to be run under a separate ownership.

In order to release their own pictures in Minneapolis at the same time they are shown elsewhere in the United States, the United Artists have leased the Minneapolis Auditorium, and commencing Easter Sunday began to feature the films of the "Big Four." The first picture shown is Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna."

The Auditorium is one of the best known assemblage places in the Northwest. It is here that the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra has been holding its concerts and where other special attractions such as Galli Curci, Harry Lauder, McCormick, Sarah Bernhardt and others have appeared to high class audiences of the city. It was at the Auditorium that the American Legion assembled for its first national convention in Minneapolis last fall.

The United Artists were able to obtain a lease on the property by reason of the fact that that building, formerly owned by the Northwestern National Life Insurance Company, was recently sold to St. Paul interests. The United Artists negotiated their lease with the Symphony Orchestra which is said to have control of the lease for at least five years.

Proctor Gets Branham as Field Leader

CHARLES BRANHAM, conceded to be one of the shrewdest showmen in the Northwest, has been secured to manage the house. Prior to his return to this city Mr. Branham was identified with the S. A. Lynch enterprises in the South. He was a former St. Paul newspaper man and having a host of friends and acquaintances in the Northwest territory, is especially equipped to carry on the management of the theatre and especially is he fitted for the advertising, publicity and promotion work that is attendant upon the opening of a house in a city where other exhibitors deny welcome. Mr. Branham won praise and commendation by the capable manner in which he handled the Strand theatre in this city before the house was taken over by F. & R. There is no disputing the fact that theatre men of the Northwest, no matter whether they are friendly to the United Artists' entrance into the Minneapolis field, admit that Mr. Branham is the best man to be selected to take charge of the new theatre.

Ralph Proctor, assistant general manager of the United Artists, was in Minneapolis for the opening of the new playhouse, and expressed himself as highly satisfied with the launching of the new enterprise. The organization, he said, spent several thousands of dollars to get the house in shape, and added that the United Artists will continue its attractions at the Auditorium after the showing of "Pollyanna." The Pickford attraction will be followed by "As the Clouds Roll By," featuring Douglas Fairbanks, and "Romance" with Doris Keane. It is rumored that Finkelstein and Ruben have made arrangements to play the same stage plays at their Shubert stock house during the showing of the motion pictures at the Auditorium.

Fortunately for the United Artists and for the opposition, too, for that matter, the marriage of Mary Pickford to Douglas Fairbanks, reported at some length by the news service organizations of the country, added material to the voluminous Pickford publicity that found its way into the daily press through both advertising and news columns. This episode, as it just stated, is considered as an aid to R. & F. who are featuring Pickford films at very modest prices at one of their houses during the same week that the "Pollyanna" film is shown at the Auditorium.

Large layouts on the two United Artists stars appeared on the first pages of Minneapolis and St. Paul papers following the marriage revelation and at the same time on the advertising pages of the papers Mary Pickford cuts inserted by the competing exhibitors of the city.

Mr. Branham set about in his Auditorium promotion work with such earnestness that the Ruben and Finkelstein interests immediately began to watch Mr. Branham's elaborate publicity. Ruben and Finkelstein control in downtown Minneapolis the New Lyric, Strand, New Garrick, New Garden, New Unique, and New Aster theatres, two vaudeville houses, the New Palace and the New Grand, and one house presenting stock. The latter plays an important part in their opposition campaign to the United Artists' invasion.

Many Incorporations in New York State

THE Photo-Play Furniture Corporation, about to engage in the manufacture of theatrical settings and motion picture interiors, has just been incorporated in New York State for $62,500, with William J. Farrell and N. A. Healy of New York and D. G. Flynn of White Plains, as its directors.

Among the other concerns that have recently sprung into existence are the Nikko Films, Inc., capitalized at $100,000, and naming as its directors Albert Mayer, Kosuka Honda and Joseph O. Harrison of New York city; the Picture Trading Corporation $500, William A. Douglas, Morris Strunsky and Louis Halle, New York; Superb Productions, $20,000, James E. Costello, Morris Negri, and Edward Worth, New York; Marc Klaw, Inc., $30,000, Marc, Joseph and Alonzo Klaw, New York; the Photo Play Journal Corporation, $50,000, F. Harry Anspacher, Charles B. Parsons and Edward Goldsmith, New York; Romograph Manufacturing Company, $300,000, J. J. Matveenkoff, A. A. Henning, A. T. Seixas, New York; Screen American Publishers, Inc., $500, Randolph Bartlett, Charles McClintock and Bernice Whitman, New York; Labor Films Service, Herman Ross, Isaac Sackin, Anna Grossman, Frank B. Coigne, Max Freund, Isaac Grossman and Sarah Kushman, all of New York, capitalization $5,000.

"Pollyanna" in Stock to Fight Picture

AT the Shubert theatre, where the stock actors have become popular, Ruben and Finkelstein have put on the stage play, "Pollyanna," to run the same week as the Pickford "Pollyanna," at the Auditorium. Each exhibitor has tried to outdo the other in advertising and the copy has borne such phrases as "Don't be Misled," and "The Real Joy is in the Spoken Words."

In further opposition of the United Artists, Ruben and Finkelstein have brought back for return engagements two of the best Pickford films which are playing at the New Garden the same week the "Pollyanna" bill is presented at the Auditorium. "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," is being shown the first half of the week at the New Garden and "The Poor Little Rich Girl" the second half.

The publicity devices, schemes and stunts that each of the exhibitors resorted to, to call attention to their respective bills, are of a scale hitherto unknown to Minneapolis. Mr. Branham, one day, drove into the country and pursuaded a farmer to make him the loan of a cow. The animal was led through the busy thoroughfares of the city bearing the legend, "This is no hall, Mary Pickford in Pollyanna," at the Auditorium.

At another time, by large newspaper advertisements, Mr. Branham announced that on Saturday, March 27, an airplane would soar over the city dropping free passes to the show at the Auditorium. The engine failed at the hour the flight was to be made, so Ruben and Finkelstein who had been carefully watching the activities of their opponent, secured a plane and sent into the air Miss Marie Gale, who took the part of "Pollyanna" in the stage play at the Shubert. Immense advertisements in the Sunday papers the day after the flight carried the announcements by Ruben and Finkelstein that Marie Gale had made the spectacular flight and the advertisements added that everyone should make it a point to see the "Pollyanna" stock production at the Shubert theatre.

Whether Minneapolis is to be benefited by the unprecedented competition is a much discussed subject among those who devote a good deal of time to moving pictures in this city. They point out that Finkelstein and Ruben are putting on extraordinary good pictures at their downtown theatres the same week the United Artists are opening their theatre. For instance, here is the Ruben and Finkelstein bill for the week beginning April 4: New Garrick, Norma Talmadge in "The Woman Gives," first showing in Minneapolis; Strand, Charles Ray in "Mam'selle Clock Andy," first showing in Minneapolis; New Lyric, Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables," first shown, and on which thousands of dollars is being spent in advertising; New Astor, Mabel Normand in "The Jinx," first showing in Minneapolis; New Unique, Fred Lincoln's "Desert Gold," first showing in Minneapolis, and at the New Garden, as was previously mentioned, the two Pickford pictures both of which have been shown before here.

One reason why Mr. Branham believes that success is assured is the fact that the Auditorium, being four blocks from the center of the downtown theatre district, provides ample space for the parking of cars while in the downtown sections, the streets are more or less congested and parking space is difficult to find. The Auditorium, in its presentation of such a large number of high class attractions in the past, has come to be patronized by the best class of the city, especially by people who use their cars to attend the symphony concerts and the recitals of well known musicians and singers of the country.

First National Wants One Man's Scalp

FIRST National issued a sizzling statement this week denouncing an unnamed individual described as "an important sales executive for one prominent producing and distributing organization." The unnamed person is charged with "deliberately and wilfully making misstatements of facts to members of the First National Exhibitors Circuit and many other independent theatre owners concerning the activities of Joseph M. Schenck, president of the Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge companies."

The individual is alleged to be declaring that Mr. Schenck has signed a contract with his organization for the Talmadge pictures at the close of the First National contract. Concerning this a letter from Joseph Schenck to Harry Schwalbe declares in part:

"My dealings with your organization have been so satisfactory that I have absolutely no reason to contemplate changing my affiliations and to do so without any cause or reason would reflect ingratitude on both myself and my stars. Kindly deny it in the trade papers just as emphatically as you possibly can, and I am ready to back you up to the limit."

Advertising Totals Break All Records

IN the campaign of the two theatres for patronages during the Easter week advertising mediums, hitherto, unused, have been resorted to. St. Paul newspaper have been carrying large advertisements of the two competing exhibitors in Minneapolis and the interurban street cars operating between Minneapolis and St. Paul are carrying large cards attached to the windows of the cars. Both exhibitors are using a large number of "24" sheets for their billboard work all over the city. Minneapolis newspapers, the week preceding the opening of the Auditorium, never carried such heavy lineage from theatre exhibitors in Minneapolis. The advertisements aggregated as many as several pages in a single issue.

Mr. Branham, having a wide acquaintance among newspaper workers in Minneapolis, mailed out hundreds of invitations and passes to the editorial men and their families for admittance to the theatre during the opening week.

Some impartial moving picture men of the city, particularly those attached to the exchanges and therefore unbiased in their opinions as to what success the opposing factions will have, point out that the Auditorium will be closed to pictures Wednesday afternoon and evening, April 7, where Mischa Elman and Ysaye give a recital. These observers say that to cut into a week's run of a picture for the showing of some special performances such as this violin recital will injure the picture. It is understood that the lease of the United Artists provides for this midweek special performance, at least for this one day.

John Leroy Johnston, advertising director for the Ruben and Finkelstein interests, is directing the advertising and promotion work in opposition to the United Artists' "Pollyanna" picture, and Mr. Johnston, as his advertising copy will show, has done some exceptionally fine work. His drawings used in the advertisements have been gotten up with extreme care and the copy is as good as has been seen in the Twin Cities for several years.

One of the features of the exhibitions at the Auditorium is a 30 piece orchestra, many members of which are former players in the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. Richard Long is the conductor. The announcement that this orchestra would play was followed by the announcement by Ruben and Finkelstein that they had added several musicians to their orchestras in the large downtown houses.

The fact that a theatregoer must stand and wait to gain admission to any of the downtown picture theatres in Minneapolis during the evening performances demonstrates, it is said, that Minneapolis can support additional theatres. Comment is often heard on the fact that as soon as a new house is opened success so far as attendance is concerned is always assured.

It is understood that R. & F. have planned their program for two months in advance so that unusually good pictures will be shown and they are confident they will continue to receive the same support from the theatre going public. And at the same time the United Artists are confident that their venture into the field will prove highly successful and profitable, being able to offer first releases with the "Big Four" as stars.

Minneapolis is watching the theatre war with intense interest. If attendance figures were obtainable they would undoubtedly show that more people attended theatres in Minneapolis the week of April 4, than any other week in the history of the city.

Love-Making Gets on Exhibitors' Nerves

THERE has been so much kissing and love-making in the theatres of Watertown, N. Y., that the proprietors are using slides asking the young people to refrain from the practice. The situation has appealed to the press of northern New York to such an extent that it has been freely commented on in both the serious as well as the lighter vein.

A.M.P.A. and Cheese Club Celebrate April 1st

The combined membership of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers and the Manhattan Cheese Club had a delightful April fool joke foisted on them Thursday noon at their luncheon at the Cafe Boulevard, when Doraldina, world famous originator of the "hula," Larumba shivel, and other dances, brought in her "gang" and offered the boys some entertainment. The entire affair was a complete surprise to everyone in the two clubs. The Cheese Club boys, composed of newspaper men and press agents, had been invited to have lunch with the Advertisers. N. T. Granlund had made a certain promise, which he kept, and then some. He sprang the big surprise on the gang when he introduced Doraldina, who in turn introduced a friend of hers, and everybody's, gone but not forgotten, and brought back just for this party. His name is Walker.

Buffalo Managers Will Discontinue Office

At a meeting of the Buffalo Motion Picture Exchange Managers' Association in the Chamber of Commerce, Saturday afternoon, March 20, it was decided to discontinue the office in the Chamber of Commerce building and in the future put all the affairs of the association into the hands of the Hoy Reporting Agency of New York City. Under this arrangement the local exchange men will work in cooperation with New York and Albany. Warner Bates, who has been executive secretary, will no longer act in that capacity, but will continue as secretary of the Wholesale Merchants Association.

Boston Organist to Receive $10,000 Yearly

What is believed to be the largest salary contract ever offered a theatre organist has just been signed in Boston. The contracting parties were Nathan H. Gordon, proprietor of the great chain of Gordon houses, and Arthur Martell, an organist well known in music circles. The figures to which Mr. Gordon and Mr. Martell have affixed their signatures are $100,000 and under the terms the organist is engaged to play for the theatres of the Gordon circuit for the coming 10 years at an annual salary of $10,000.

Committee Enlarged by Two New Members

Previous to the departure of Adolph Zukor and William A. Brady for Europe, a meeting of the Americanization Committee of the motion picture industry of the United States was held, with Hon. Franklin K. Lane presiding. It was decided to enlarge the committee, and Hon. J. Hampton Moore, Mayor of Philadelphia, and Col. Arthur Woods, of the Americanism Commission of the Legion of Honor, were invited to join the committee.

Bills Aimed at Deposits Before Assembly

TWO measures which if passed by the Assembly where little opposition is expected, will have a far-reaching effect on the motion picture industry in New York state, were passed by the State Senate on April 7. The first, if passed, will permit children between the ages of 10 and 16 to go unaccompanied to picture houses provided the theatre supplies a matron to care for them.

The second bill protects the exhibitor from the so-called cash deposit, providing that money so paid in advance remains the property of the person making the deposit, and shall be a trust fund in the possession of the person holding it, apart from all other funds.

Aimed at the same subject, an association known as the Contract Indemnity Association of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was formed on April 7. The body plans to guarantee all contracts between members of the State League and producers. A. A. Fennyvessey of Rochester was chosen chairman. Many prominent exhibitors are on the executive committee.

Albany, April 7.—The financial responsibility of all cooperative exhibitors' film organizations is about to be investigated by officers of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, according to action taken here today, empowering the officers, from Sydney S. Cohen, president, down, to do so. The assets and liabilities of these concerns will be inquired into as well as the methods which they employ in doing business. Later on, and following the investigation a report will be made to each member of the State League, advising of the concerns which are financially responsible.

Seeks Injunction Because Titles Are Similar

The Eminent Authors Pictures, Inc., the producer of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Dangerous Days" has commenced suit in the Supreme Court of the State of New York for an injunction against Thomas H. Ince, Inc., to prevent the further exhibition of the Ince picture, "Dangerous Hours," under that title, reports Goldwyn Pictures.

It is alleged in the bill of complaint that the Eminent Authors Pictures, Inc., has the exclusive and prior right to the use of the title "Dangerous Days," and that the Ince title "Dangerous Hours" is so close in point of resemblance that its use will deceive and mislead the public and will enable the Ince picture to appropriate the benefit of the deservedly widespread popularity and reputation of Mrs. Rinehart's celebrated novel.

W. L. Sherry Leaves New York for California

W. L. Sherry, well known in the film industry, left New York on April 6th, bound for the Coast, on plans concerned with coming productions.

Mississippi Censorship Bill is Discussed

The Legislature of Mississippi has under consideration a bill providing for the censorship of motion pictures by a duly constituted board of censors, who shall report to the Governor and whose methods of procedure shall be explicitly defined.

The duties prescribed are considered reasonable by some and the penalties not drastic. In part, the bill says:

"Only such films as are, in the judgment and discretion of the board of censors, of a moral, educational or amusing and harmless character shall be passed and approved by the board. They shall be stamped or designated in a proper manner and consecutively numbered.

"Punishment for violation of the law is not less than $35 nor more than $300 fine or imprisonment not less than 30 days nor more than six months, or both, for each offense."

Griffith Company Now Working in Michigan

Representatives of David W. Griffith were in Flint, Michigan, on March 30th, making arrangements for the filming of scenes for a new picture, which are to be taken some place between Detroit and Flint.

Hotel arrangements were made for Mr. Griffith and a party of twenty-two, among whom are included Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Robert Harron, and Richard Barthelmess. The party plans to remain eight weeks. The name of the picture was not announced.

R. D. Carver Opens Up New House in Durham, North Carolina

R. D. Carver announces the opening of his new Paris Theatre at Durham, N. C. For three months extensive renovations have been carried on, and with its present seating capacity of eight hundred, recess rooms, smoking room and beautiful interior decorations, the theatre enjoys the reputation of being among the finest in the state. Mr. Carver gave a fine banquet in celebration of the formal opening.

Three More Links Add to Kentucky Chain

The Strand Amusement Company, composed of Colonel Fred Levy and Lee Goldberg of Louisville, John W. Keiler and Lee Keiler of Paducah, has added three more Kentucky theatres to its chain.

The theatres which have just been taken over are the Princess and Dixie at Mayfield, and the Savoy at Princeton, Ky. The consideration amounted to more than $50,000. The Keiler brothers control the Arcade Amusement Company, which operates four theatres in Paducah, Ky.

First National Convention Will Be Well Attended

Many Exhibitors to Turn Out for its Annual Meeting at Chicago

INDICATIONS that a score of representative theatre owners from practically every territory will attend the annual convention of members of First National Exhibitors' Circuit to be held at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, beginning on Monday, April 26, are evidenced through letters and telegrams, seeking additional details about the sub-franchising plan coincident with the work of the Associated First National Pictures organization.

It is toward the perfection of all details regarding the convention that the executive committee of First National and the Exhibitors' Defense Committee, composed of members of the Circuit, are bending every effort in a series of conferences now being held in New York City. Mapping out the proportionate method of sub-franchising the various districts is being accomplished by a large statistical staff, which has been at work for months under the directors of the executive committee, while the Exhibitors' Defense Committee is steadily formulating plans to put before the convention in April.

Prospects are that the convention will be by far the largest of any in the history of the organization. Every section of the United States will be represented by the motion picture interests of the respective territories, and it is likely that exhibitor sentiment throughout the country will manifest itself at this gathering. It is certain that the relative territorial situations in so far as motion pictures are concerned will be given the fullest discussion and it is far more certain that an index as to public attitude toward admission prices and the various types of productions will likewise be gained.

Question as to whether the convention will be confined to franchise holders has been ended with the positive announcement that the gathering will be conducted after the same fashion that characterized the meeting held in 1919 in New York at the Astor. Executives from every First National exchange will assemble for the general consideration of exchange problems. The striking results brought about by the meeting of the managers in 1919 is taken to be certain evidence that the newer and more important problems of exchange management existing today will be solved in a most gratifying manner.

Exhibitors making inquiries as to whether the convention was entirely in the interests of arriving at an equitable basis of sub-franchising the various territories have been informed that while this matter will doubtless loom up as one of the most salient features of the meeting, various other matters of vital import will necessarily play a big part in the convention.

Robertson-Cole in Another Realty Deal

RIGHT on the heels of last week's announcement that Robertson-Cole had closed plans for the erection of a twelve-story building in an "L" shape fronting on both Seventh Avenue and Forty-Eighth Streets, news of another deal broke in realty circles this week.

The valuable corner parcel at Forty-Eighth Street and Seventh Avenue has now been secured and the new building will boast of a third more space and square proportions instead of the "L" shape originally decided.

With office space at a premium in New York and realty values finding unheard of levels, last week's announcement coupled with the news of this new deal caused considerable interest in New York film circles as evidence of the resources possessed by Robertson-Cole.

Probably the most significant feature of First National's plans pending the convention is the fact that a department of statistics has been diligently at work determining percentage allotments for every independent theatre in the country. This work has been made the foundation for the new sub-franchising plan and upon it rests the basis for arriving at figures that not only insure the highest possible returns to exhibitors but at the same time apportion the quotas in such manner that comparative instances will show that overcharging is safeguarded and that each exhibitor will be made a proposition that best insures the interests of his particular theatre, although a uniform and general method of arriving at estimates has been accomplished.

This department has been at work for a period of weeks, and through its careful survey of every theatre in the United States the many intricacies that enter into the aiding and imperiling of various theatres' successes have been brought out with surprising results. The work of this bureau has necessitated intense effort in behalf of the cause of bringing to exhibitors what is declared to be one of the most equitable and helpful propositions ever evolved in the history of the industry. Authorities claim that this is the first time a general research of such scope and thoroughness has ever been attempted. To exhibitors, this compiled information which will be brought forth in concise form at the convention is perhaps the most unique matter that awaits full disclosure at the meeting.

In addition to the sub-franchising work, and the announcements of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee, the question of First National's alliance with additional independent producers is also a proposition of great import. It is said that a number of new production propositions fostered by independent directors, stars and producers, submitted to members of First National, will be given a full hearing at the convention. These offers have come to the Circuit during the last four weeks, and it is almost a certainty that before a final announcement can be made members of the Circuit at the convention will discuss the various possibilities, after which the information will be made public.

The following First National franchise holders will either be present or represented at the convention:

Jule and J. J. Allen, Toronto, Canada; A. H. Blank, Des Moines; Henry Brouse, Ottawa, Canada; J. B. Clark, Pittsburgh, Pa.; R. H. Clark, New York; R. D. Craver, Charlotte, N. C.; W. P. Exhibitors Will Organize for Defense

Willard C. Patterson Sends Out Call to Meet Alleged Invasion by Organizing

CALLS for a meeting of every independent exhibitor in the country to be held in Chicago on April 26 are being sent out this week by Willard C. Patterson, president of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association, and manager of Sig Samuel's Criterion of Atlanta, Ga., for the organization of an Exhibitors' Defense League to evolve a national plan of action in defense of their individual interests against the activities of producing and distributing concerns that are buying, leasing or building theatres in various territories.

According to advices from Atlanta, Mr. Patterson has sent letters and telegrams to hundreds of independent theatre owners throughout the country, outlining a general plan of action, which he proposes as a tentative basis for exhibitor consideration of the most direct and practical solution of the situation. As the president of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association, which has three hundred and seventy-five exhibitor members, Mr. Patterson has been a prominent figure in Southern theatre operators' affairs, especially in directing that organization's offensive against representatives of producing and distributing companies, he declares, have sought to invade the theatre field as competitors of independent exhibitors.

"Theatre competition from producers," he says in a statement accompanying the announcement of his call for a national meeting of independent exhibitors in Chicago, "appears, from the developments since publication three weeks ago of my article, that it was time for a show-down between the independent exhibitor and the producer factions which, even now, are competing with them in a small way, comparatively, and which have plans definitely made for very widespread and formidable opposition.

"Where are we at as independent exhibitors? How long will it be until big producing units whose pictures we are showing today as independents, step into our lobbies and announce that they have leased, bought or built a house across the street and that they need their own pictures for their own screens, and that we can go to the devil or anywhere else we please for a film service that will replace their productions on our individual and independently owned screens.

"I am president of an organization with a membership of three hundred and seventy-five independent exhibitors, and this is exactly the condition and menace that confronts every one of them as something serious to be considered, discussed and settled, finally in the very near future. There is no longer any use in closing our eyes and saying that this producer-exhibitor competition can never amount to anything of consequence. It is that very attitude of passiveness by the independent exhibitors which is making possible the successful and uncombated consummation of producer plans to force their way into every theatre community where present independent exhibitors operate at anything like a profit commensurate with their investment and abilities as showmen.

"The three hundred and seventy-five independent exhibitors, who have chosen me as their leader and president, want to know definitely and exactly just how far these producer-exhibitors intend to go. The responses from exhibitors throughout the country to the trade paper statements of three weeks ago on this question prove conclusively to me that there are scores of independent exhibitors in every territory who want an answer to the same question.

"So that there may be concerted action by the independent owners whose houses in the very near future will be in direct competition with producer-owned theatres, I have sent out a call to every exhibitor whose name I have obtained from the trade papers, from the correspondence of our association membership here in the South, and from my personal acquaintance, to meet at the Congress hotel in Chicago, on Monday, April 26, to organize an Exhibitors' Defense League, or its equivalent, which shall have for its purpose the formulation of a definite means of learning from the several producing concerns already owning and operating theatres exactly what they intend for their future house acquisition plans, and to arrive at a specific understanding of what we, as independent exhibitors, can do to protect our personal and individual interests against their invasion. Producer units that are gaining greater theatre representation by ownership or purchase of controlling interests with every day that passes, in the aggregate have hundreds of thousands of dollars of independent exhibitors' money in their banks as advance deposits on rental contracts. Every week there is collected hundreds of thousands of dollars more for played and paid business. Our advance deposit money is a pledge of our good faith and a certificate of our honesty of intent with the producers and distributors who depend upon us for their existence.

"We have a right to know the facts if this money or any part of it is being used by these producers and distributors to purchase theatre leases or the brick and mortar with which to build theatres and to operate in competition with us as independent exhibitors."

Censorship a Dead Issue in Portland

IN February women of Portland, Oregon, were meeting daily, yea, even twice a day, in their various clubs and organizations. And in all their resolutions, which were numerous and which collectively and individually found their ways into the columns of each and every local paper, the motion picture industry was condemned as showing films harmful both from the moral and intellectual standpoints.

In March, scarcely one month later, a new form of censorship provided for in an ordinance drawn up by the motion picture managers themselves, had been adopted by the city council. The women of the city under the various organizations belonging to the city federation of women clubs, comprising more than 200 associations, were using the motion picture houses for civic purposes.

Censorship became a vital issue in Portland with the showing of the film, "The Thirteenth Commandment." Two scenes, one in which Ethel Clayton is shown selling various pieces of lingerie and one of a "close-up," were ordered eliminated. The film was cut according to orders given by the secretary of the board of censors but because he believed the censor had not been impartial in making the elimination A. C. Raleigh, manager of the Columbia theatre in which the production was booked to show the following day, had the cuts made exactly as ordered and not as probably intended. The result was that in the close-up scene the public was left wondering what had happened, and believing perhaps the worst, whereas if more had been cut as the exhibitor would ordinarily have done of his own accord, the matter would have caused no great alarm to either manager or censor.

Retaliation was immediately obtained by the secretary of the board who issued a warrant for the arrest of C. M. Hill, branch manager for the Famous Players-Lasky corporation in Portland. The warrant was issued because she found Mr. Hill had released the film without the signature of the censor board as the law required, a practice which during recent months had been entirely overlooked. Mr. Hill asked for trial by jury and after a long and tedious court session in which a score of prominent club women testified as to the immoral effect of "The Thirteenth Commandment" and other pictures, he was declared not guilty.

A newspaper and screen advertising campaign was immediately devised by C. S. Jensen, of Jensen and Herberg the-

Crandall Explains Americanization Work

Chairman of Exhibitors' Branch Urges Co-operation in Campaign

HARRY N. CRANDALL of Washington, D. C., chairman of the exhibitors' branch of the Americanization Committee of the Motion Picture Industry has just returned from a trip which brought him as far West as California. He was in a conference with various exhibitors in nearly all the larger cities of the country.

Mr. Crandall was very enthusiastic over the way that the exhibitors of the country are taking hold of the Americanization program of the motion picture industry and has set to work on a very elaborate plan in the hopes that every single exhibitor in the country will get behind the movement and will make it a success.

The following statement has been sent out by Mr. Crandall to exhibitors this week:

"I have just returned from a trip across the country and am proud of the way that the exhibitors of the country are responding to the appeal of our government in its fight against Bolshevists. I find that the exhibitors are solidly behind this movement and intend to make a success of it.

"However, there yet remains a great deal of work to be done and it is for this reason that I am writing to you today. Several months ago the United States government, through a joint Senate and House committee on education called upon the motion picture industry of this country to mobilize its forces and to fight the great spirit of unrest that was sweeping over the country. To have been selected for this important work was the result of the wonderful results that the industry obtained for the government during the war. We were called upon at that time and we proved to be 100 per cent Americans and I do not know of a single exhibitor in this country, and there are nearly 17,000, who did not prove to be a true American.

"We have now the first real opportunity to show to this country that we are a great force and that we can be united to fight the enemy.

"The producers have agreed to make fifty-two pictures and they will be produced at the rate of one a week. It is our duty to see that we show every single one of these pictures in our theatres. Already the various stars are at work competing against each other for the honors of having made the best picture. The directors are at work in the various studios throughout the country making these pictures which will be released through the various distributing companies.

"I want to impress upon you at this time that not a single cent of profit is to be made by anyone connected with the industry. Instead, I know that producers and distributors will lose thousands of their own dollars in order that this campaign shall be a success.

"I also want to impress upon the exhibitors the importance of using the trailers that have been made. They are now being sent out by the various distributing companies and should be used at the end of all big feature pictures.

"The Hon. Franklin K. Lane, former Secretary of the Interior, and chairman of the Americanization Committee of the Motion Picture Industry spent much time preparing and writing these trailers himself. The trade papers of February 28 very kindly devoted much space and reproduced the quotations. If you have not already done so, will you not have all slides made at once containing the subject matters of these trailers and show three or four at each performance. In my recent trip throughout the country I found that many exhibitors were doing this and were meeting with good results."

Saengers Credited With Publicity Stunt

WHAT is described as the greatest press-agent story ever put over in the South has been running daily in New Orleans for over a week, or more precisely, since the Federal Trade Commission instituted its investigation of the Saenger Amusement Company on charges of operating in restraint of trade. For three weeks, the New Orleans Daily States has been publishing on its front pages articles, some running over half-a-column or more onto an inside page, calling the Saenger organization to task for not bringing Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna" and Douglas Fairbanks in "When the Clouds Roll By" to New Orleans.

Answering these articles every day, E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager for Saengers, has been given front page space in the New Orleans Item, the only paper in New Orleans which receives advertising patronage of Saengers. Mr. Richards has led the States on and on through a winding path. Friday he shoved them over the cliff with this announcement:

"And all the time I have had in my possession contracts for these pictures."

In a two column box on the front page in all editions of the Item of last Friday, Mr. Richards said:

"I knew that when we decided it would be a sheer waste of money to advertise in the States with its limited circulation, that we would be attacked by that paper.

"I knew that I was to be made the victim of a frame-up so I framed back and put mine over. I wonder if the States remembers the rather inelegant expression of its publisher Robert L. Ewing, to me when he said, 'You've got the guts of a government mule, Richards. Do you know what we can do to any amusement enterprise that does not meet our terms?' From that moment I began to plan.

"Do you remember when Kenneth McGaffey, who is a super city slicker, and likewise Mary Pickford's press agent, was in New Orleans last month he was interviewed at great length by the Daily States."

Incidentally, Mr. McGaffey was interviewed by the Motion Picture News correspondent and gave him the same interview which he had given the Daily States and which was published in the March 27th issue of Motion Picture News.

"Kenneth is some actor himself," Mr. Richards continued in his front page story, "and when he talked for publication he 'registered' indignation, wrath and everything because he apparently had been turned down by Saenger interests.

"And all the while McGaffey was putting on his little sketch we were using him.

"I knew the States would use the Federal Trade hearing in New Orleans as an excuse to vent its venom. So I fed our enemy with the United-Artists to rent Tulane-theatre-story, and the hook and line were swallowed.

"We could have kept up the press agent stunt indefinitely if it had not finally dawned on the 'astute' mind of the States to query the United Artists, Pickford, Fairbanks, Chaplin and Griffith, regarding the appearance of the pictures here. Of course the answer received by the States was that the pictures were signed for by the Saengers," Mr. Richard concludes.

The States on the same day printed a telegram, dated that day (Friday), from the United Artists office in New York that the contract for the "Big Four" pictures had been signed that day (Friday). This was explained by Mr. Richards this way:

"Documents on file at the Saenger Amusement Company's office will show that we accepted the terms of the United Artists for the 'Big Four' pictures March 17. The telegram which the States printed, in which it is stated that we signed the contract Friday, merely refers to the routing of the pictures and the dates. The pictures were ours the minute we accepted the terms three weeks ago. The State's fight was begun after we had obtained the pictures, and we are very grateful for that paper's free publicity."

Protest on Film Use of Marcus Loew's Name

A resolution was passed at a meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York on April 6, to forward a request to Richard A. Rowland, President of Metro, to remove Marcus Loew's name from productions of that concern. The principal reason advanced was that Loew's name is invariably associated in the public's mind with his vaudeville enterprises.

Election of officers was held with the following result: President, William Brandt; 1st Vice President, A. Landau; 2nd Vice President, Charles Goldreyer; Secretary, H. Gainsboro; Treasurer, S. G. Bock; Sergeant-at-Arms, Al Harston. Finance Committee: Max Barr, Sol Saphier and Samuel Sonin. Board of Directors; David Picker, S. W. Anderson, John Manheimer, Harry DeG. Robinson, Rudolph Sanders, David J. Hennessy, Charles Steiner and Louis Blumenthal.

Sunday Bill Up to Rhode Island Legislature

The bill presented in the State Legislature of Rhode Island, to legalize moving picture shows on Sunday, came out of the hands of the committee recently with a favorable report and recommendation that it be passed. It will be acted upon next Tuesday by the House of Representatives, which body it is believed will pass it. Some little question arises yet over the attitude the Senate will show toward the measure, although with the legislation passed during the past year, legalizing Sunday sports and opening up the Sabbath here, many believe it will pass the higher body.

Charity Basis for Sunday Picture Is Opposed

The ministers of Carthage, N. Y., a village of 5,000 inhabitants, have come out during the last few days as being opposed to a scheme that would result in the motion picture theatres of the village being allowed to operate on Sundays with the understanding that the receipts would be used for charitable and religious purposes. A resolution to that effect was recently adopted by the village board, but now the ministers, through their own association, say that they want none of it and further more that the whole plan is but a commercialization of the Sabbath.

Sampson Quits Position as Mayflower Officer

Announcement was made early this week by A. W. Sampson of his resignation as assistant treasurer of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. Mr. Sampson is leaving Mayflower to re-enter the advertising field, in which he was engaged prior to the war.

Independent Producers to Form National Body

DURING the course of an interview with Joe Brandt of the National Film, it was ascertained by a representative of the "News" that the independent producers assembled in conference during the present week at the Hotel Astor had already taken steps to perfect a chartered organization of independent producers, which is to be national in scope. This phase of the work is entrusted to the hands of Harry Sherman, who is the chairman of the Formation Committee.

Mr. Brandt, who is chairman of the tentative organization, will leave for the Coast on April 20th for the purpose of discussing the proposed organization with those independent producers who have not been represented at the conference up to the present. When asked if the producers' organization was affiliated in any way with the recently organized Federated Film Exchanges, Mr. Brandt replied in the negative and added that the producers' association was to be a separate and distinct body. No formal statement will be issued, said Mr. Brandt, until the details of the organization are completed.

atres. Through the editorial columns of the daily newspapers Mr. Jensen stated the cause of the motion picture industry. He described the present system as a one woman regime, obviously unfair, and proposed a new method whereby the city appoint one person, the film men another and these two choose a third, making a board of three to settle the question of censorship.

Slides stating this stand and asking the expression of the public on the question of censorship were run in each of the five Jensen and Von Herberg theatres. Several score replies were received and these the daily newspapers incorporated into news stories. Just one change was made in the original ordinance as submitted by Mr. Jensen to the city council. Club women appearing en masse at the meeting of the city council demanded that the third member of the new board as provided by the ordinance in question be appointed from one of their number. Their request was recognized by the city council, which agreed to choose from three names submitted to them by the club women the member of the board which the city has the authority to appoint. This person with the representative of the film men will then choose the third member of the new board.

By the middle of March when the ordinance was formally and finally adopted the question of motion picture censorship was a dead issue. Friendly relations have now been established between club leaders and managers who a month ago were intolerant. A spirit of understanding and cooperation now exists between the two with the mothers of children eager to look upon the modern cinema as a worth while, educational type of entertainment.

Referendum Probable on Maryland Sunday Bill

The Iverson Bill submitting the question of Sunday moving pictures in Baltimore to a referendum vote by the people of the city has been passed by the Maryland Senate at Annapolis. There is but little doubt that Governor Ritchie will set his signature to the bill, thus giving the people a chance to vote on the matter at the polls in November.

Exhibitors and others in back of the Iverson Bill are now certain that Sunday moving pictures in Baltimore will be an actuality before the end of 1920. The bill was defeated by the Senate on Friday night and the following day, on the vote of Senator Sproesser, it reconsidered the matter. The vote was 14 to 10 in favor of it.

There is little doubt in the minds of exhibitors and others who were behind the bill, that the people will express their desire for Sunday movies by means of the ballot. That the majority of Baltimoreans have long wanted a more liberal Sunday has been felt by many and realized by the reform factions which fought strongly against submitting such bills as Mr. Iverson's measure to the people. The passage of the bill, however, came as a surprise because it was believed that the reformers were more strongly represented in the Legislature than the exhibitors.

Exhibitors of Baltimore who were favorable to the bill are elated at its passage.

"I have been satisfied all along that the public wants Sunday movies," said Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the Whitehurst Theatrical Enterprises which control the New, Parkway, Garden and New Century theatres. "This has been clearly demonstrated at all patriotic and charitable meetings held on Sundays at my theatres. I believe that the majority should rule. The reformers should be taught to confine their efforts to those people who require moral uplift."

George A. McDermitt, manager of Loew's Hippodrome and who has been engaged for the last three years in fighting for a liberal Sunday, said:

"The referendum will remove all doubt as to what the majority of the public wants and whatever this decision is, it will be acceptable to the exhibitors. We merely wanted to put the thing legally up to the voters and have succeeded in doing so. The next move is up to them."

Directors' Ass'n to Hold Big Ball April 10th

The Ball of the Motion-Picture Directors' Association, to be held at the Hotel Biltmore on the evening of April 10th, promises to be one of the biggest social functions of the season in filmdom. An elaborate dancing and musical program is being arranged, and members of the entertainment committee give assurance of many surprises. From the advance sale of tickets, it promises to be a "big" night.

Arthur James Will Open Own Business Shortly

Arthur James, who successively directed the publicity and advertising for Mutual Film Corporation in the days of its greatest prominence, the Metro Pictures Corporation for four years during its growth from small beginnings to one of the big factors in the industry and for Fox Film Corporation since last July, will on April 17 begin business for himself. Mr. James will conduct a general advertising and publicity business, handling both personal and company accounts, giving especial attention to campaigns on big pictures.

He will have his headquarters in New York City and will have branch offices in Washington and Chicago. Mr. John Bowman will be in charge of the Chicago office in the Monadnock Bldg., and the Washington representative will be Theodore M. Knappen, with offices in the Southern Bldg. Carolyn Lowrey, formerly of the Morning Telegraph, will be attached to Mr. James' staff and will leave for California in two weeks in this connection.

Mr. James made the following announcement: "It has been my belief, after an experience of more than six years in publicity and advertising activities for motion pictures, that as a selling force it represented fifty per cent in business importance. I do not believe that publicity will make a poor picture a success, nor that an indifferent director or actor can be elevated to greatness solely by the same process, but I do believe that publicity will make a great picture greater and enable directors and stars to receive their true rewards both in fame and in money if they are well advised regarding their relationship to the public and to the exhibitor.

"I tendered my resignation to Fox Film Corporation with a sense of deep personal regret because of the fine spirit, which pervades the organization and because of the full and free opportunities given to me to be active in its behalf, and I cannot omit a word of the highest praise for the showmanship and the fine personal qualities of Mr. William Fox and Mr. W. R. Sheehan, the big figures in the great organization.

"I am glad to say that I begin business for myself with the cordial good wishes of my friends and with active accounts with which the public and the trade will shortly be made, I trust, very much acquainted. The National Council of Defense and the American Business Association will receive my immediate attention together with my motion picture clients. In each case I will give the campaigns my personal attention."

Mr. James has been identified with the active growth of the motion picture industry, having served as vice-president with the National Association and as the first president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers.

Bill to Amend Operators' License Law Proposed

A bill introduced in the New York State Assembly recently, seeks to amend the general city law in connection with licenses granted to motion picture operators. The bill is now in the cities committee and with the adjournment only about two weeks distant, there is little likelihood that the bill will be reported out and passed.

Under its provisions, the mayor or the licensing authority of the city is given the power to appoint a board of examiners who will pass on the fitness of the applicant for an operator's license. One of the trio must be a motion picture operator, the second is to be an employer of motion picture operators, while the third will be a city employee.

In order to get a license, under the provisions of the bill, the applicant must not only show a practical knowledge of moving picture projection apparatus, as well as the electrical connections, but he must know the optical system and the various safety and fire prevention devices of machines as well.

Chester Pictures Not for Independent Market

The statement recently published in the trade press to the effect that C. L. Chester Productions, Inc., is ready to furnish a travel release to the independent market, is branded as inaccurate by Raymond S. Harris, sales manager of the company.

The Chester name, so long sponsor for Chester Outing Pictures, will continue to be seen exclusively upon these pictures, he stated.

Largest Japanese Company Is Incorporated

Announcement is made by the International Motion Picture Company, Ltd., of Japan, of their recent incorporation with a capital of ten million yen. This is said to be the largest motion picture company registered on the island. Bunji Okada, a member of the house of peers, is president of the new organization, while the board of directors consists of many well known business men, among whom are Kisaburo Kobayashi and Shinji Sekiya, already associated with the motion picture industry, who will act as managing directors.

With the corporation is amalgamated the Natural Color Cinematograph Company, Ltd., Tokio, which controls more than 400 picture houses in Japan. "Our purpose," announces the company, "is to devote ourselves entirely to the progress of the industry, by building up the up-to-date theatres, and installing in them the very best American projection machines, and showing the world's best productions only, to catch up with the American standard. We do not want to have the 'penny show,' but are desirous of attaining the top mark."

A representative of the company will be sent to this country in order that the International Motion Picture Company may be kept in close touch with American productions. Further details of the organization are expected with his arrival in New York.

C. S. Jensen Appointed to Portland Censor Board

C. S. Jensen, senior member of the motion picture firm of Jensen and Von Herberg, has been appointed by George Baker, mayor of Portland, Oregon, to represent the film interests on the new censor board. The board has been created at the request of the film men to replace a board controlled by one woman.

The new regime will have three members, one appointed from names selected by the local film men, another appointed by the city council and a third appointed by these two. Upon great agitation from the club women of the city, the council consented to choose its member from names selected by the club women. Mrs. Alexander Thompson, president of the city federation of women's clubs and a member of the last Oregon legislature, was appointed.

H. Fichtenberg to Put on "Tick-Tack-Toe"

Herman Fichtenberg, one of the vice-presidents of the Saenger Amusement Corporation and a well-known figure in film circles, has entered the legitimate field with Arthur Klein. They will put on the musical comedy, "Tick-Tack-Toe," which has been reorganized. The comedy will open at Rockaway Beach in June.

What Does the Other Fellow Get?

Here Are Recently Completed Statistics That Cover the Country's Admission Prices

A PRACTICAL statistical compilation affording exhibitors infinite opportunities to justify their respective admission prices and at the same time to compare personal responsibilities with those of several hundred showmen has just been completed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Covering a total of 238 theatres in eighteen states and twenty-one cities, this bit of practical research has brought out a number of general axioms, several theories that have held true under severe tests and the outstanding fact that only about five per cent of the first and second-run theatres seating 1,000 people or more have a smaller top-admission price than 25 cents for night performances.

Seeking further than surface reasons for the fact that the larger houses charge the highest of admission prices and generally are the most successful even in a proportionate way, First National's compilers find that usually a special feature attraction is responsible for the high scale of prices. A typical accounting for the fact cites the case of a Western theatre where a uniform 20-cent admission price had been charged. A feature was booked and prices were boosted to 35 cents. "Auction of Souls," pointed out the way to bigger receipts and profits. The management decided to keep the admission price at 35 cents for a two weeks' tryout. The idea was a success. Special features were booked and today the price is popular locally. If there is an exhibitor conclusion that can be drawn it is the fact that experience has shown that the most practicable method of raising the admission scale is to book a special feature, advance prices and through the use of succeeding features keep the price up to that scale.

A number of interesting exhibitor observations can be drawn from the table of statistics that follow below. For instance, contrary to the law of "larger theatre, larger admission prices," it was discovered that the Auditorium Theatre at Saginaw, Mich., seating 3,000 people—one hundred per cent more than any other theatre in the city—has a 10-15 cent admission scale, whereas eight second-run theatres in the same city seating between 250 and 300 people have a uniform admission price of 20 cents.

Another novel case may be cited concerning a condition at Pittsburgh, Pa. Here, three theatres, the William Penn, Garden and Alhambra, all seating between 1,000 and 1,200 have an admission scale that ranges from 17 to 22 cents. These theatres are second-run houses, whereas the Grand, Olympic and Liberty, all seating more than 2,000, have a scale that ranges from 25 to 35 cents.

It is interesting to note that only two out of twenty San Francisco theatres seat less than 1,000 people and that the top-admission-price goes no lower than 20 cents. The Central theatre of that city, with 400 seats, charges a general admission price of 25 cents. Prices here are on a higher scale than elsewhere, regardless of what may be said about inexpensive living conditions in California. The Imperial, Strand, Rialto, California, Portola, Tivoli and others have a top price of 75 cents or more and a number of second-run houses have a scale, the top price of which is 50 cents.

Denver presents another interesting case to the exhibitor. In this city are twenty second-run houses charging an admission price of 10 cents. Seating capacity of these theatres ranges from 50 to 960 seats. The Thompson theatre here, with 1,100 seats charge night prices of 20 and 25 cents.

One of the several first-run houses with a seating capacity of 1,000 or less and charging an admission price of 20 cents for night performances is the Alhambra theatre at Indianapolis.

An odd condition exists at Springfield where three second-run theatres have a proportionately higher minimum admission scale than the first-run houses. The smallest admission price of the Phillips, Strand and Garden second-run-houses is 17 cents while that of the Palace, Broadway and another theatre is 10 and 15 cents.

The statistics compiled by First National Exhibitors' Circuit follow in table form:

A novel exploitation idea is being employed this week at the Fox Audubon theatre, New York, when the entire prison set used for the filming of "Les Miserables" was set up in the lobby and about the front of the theatre for the showing of the feature at this house. The novel lobby display is attracting great crowds. One of the itinerant sidewalk orators who are to be found talking politics and the brotherhood of man in that vicinity took advantage Monday night of the crowds in front of the theatre and being somewhat informed on the story of Jean Valjean, used the opportunity to spout on the gospel of the poor, glorifying the epic and dramatic work of fiction in such extravagances of his limited speech that his hearers turned to the box office in numbers and bought seats. Finding his own audience diminished he took up a collection, bought a ticket himself and went inside to learn more about what he had been talking.

Views of the "Desert Gold" exploitation at Des Moines as described in the story below

Real Circus Used for Exploitation Purposes

Des Moines has recently been treated to some excellent picture exploitation when the Royal theatre of that city played "Desert Gold."

The outstanding feature of the campaign was a circus parade each day of the film's showing at the Royal.

The cost of staging a circus pageant in ordinary circumstances would be prohibitive, but learning that the Yankee Robinson Circus was still in winter quarters in one of the suburbs, the Messrs. Van Dyke and Hill, communicated with the circus executives and obtained their co-operation, the arrangement giving the "big show" outfit over to the picture folk for three hours daily during the run.

The procession passed through the principal streets and then by daily diverse routes reached the Royal, where a pick-anniny band and a troupe of Tasmania troubadours joined in rendering two songs.

In addition to the circus stunt the Royal management had a mule pack train, representing one of the big scenes, parading through the streets. The Messrs. Van Dyke and Hill also evoked interest in "Desert Gold" through bookshop cooperation, display windows in the department stores and big book stores being given over to promoting the sale of the novel all during the presentation.

"Doubles" Harold Lloyd With Great Results

"Bill" Williams, press representative for the Auditorium, at South Bend, Ind., is one of the boys who knows what a touch of local color will do in helping to put over a picture. Some time ago Williams "spotted" a "double" for Harold Lloyd in the audience of the theatre. The chap was a dead "ringer" for the screen comedian even to the shell-rimmed glasses effected by Lloyd in his pictures. Williams and the manager of the theatre, who was told of the striking resemblance, noted that he was seen at the Auditorium more often when a Lloyd comedy was being shown and from this fact the big idea was evolved.

Williams began very assiduously to cultivate the acquaintance of the stranger who looked like Lloyd, being a good publicity man and already having an idea in mind, an ulterior one to create a word of mouth advertising for "His Royal Slyness," which was scheduled for a showing at the Auditorium in the near future. The idea was suggested by the six-sheet poster for this comedy which shows Harold Lloyd and Mildred Davis seated on the back of a donkey in grotesque costume and with Lloyd holding suspended from the end of the stick and just before the eyes of the donkey a wisp of hay. The "Double" was asked to pose as Lloyd and he readily accepted. The next difficulty was in securing a "ringer" for Mildred Davis. After a search of two days a young lady was located employed in a local restaurant who was a second Mildred Davis, from the shy smile to Miss Davis' demure manner. She was persuaded to do her bit with "Harold Lloyd" and all was set.

The donkey and both "Doubles" were rigged out as per the six sheet, and permission of the Police Chief was obtained to allow frequent parades up and down the busiest streets during the better part of two days and nights preceding the opening play date at our house. Banners carried by small boys who strolled along behind the big show, carried the notice that the favorite comedian could be seen at the Auditorium March 1st, 2nd and 3rd in his latest comedy, "His Royal Slyness." This stunt created the greatest excitement every time it made its appearance on the downtown streets and the result was that the Auditorium packed 'em in for three days and nights.

Imperial, San Francisco Believes in Window Displays

"Nick" Ayer, director of publicity and advertising for the Imperial theatre, San Francisco did not neglect the "tie-up" in his exploitation of "On With the Dance" On this page is shown three of his co-operative window displays for this picture The result of this sort of advertising is such that the Imperial never neglects an opportunity to obtain space in any window located in the business section

League Official Says Original Story Preferable

Jules H. Michael States Patrons Call Most Adaptations "Old Stuff"

"ONE of the best things that could happen in this industry just now would be the establishment of a department of photoplay-writing in our leading institutions of learning," said Jules H. Michael, chairman of the executive committee of the New York State Exhibitors' League and manager of the Victoria and Regent theatres, Buffalo, in the course of an interview with the MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative.

"I have found that the original story especially prepared for the screen is more in favor than adaptations of stage works," continued Mr. Michael. "If we look back over the biggest film successes of the past several months, we will observe that the stories written originally for the screen have been the real box office winners. The high prices demanded by owners of copyrights on stage plays when approached by film producers who wish to adapt them for the screen, are all out of proportion to their worth as screen material. I noticed recently that a well known director had paid close to $200,000 for the screen rights of an old-time stage production. When this comes along in its screen form, it will mean nothing to the average layman. He will only observe that its title is one that was very familiar in grandma's day; the name of the director will mean nothing to him. The average patron's observation will be 'Old stuff!' If the same producer had offered some noted author the same amount to write an original story for the screen, it would have been much more reasonable.

"Many of the leading stars recognize the value of original stories in which to star and have as a consequence employed their own plot makers. John Emerson and Anita Loos started the ball rolling for Douglas Fairbanks and are keeping it going for the Talmadge sisters. Clara Kimball Young has found her greatest successes in original works, so have Charlie Chaplin, William S. Hart, Nazimova, Charles Ray and a host of others. The favor and popularity with which these productions meet are the best proof that they are on the right track.

"Surely this industry has grown big enough to attract its own story makers. We should not be forced to depend on rehashing stage material for film consumption. 'Hearts of the World' could never be equaled by any stage play. Neither could hundreds of other famous screen classics produced in the past few years.

"Columbia University has taken a step in the right direction by installing a scenario department and Thomas H. Ince is to be commended for offering handsome prizes to students who write the best plots during their course of study. With such encouragement we shall soon get some real gems in screen literature.

"Leading producers should attempt to attract more of the noted authors to exclusive writing for the shadow stage. Maeterlinck is now studying the technique of the silent drama preparatory to writing an original theme for the screen. Why not seek Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Sir J. M. Barrie, John Fox, Jr., and countless others to follow in Maeterlinck's path. We already have Rex Beach devoting much of his time to screen authorship. So far the result of his film work has been most successful.

"A majority of the adaptations of stage plays mean nothing when they reach the screen. They may be successful 'on the boards,' but they seem to lack 'punch' when they arrive on the silver sheet. Many of these stage plays adaptations of which we have been hearing so much about of late owed much of their success to the spoken words in the play. Arriving on the screen minus these oral outbursts the same plays fall down sadly in many cases. The plots are not sufficient, consequently elaborate padding is resorted to in an effort to elongate the tale into five or six reels. Even a great star is not enough to 'pull them over.'

"With the establishing of photoplay departments in colleges there would undoubtedly be a rush of students possessing real talent and a desire to learn the technique of scenario writing. Many young men and women are enthusiastic over such a profession, but they lack knowledge of the construction of successful film stories. Latent ability would undoubtedly be brought out in countless instances. Perhaps some of our leading scenario experts would be glad to accept positions in colleges, providing the compensation was a fair one. Here would be the producers' opportunity to endow the photoplay departments and possibly the exhibitors' leagues of the various states would also aid in the work.

"I believe that this subject is one of the most vital problems facing the motion picture industry, and one which will bear deep thought, investigation and encouragement."

Capitol Opera Is "Hansel and Gretel"

THE Capitol theatre opera this week is "Hansel and Gretel," the Ethelbert Humperdinck composition founded on the Grimm fairy tale of "Babes in the Wood."

The version the Capitol company is singing is in three acts and three scenes as was the original and requires the services of a chorus only in the very last few minutes of the presentation.

In this fact it does not appeal to the writer to be an exceptional bill for stock purposes, since we have observed a greater interest by the Capitol audiences in the ensemble numbers than for the solo or duet renditions.

The policy of presenting opera with a picture program seems to be meeting with favor at this theatre, if we are to judge by attendance.

The performance attended by the writer was capacity, which may be considered exceptional for a theatre seating 5,400 people.

Artist Wenger has provided some very good sets for the opera, especially so in the act three exterior.

Another Story Telling of St. Louis Presentations

WILLIAM GOLDMAN, director general of the chain of St. Louis theatres headed by King's and Pershing's, succeeding Louis K. Sidney, who has removed to Detroit in a similar capacity, is a firm believer in the efficiency of the lobby display as a means of attracting the public into the theatre.

Two of his latest creations were in connection with Douglas Fairbanks' "When the Clouds Roll By," which played the Pershing, and Clara Kimball Young's "Eyes of Youth," the attraction at the King. In each of these pictures Mr. Goldman selected something that would lend atmosphere and proceeded to get it over. "When the Clouds Roll By" suggested rain, and a prologue was arranged depicting a storm. The gathering of the clouds, lightning, thunder, rain and then the passing of the storm was presented realistically. Mr. Goldman went to the extent of using real water, all of which was symbolic and entirely in keeping with the theme of the Fairbanks story.

The mysticism of crystal gazing suggests the Orient, and, as rain was used for the Fairbanks picture, incense was selected as the best agent for "Eyes of Youth." In this case there was a speaking part in the prologue. The curtains parted, showing a yogi seated on a throne before the crystal. He rises, salaams and appeals to the globe to reveal to him the secrets of the unknown. However, the incense is the vital bit of the sketch. It is replenished by two attendants in costume and permeates every corner of the theatre, placing the man who comes in from the street in a mood which will enable him to appreciate "Eyes of Youth."

George Fisher, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., isn't kicking about the alleged domestic difficulties in the Chaplin family. From his standpoint it is most timely, for the front page news of trouble in the Chaplin home broke the week preceding his Sunday opening with "The Inferior Sex." The beautiful lobby of the Alhambra theatre was all dolled up with decorations referring to sex strife and what could be better than having strife right in the Chaplin's own home. Of course, no one wished trouble to come to the famous comedian and his pretty wife, but since it must come—well, exhibitors aren't kicking over the extraordinary publicity.

The Alhambra press agent employed some unique teasers in her advertising campaign. One was a striking pose of Milton Sills in which he asks: "Who is the boss in your home?" The name of the play was not given until the Saturday ads, all others merely referring to the "picture" coming to the Alhambra. The Saturday ad had photographs of the star saying: "Keep a Man Guessing—that is the way to hold his love."

A unique lobby display included scales, bearing a cut-out figure of a man on one balance and a woman's figure on the other, were hung over the door, with the picture of lovely Mildred in the center. This scale, by an electrical arrangement, tipped gently first one way and then the other throughout the time the theatre was open. The doors beneath bore panels, with snappy phrases concerning the relative status of man and woman, the name of the play and the theatre, together with the date. The panels on the side walls of the lobby were arranged with cut-out figures, almost life size. One side bore figures of men at work, the cobbler, tailor, munition maker, soldier, woodsman and blacksmith. Above the panel was the inscription: "Which is the inferior sex? Ever since the stone age, man in his opinion has been the master, woman the slave. Is the fighter superior to the home maker? See Mildred Harris Chaplin in 'The Inferior Sex' next week."

The corresponding panel on the other side bore women's figures, cut out of heavy pasteboard and looking decidedly lifelike, as they posed as typist, a woman at the washtub, another rocking a cradle, and another sweeping the floor.

A few feet of reel advertising the play bore the same tip-tilting scales, with the reading matter advertising the tense situations in the play.

Mitchell Has "Morgue" All His Own

Keeping files of photographs of motion picture actors and actresses has proved to be most lucrative as an exhibitor hobby for W. Griffith Mitchell, manager of the Majestic Gardens Theatre, at Kalamazoo, one of the string of Butterfield houses in Michigan. The fact that he has on file photographs of practically every star of the past ten years has listed him as a valuable acquaintance with every publisher in the city. The consequence is that the Majestic Gardens ranks high in the list of Michigan houses as a receiver of free publicity notices.

Almost continually present day stars or stars of the past do something which sends a story about them into every newspaper office in the country. It is not often that these stories happen just at the time when they can be used to the best advantage by an exhibitor, but usually the newspapers want a picture to run with the story, and are obligated to the exhibitor who they know can and will supply them. The result is that they are always willing to do favors for this exhibitor in the publicity line.

Mitchell has put himself in a position of being listed with every newspaper as a source for photos of practically any star that ever gained fame. Recently this fact resulted in an added advantage. The Kalamazoo Saturday Night was started as a publication for the weekly review of happenings in the Michigan City. The editors had decided upon artistic photographs of prominent people as cover designs, and naturally went to newspaper offices to inquire as to where such photos could be procured. Mitchell was mentioned by almost every office and the result was that the backers of the new weekly sought him. The first issue was to come out the Saturday evening prior to a week's run of "Two Weeks," at the Majestic Gardens. Mitchell selected one of his photographs of Constance Talmadge, the star, and offered it to them for publication if an announcement was carried. They accepted.

The following week he supplied them with the photograph of another star and then the third week, and now he is practically the cover editor of the weekly, deciding what photograph to run and writing the caption printed under it. Needless to say the photo on the cover of the Saturday Night is usually the star of the production to be run the following week at the Majestic Gardens.

Stunt Contests Get Children at Richmond, Ky.

"Stunt" contests based upon ideas to get school children interested in winning prizes has been used to build up a most successful patronage by Miss Alice Ward, manager of the Grand theatre, at Richmond, Ky. She uses contests on practically every feature shown in the house and each one of them is originated with the idea of furnishing a real cause for effort that will be interesting to children of school age.

She has found that children are the best carriers of advertising that exist and therefore she caters chiefly to children, knowing that their parents and other adult relatives are bound to be interested in anything that captivates the mind and activity of the school pupils. Each contest is based so closely upon productions at the theatre that none of the effect of the advertising is lost.

Special exploitation is acquired by Miss Ward simply by enlarging the scope of the contest she decides upon, or else running more than one. On a recent showing of Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" she originated two contests, one confined exclusively to boys. In one contest she offered a prize to the boy who could make himself up into the best imitation of the screen comedian. She had all the entries, after they had donned their costumes and make-ups, parade through the business streets of the city before the awards were made. In order to interest girls, also, she offered a second list of prizes for the best cartoon of Chaplin.

Miss Ward does not neglect the advantage of lobby displays because of her interests in contests. For the same showing of "Shoulder Arms" she had the frames in the lobby, as well as a special show case, filled with trophies brought back by Richmond boys who were "over there" during the fighting. On the opening day a large cut-out symbolic figure of "Shoulder Arms" was also displayed in the lobby.

Easter Vocal Novelty Staged at Rivoli

THE Rivoli theatre, New York, is staging a musical novelty in honor of Easter this week which merits description.

The title is "Easter Dawn" and the number is arranged in four scenes, each provided with a special stage setting.

The first scene is a pantomime and posing act by three girls, in which the trumpet of dawn is used. There is no music for this number except the orchestral accompaniment. Scenes two and three are very similar to one, all the performers and the stage settings being in silhouette.

The fourth scene is a vocal rendition of appropriate music for the week and the stage setting is suggestive of the church also. Garbed in choir garments the Rivoli chorus is grouped on stairs rising to an apex surrounding a white clad figure of a woman holding a white dove.

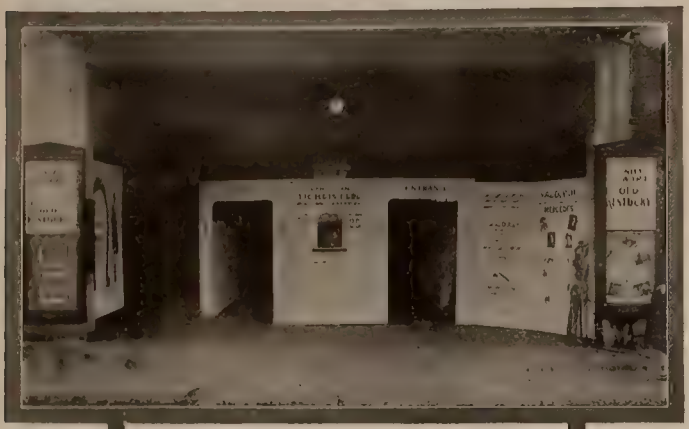
On each side of the stage attendants display Easter lilies and these flowers are also used as decorations along a painted balustrade which hides the feet of the performers. The backing for this scene is black and white pleated cloth masked on all sides. The number is termed a fantasy for chorus, ballet and orchestra and the choreography is arranged by Miss Dixie Wilson. The Rivoli chorus of excellent voices in the last scene succeeds in making this number exceptional entertainment.

Making a Bid for "Word of Mouth" Advertising

Aiming his exploitation at a source that would engender the maximum amount of word of mouth publicity, George Fischer, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, arranged with his exploitation director, Eddie Weisfeldt, to picturize the title of his attraction.

The scenes which Mr. Fischer devised were likenesses of the thought suggested by "The River's End." The pictures which were conceived were more like miniature stage settings than lobby designs.

A week in advance of the showing of "The River's End," a harmonious bit of scenery that suggested a woodland retreat was worked out with the aid of birch bark, rough shaggy bark and bits of natural woods, together with branches of pine and fir. Using papier mache rocks that bore every resemblance to the real thing, an unusual bit of beauty that depicted a small waterfall was arranged. The papier mache rocks were covered with real branches of fir and pine. A small rustic bridge built half way down the "mountain side" served to complete the illusion. The word matter used with this display was designed by bits of wood that gave a rustic effect.



As an appropriate stage setting, Mr. Fischer designed a combination of real trees and shrubs surrounding a pool of clear sparkling water that well picturized the river's end. At one end of this scene a tiny waterfall was seen. A small spotlight thrown on this waterfall gave a splendid effect to the entire setting. The shrubs and ferns about the pool of water were of the various shades of green one might find in a natural bit of scenery. One tree at either side showed the pink blossoms of a wild crab apple species.

Washington Post Printing Great "Movie" Section

If the Service Bureau was to give space to commendatory articles on all of the good photoplay sections which newspapers, especially the Sunday editions are now editing, it would mean the elimination of too many exploitation stories and it is for this reason that we are chary of praise in this connection under ordinary circumstances.

However, the pages of the Washington Post (Sunday edition) for the past few weeks are of such unusual merit when it comes to the department titled in this publication as "The Screen" that we take this occasion to offer congratulations to the paper and its photoplay editor. Also to Washington exhibitors who are enjoying the service rendered by this department in aiding them in "putting over the show." It is evident that the Post is doing all that it can to promote the motion picture industry in Washington and the success of its efforts is extremely praiseworthy.

Lobby Displays in the Smaller Towns Are Practicable

(Left)
From the "show me" city of Missouri comes a photograph of the lobby display which W. E. Sturgis, advertising manager of the Hippodrome theatre, designed and built for his engagement of "In Old Kentucky." While not expensive the display is attractive and should appeal to every manager as a model of its kind

(Below)
Putting atmosphere into a lobby at small cost was the achievement of Manager H. G. Plath of the Crescent theatre, Temple, Texas, for his showing of "Heart o' the Hills." The ticket booth was made into a log cabin and a real tree was placed in the lobby. Note in the cut the life-like cut-out of Mary and her donkey

Chicago Presentation Pronounced Unusually Artistic

Logan Square Engagement for Nazimova Feature Scores in Windy City

THE presentation of the Nazimova feature, "Stronger Than Death," at the Logan Square Theatre, Chicago, recently, was regarded as one of the most artistic ever seen in the Windy City and the result was capacity crowds for a solid week.

The introduction started with an overture, "The Egyptian Ballet," and as the music drew to an end the curtain parted, disclosing a temple with large rows of marble pillars and a broad flight of steps leading down to the stage. On either side of the steps, incense burners glowed, wafting their perfume over the entire house.

On the steps of the temple was posed a dancer, Devi Dassi, a pupil of Ruth St. Denis, draped in veils with glittering headband and ornaments. As the spotlight enveloped her in light she came down the steps and danced the Temple Dance, a beautiful interpretation of the dance of love which Nazimova, in the picture, dances to attract the man she loves.

The dance completed, once again the dancer stood posed on the temple steps, and immediately the picture was flashed upon the screen showing a street scene in India. A special orchestration was also prepared to help create the proper atmosphere.

Attractive and artistic lobby displays and exploitation also aided Manager W. E. Weinshenker in putting this picture over in a big way.

The entire presentation and exploitation was planned by the new service just inaugurated by Willis & Eckels, of Chicago, which is in charge of Sara Maxon, an artistic theatre director of great ability, who received her training under S. L. Rothapfel.

Willis & Eckels plan to make this department national in scope and have obtained the backing and co-operation of the producers.

Special stage settings will be built and held ready for the use of theatres preceding the release date of important productions; arrangements made for impressive lobby displays; special musical settings made ready and plans for exploitation drawn up, so that theatre owners may, through Willis & Eckels, obtain a new service which will assure them of first class presentation.

This attractive lobby display by the Rex theatre of Buhl, Idaho, a town of only 1100 population and three theatres should prove an inspiration to every small town manager to "dress up" for the playing engagements of the various films played. Manager Kluna changes his lobby display daily and also the billing on his electric sign. In this case he has given the comedy "Captain Kid's Kids" most of his advertising space

Children of Richmond Find Big Appeal in "Pollyanna"

'Frisco Houses Pool Interests for "Kentucky"

Rival Theatres Get Results from a Partnership Exploitation Campaign

THE old saying that originated when Cy Perkins enlisted Larry Hopkins' aid at the village grocery counter to figure up Cy's monthly buttermilk bill, that "two heads are bettern' one," was applied to the motion picture business and exploitation in San Francisco recently.

The saying was adapted to read "two houses are better than one," and the two houses were the Tivoli and Strand theatres. The exploitation was started buzzing when the managements of these two theatres pooled their exploitation brains in order to put over "In Old Kentucky."

The Tivoli and Strand, although technically what might be well termed rival theatres, opened and closed the production at the same time. They booked it simultaneously for a week. They combined their advertising. They utilized the same billboards. The only thing these two houses did not do was to pool the profits. Yet both of them secured a handsome return on the week's business.

To really fathom this phenomenal success, it is necessary to understand San Francisco's theatrical district. The downtown district is scattered over a distance of five long blocks. At one end are two theatres under the same management, which also controls a theatre at the opposite end. They catch them coming and going. Also if there be a holdout crowd at one end of the distrtict where the rule is to play one week engagements, the house next door is benefited, for amusement seekers will naturally look for the nearest theatre. The business at their third house is steadier, for it is devoted to pictures running two weeks and longer.

Between these two poles are located the Tivoli and Strand, but a single city block separating them. Hence it must be seen that when there was a holdout crowd at both houses every night in the week there must have been a tremendous interest created that caused people to want to see "In Old Kentucky" and to make them willing to stand in line for the privilege.

Perhaps the most striking exploitation device that entered into the campaign was a float representing everything that Kentucky was noted for except a distillery. The old log cabin, the colonel with his long, white duster and goatee in proportionate length, the negro jazz band, palms and ferns. A southern picket fence bounded the wagon alongside of which a girl jockey sat gracefully upon a dashing race horse. And while the negro band played its wildest jazz, the old colonel spat tobacco on the pavement, the float driver shimmied and the girl jockey tried her best not to fall off the horse.

The unusual feature, however, which entered into the exploitation of "In Old Kentucky" was the float and Pickaninny Band which held forth on the streets of San Francisco for the entire week. The float was designed by Frank Costello, manager of the Tivoli theatre.

The getting together of the two theatres is all the more remarkable in view of the fact that the management and ownership of the two houses are in no way allied, and until the showing of "In Old Kentucky" they were by virtue of their proximity, keen competitors.

The forward looking men at the helm of the Tivoli and Strand saw that combination is stronger than antagonism and pooled their interest to put over one of the striking successes of the year.

Second "After Thirty" Comedy Scores

WITHOUT a question a new comedy star and a real director have been found in John Cumberland and Mrs. Sidney Drew respectively. At the Capitol this week is being presented the second comedy from Julian Street's "After Thirty" story under the title of "The Stimulating Mrs. Barton." It scores with us as about the cleverest offering to be found on Broadway this week.

There isn't a thing about the whole basic plot bigger than an idea, but the picture as presented is mighty fine entertainment. Credit for this should be about equally divided between Mr. Cumberland and Mrs. Drew, who directed and wrote the titles. The picture of course is best suited for adults,—grown-ups who pretend to have a few brains,—and in this class it should find an appreciative audience. The crowd in which we sat at the Capitol show "ate it up." As for comparison with the initial number of the "After Thirty" series, this possibly has less plot but it seems better constructed, which places the picture on a par with its elder brother.

Richmond Theatre and Paper Co-operate

Colonial Theatre and News Leader Combine Forces for "Pollyanna"

JAKE WELLS, prominent southern exhibitor, and his house manager for Mr. Wells' Colonial theatre at Richmond, Va., Harry Bernstein, set the entire city of Richmond agog talking, writing and going to picture shows by the manner in which they put over their exploitation campaign on "Pollyanna."

"It was a production that primarily interested the children," he said, "so it was to the children that I made my first appeal. I knew that if I got the children started, the grown-ups would come along, and I certainly hit the bull's eye this time. I had them lined up outside of the theatre for hours, and it was capacity business during the entire run of the engagement."

His first appeal in his campaign was to the school children through the News Leader, the leading newspaper of the city. Through them he offered four cash prizes, $10 for the best comment on "Pollyanna" as a production; $7.50 for the best story about Mary Pickford; $5.00 for the best "glad" thought any school child ever had, and $2.50 for the best essay on "Pollyanna."

Hundreds of people entered the contest and submitted contributions with the result that the following prizes were awarded by the judging committee composed of Henry S. Hutzler, T. Elwood Tragle and J. H. Binford, assistant superintendent of schools:

First prize, $10.00, to Lelia Graham Hobson, nine years old, for the best comment on the picture.

Second prize, $7.50, to Martha Letitia Woodson, thirteen years old, for the best story about Mary Pickford.

Third prize, $5.00, to Frances Allen, thirteen years old, for the best "glad" thought.

Fourth prize, $2.50, to Mary Phillips, twelve years old, for the best essay on "Pollyanna."

The newspapers responded admirably to all of the exploitation and first-page double- and triple column stories were the result. When the children came in droves from the schools in the afternoons, in some cases the teacher bringing her entire student body, the papers commented on it with headlines like this: "Living lines of children took turns waiting outside to get a chance to enjoy 'Pollyanna.'"

Rival Theatres Pool Exploitation and Mutually Benefit

The rival theatres, Strand and Tivoli of San Francisco, pooled their exploitation on "In Old Kentucky." Both houses ran the same feature day and date. For detail of the exploitation campaign see opposite page

Bennett Deodorizes Atmosphere of "Whiskey Row"

Why Fair Damsels of Salt Lake City Shunned State Street's Picture Houses

DEODORIZING the nickel-beer atmosphere that since the days of prohibition has put a dark brown taste in the official mouths of many fair cities with the million dollar perfume of motion pictures is a possibility that is now far from remote, thanks to the enterprise of W. H. Bennett, advertising manager of the Strand and Gem theatres, Salt Lake City.

An old saying, "Lips that touch liquor shall never touch mine," was evidently altered to fit a local superstition, with the result that the saying might read, "A picture show on whiskey row shall never lure me from the primrose path."

This was exactly the trouble in Salt Lake City. The fair damsels of that town, and those that sought the favorite of the fair damsels, had an idea that State street was a wild place. Maybe this belief had small foundation. It is a fact that before the late Barleycorn sang his Swan Song the papers used to tell of the thrills awaiting women and children and almost anybody else who cared to visit State street. It might be best to state at this point that the reason we are devoting so much to State street and its trouble is because the Gem and Strand theatres are located thereupon.

As a matter of fact, State street was different from all other streets only in one feature, and this feature rested in the fact that it seemed every third store in the block was a saloon.

Being intoxicated in Salt Lake City meant but one thing—State street.

When Mr. Bennett took over the advertising managership of the Strand and Gem theatres he encountered a strange proposition. Attractions from popular stars that should have drawn large audiences of women and children didn't come up to expectations. Salt Lake's girls had a queer habit. And this habit was working out for the worst interests of the Gem and Strand theatres. To be specific the habit was nothing more or less than an attempt on the part of the girls and women to keep from falling victims to the alluring moving picture attractions offered by these two theatres. It seemed as though a mute understanding among the girls was sizing the situation up after this fashion:

The picture shows on State street were very nice—but State street wasn't so nice as it might be.

And yet, less than a hundred yards away was Main street, its pavements almost raw as a result of the high heeled tread of Salt Lake's weaker sex. It was time, Mr. Bennett thought, to launch a little missionary work in behalf of the abused State street.

With the true instincts of showmanship, Mr. Bennett selected a most propitious time for the testing of his idea. When the Strand had booked "Heart o' the Hills" he found a good chance to hit home with the bell ringing statement that brought out the sophistry of the local attitude towards the Strand. "Don't let prejudice keep you away from State street, the Gem and the Strand," was the line he used.

Mr. Bennett's expectations were realized. His candid way of dealing with the situation has resulted in building up a clientele of the most fashionable of Salt Lake society. Country club talk and comment on society columns in the Salt Lake morning newspapers are a regular part of the Strand's and Gem's lobby chatter. And whatever slight intuition might be that the nickel-beer odor still pervades State street is fully dispelled by the announcement that French bon bons and the nauseating sweetness of marcelled hair are now State street slogans instead of the old time stein for a jitney idea.

Trim Ankle Gets Everybody's Attention

Hammond Gives Atlanta Public Something New in Window Display

A TRIM ankle has never failed to attract attention, so upon this human frailty Frank Hammond, Publicity Director for the S. A. Lynch theatres, Atlanta, built his campaign for "Mary's Ankle," starring Douglas MacLean and Doris May, real honest-to-goodness human ankles were used, too. None of the camouflaged stuff for Mr. Hammond. When he displays he gives the public the real thing.

Two young ladies of considerable charm were engaged to participate in Mr. Hammond's latest stunt, and it has been a long time since Atlanta has had such traffic congestion as Whitehall street experienced during the times the "Mary's" were in one of the prominent shop windows. Time after time it was necessary for the police to clear the sidewalk so pedestrians could make their way along the street. Young men were attracted in large numbers, but it cannot be said that they were alone in front of the window. Old fellows with good taste and husbands with their wives hanging close to them were seen to linger for quite a time before Mr. Hammond's attractive display.

The store picked by Mr. Hammond for his show makes a specialty of women's shoes and hosiery and late reports from the manager of the store indicate that the theatre display helped a great deal in the special sales they put on during the week. It is safe to surmise that this store will be in line for similar advertising novelties that may be devised from time to time by the Rialto management.

It is believed that Mr. Hammond's special stunts were responsible for the greatly increased business throughout the week.

The Rialto has never been keen to do advertising very far in advance of the showing of the picture, but during the week preceding the showing of "Mary's Ankle" they ran a teaser campaign in each of the Atlanta papers. In addition to the space used seven days in advance they pushed up their advertising allotment for Sunday and ran sixty inches against their usual forty.

This form of advertising had never been attempted in Atlanta before the coming of Mr. Hammond to the Rialto and its true value had never been known. "On With the Dance" and "Mary's Ankle" have proved that a certain amount of "jazz" is necessary and it is believed that Atlanta will have the benefit of many novel stunts in the near future.

Huge Bill Board "Graces" Times Square District

A sign-board twelve feet high, running around three sides of one of the important buildings in the Times Square district of New York City, and plastered with one, three, six, and twenty four sheet is a current accomplishment in the presentation of "The Virgin of Stamboul."

This unusual bit of Broadway advertising was made possible by alterations now going on in the old Rector's cafe site, in the ground floor of the Mecca Building, Broadway and Forty eighth street. When a twelve foot fence was built around the building to mask the workmen and to protect pedestrians on the adjacent sidewalks, Universal quickly obtained bill posting privileges for the entire fence space.

Cincinnati Theatre Features Serial on First Night

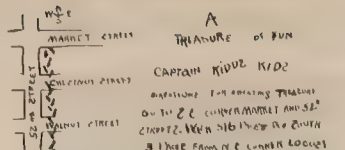
When the Boulevard theatre of Cincinnati opened its doors on March 21, "The Lost City" serial was the picture which received the giant's share of the exploitation campaign. On this page is shown the decorations and exploitation which the Boulevard management accorded the picture. No serial had ever been given such extensive billing in Cincinnati previously

Extensive Campaign for "Beloved Cheater"

When the Locust theatre of West Philadelphia played "The Beloved Cheater" Abe Seligman, house manager, recognized the exploitation possibilities the feature possesses and went after the business with some unusual ideas.

A week before the opening date, thousands of the stock heralds furnished by the exchange were mailed to prospective patrons. The day before the opening this was followed by an original herald playing up the idea suggested by the producers booklet.

The next step was a "love letter contest" which was conducted through and with the aid of the newspapers. The editors were coaxed in giving the contest some extra attention and a veritable stack of love letters were received. In selecting the members of the committee who were to decide on the merits of the letters, care was taken to obtain competent and impartial people and every endeavor made to impress the public that the entries would receive impartial consideration. From the style and manner of construction of the numberless letters received, the management of the Locust is convinced that the contest reached the "people".



The judges selected the appended letter as deserving of the first prize:

DEAR MR. LEW CODY:

I will now take a "Brody," and write you
the letter you ask.
I have never been bitten by "Love's germ," nor smitten, but gladly I sit to the task.
Of writing you, tho' I'm a novice and green, I'd adore such a kiss as you gave
That sweet Miss at the Locust theatre
today on the screen.

I am very near twenty,—have known men
a-plenty, but they're all of them
Slow like your friend, and they never have lifted the veil that your gifted and wondrous love-making could rend!
Now don't think me "sappy"—I'm really quite happy, to know that such lovers live,
And I don't mind confessin', I'd like such a lesson, as an artist like you, sir, could give.

You've forgotten it's Leap-Year, and that's why I don't fear, to be so unmaidenly bold!
For the drear thought of missing, a lesson in kissing, with you teaching, leaves me quite cold!
I am red-haired and grey-eyed and very much envied by girl-friends because of the men.
But I'll shock them all gladly; I confess I'm yours madly! So it's "up to you," Lew; just say when!

"Map" Herald Proves Good Publicity

A novel chord was struck by the Locust theatre, Philadelphia, in advertising Harold Lloyd's comedy, "Captain Kidd's Kids," a picture based upon the pirate career of a bevy of beauties. Thousands of handbills similar to the one reproduced herewith, were showered on Philadelphia, giving the directions for locating the hidden treasure, which, in this instance, was to be found on the screen of the Locust theatre.

The same tact was pursued by the Locust management in its newspaper advertising, the campaign rousing considerable interest because of its unusual character.

This stunt was not one which required an extra draft upon the imagination, yet it was one which paid, for huge crowds of laughter seekers found the treasure of fun, and the Locust theatre located a treasure of gold in its box office, in no small measure because of this little exploitation idea.

Exploitation Which Paid Two Ways

The popularity of Harold Lloyd was utilized by the management of the Chicago Stock Company playing at the Opera House in Kingston, N. Y., recently, to pack the house and to arouse interest in the company. This is the first time on record in which a stock company, playing legitimate attractions, utilized the fame of a motion picture star to bring business to the house.

The stunt was simple but effective. One of the members of the company seemed to be a real double of Lloyd. It was arranged to have him appear on the streets of Kingston, horn-rimmed glasses and all, for a certain period of time each day, and two seats for the stock company performance were given to every person who recognized the actor and told him he looked just like Harold Lloyd.

The brave actor of the stock company was literally mobbed. At every corner he was stopped by a dozen citizens who recognized him. Every one who called the turn received two tickets for the opening of the stock company performances, and on the night of the opening no seats were to be had at the box office.

Frankel Features Wearing of Green

"The Luck of the Irish" seems to have had a busy week during that in which March 17th was contained. Among the theatres which played this feature as a St. Patrick's Day special was the Majestic theatre, of Columbus. Besides the ordinary methods of publicity and exploitation, a number of novelties were pulled that did much to popularize the engagement.

A private screen was held and all the Irish clubs and lodges were invited. Window cards cut in the form of a shamrock were distributed over the city. Green carnations with ribbons attached, on which was printed "Luck of the Irish" and the name of the theatre, were passed out to every patron. The lobby of the theatre was decorated with shamrocks on white lattice work, and made a very effective display.

All this expenditure of time and money in honor of the "wearing of the green" was instrumental in a big week for "The Luck of the Irish" engagement, and R. G. Frankel, advertising manager, who had charge of the campaign, is smiling at a job well done. Also, he is looking forward to another holiday or event that will give him something to work on in his successful efforts to bring the dollars into the Majestic box office.

Circus Stuff Wins for Pomeroy

PROBABLY the most striking theatre front ever arranged in Ottawa, Ontario, was that used by Manager Harry Pomeroy of the Strand theatre, for "Her Elephant Man," starring Shirley Mason, which was presented on March 25, 26 and 27. Tan bark, tenting, stuffed camel and elephant, large elephant cut out, circus wagon, brass band musical effects and living clowns were used for the lobby display and the combination created real circus atmosphere. Upon entering the theatre, patrons discovered the "animal tent" where more exhibits were arranged. The animal stalls, plentifully decorated with painted barrels, hoops and fodder, were found in the foyer.

For the circus band music Manager Pomeroy used a small phonograph, which was operated on the roof of the small circus wagon, together with a bass drum. Lively band selection were played continuously, while one of the clowns beat upon the drum. Another clown operated a mechanical roaring device, while a third caused the life sized camel to swing its head from side to side impatiently.

The large mirrors in the foyer were painted in circus style, and they also bore cut outs of the star. Clowns roamed up and down the aisles during intermissions and the orchestra did its best to add circus color to the proceedings. The newspaper advertisements were also highly appropriate.

Even New York Succumbs to the Window Display Tie-up

Even selfish, "go it alone" New York is seeing the mutual advantage in window display tie-ups for the exploitation of pictures. On this page is shown how two stores on Broadway co-operated with the Broadway theatre, New York, in the exploitation of "The Virgin of Stamboul" playing at the Moss house last week. These tie-ups were only a portion of those which were effected with prominent stores

Wausau Exhibitor Suggests That Producers Furnish Mats

Clyde Kone Tells us What Is Needed to Properly Advertise Pictures

THE film distributing companies are overlooking the important possibilities of one item in the matter of advertising accessories that could be made a great help to the men in the small town exhibiting field.

That item is the distribution of mats, which are not sent out to the exhibitors generally because it is estimated that something like 80 per cent of the newspapers in the country are not able to use them, owing to lack of equipment.

But this obstacle can easily be overcome by educating the small town newspapers and the exhibitors themselves to the importance and economy in having machines to cast up the mats, and this educating should be done by the distributors and the trade papers.

The exhibitors have to depend on the press sheets and cuts to make up their own ads. The press sheets serve their purpose all right in this way, but it is a crime the way the average small town newspaper throws the type together in making up an ad. The result is that the picture gets a botchy looking display, just as well as the advertising of all the merchants in town.

On the other hand the film companies get some magnificent looking advertisements with beautiful art work in the national trade journals. Why couldn't the film companies have mats of these splendid ads just as they are and send them along to the exhibitors?

They say the small town exhibitor cannot use them. But that isn't so, for I have just proved that he can. I am a small town exhibitor, so called. Wausau is a city of 20,000 population, and the one daily newspaper in town had no machine for casting up mats. This newspaper was no exception to the general run of small town newspapers when it comes to the proposition of making improvements. We have received little or no co-operation from it, and at one time as a result of a disagreement on the subject of advertising, I withdrew my advertising for a solid year, running a small house organ or program that kept the movie loving public informed on current attractions. This paper is so small and narrow-minded in its policy that if it runs a story concerning a certain physician in town it never gives him his proper title, calling him Mr. Smith instead of Dr. Smith, for otherwise, the editor reasons, it would be giving his practice some free advertising. Naturally I could not expect much from such people, so when I suggested that they install a mat casting machine for the benefit of all advertisers they were horrified at the thought and refused point blank.

THE article on this page is on "press books." The author is Clyde Kone, manager of Grand theatre, Wausau, Wis. The article contrary to most of those we have published in this series doesn't constitute a tirade against the producers aids with no kind words for anyone or anybody. Mr. Kone admits that acording to his idea most press books have faults. He also acknowledges they have virtues. And next he makes a suggestion which should have the attention of every producer. He wants mats. True most producers are sending out mats to a portion of their customers the big fellows the very people who don't need and rarely use them. We feel sure that in the average city above twenty thousand today, the average newspaper is able to use mats. They and the exhibitors in those size cities may need some education before any great improvement in newspaper advertising would be accomplished but in a short time much could be done, we believe, as does Mr. Kone.

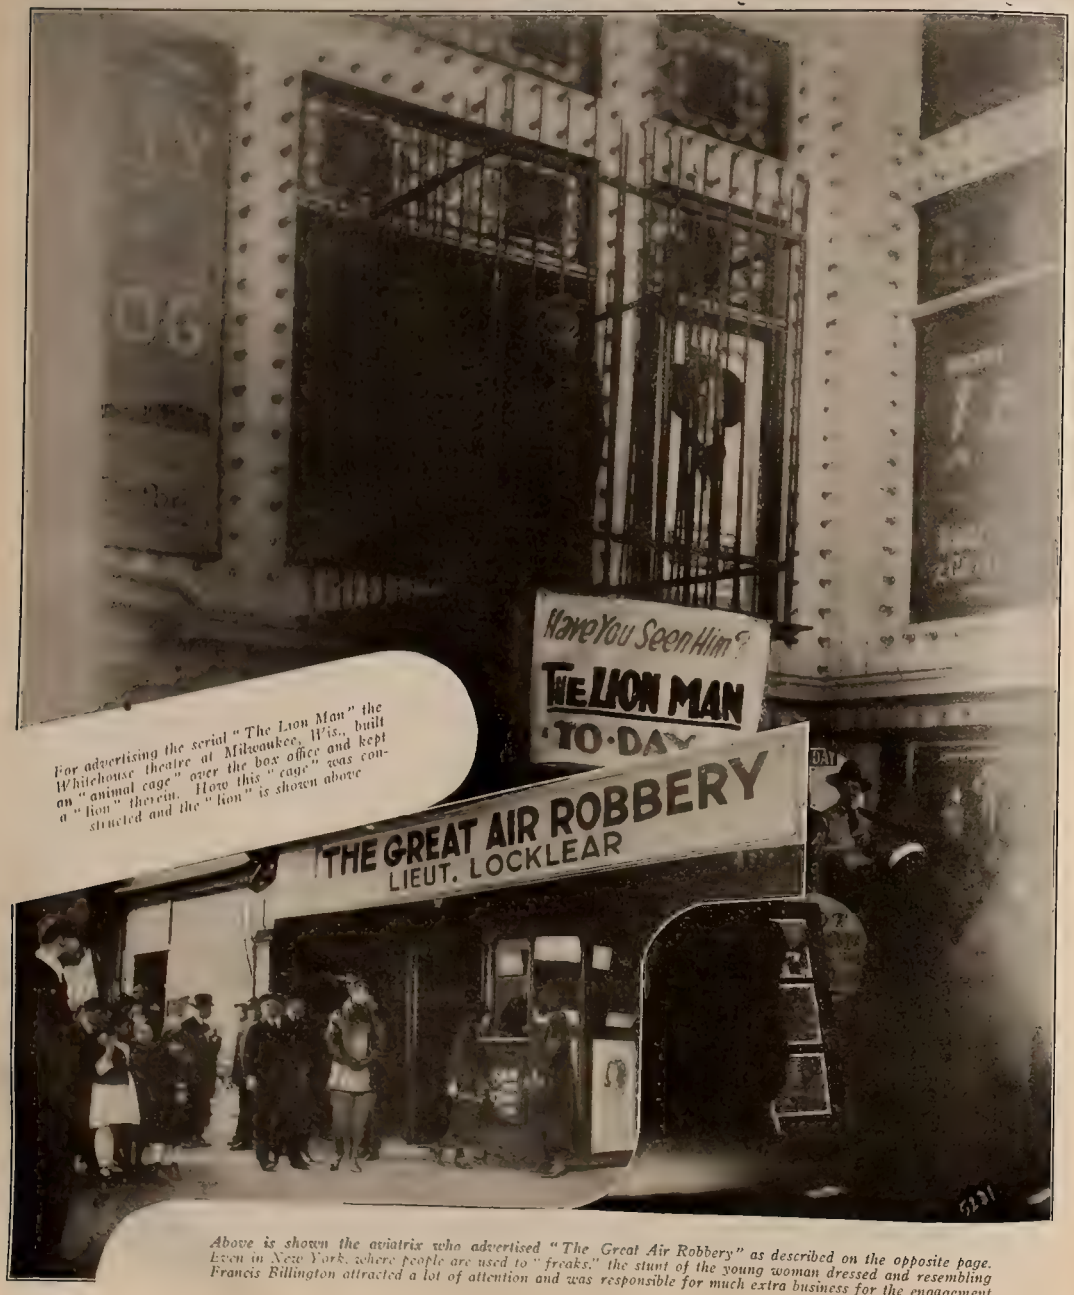
But this setback did not discourage me. I ordered my own mat casting machine, and am now able to run the best looking ads in the paper.

Other exhibitors should not encounter as much trouble with their newspapers as I have, and I am confident if they got together with the other newspaper advertisers, they could induce their newspapers to see the advantage and economy in having mat casting machines. It is a fact that while a country typesetter is working for an hour and a half or two hours on an ad a mat casting machine could turn out fifty ads. And instead of having a bunch of junk type thrown together any old way, the newspaper would have a really neat looking lot of ads. If the exhibitor cannot win this much co-operation, then it would pay him to get his own machine for casting mats, as I have done. He could get one of these machines for from $25 to $75, and it would be a mighty profitable investment. And as a result the small town exhibitor would have the only good looking ads in his paper! Wouldn't that be an objective well worth going after? I believe so and that is why I have bought my own mat casting machine.

But the most important point of all is the need for co-operation between the exhibitor and the distributor. If the distributor will not furnish him with the mats, then the exhibitors' casting machine is only a white elephant on his hands. I appeal to the film companies to furnish the use of mats of their best advertisements and encourage the exhibitors in the use of them. By doing so they will only help their own game along, for if their pictures receive better advertising in the exhibitors' newspapers they are certainly going to attract better business.

I think that this is a subject that deserves the most serious consideration, owing to the immense possibilities in it. Just think of the advantage the motion picture industry would gain over other advertisers if their advertising stood out and scintillated above all advertising matter in the small town papers!

Something ought to be done to give both the exhibitors and the distributors a jolt to make them alive to their opportunities in this connection.



Of course, the small town papers can handle cuts, but cuts are an expensive proposition. They are easily lost and about half of them never come back when once they are sent out. A good mat with a picture in it is far more desirable to my way of thinking.

If exhibitors were supplied with mats and were equipped to handle them, there would be no need for the present lengthy press sheets that are gotten out. Of course, the press sheets would always be desirable anyway, but they would not be largely solved for the small town exhibitor by the universal use of mats, and he would no longer have to crack his brain planning advertising that nine times out of ten jumbled together in any old way by the printers. The press sheets would still serve with their suggestions for readers, exploitation schemes, etc. The mats could be used to very good advantage in getting out handbills as well as with newspaper advertising.

The average press sheet gotten out today could stand for a great deal of improvement. I think that Paramount gets out about the best, First National gets out a helpful press sheet. While all of them could bear improvement, none is without some good, and under existing conditions the exhibitor could not very well get along without them.

From time to time I have taken advantage of the press sheet suggestions for novel methods of exploitation and for preparing the lobby and stage setting, but in too many instances these suggestions are not feasible for the small town exhibitor because they are either too costly or too impractical to put into operation with the facilities he has at hand. We need ideas on how to exploit our pictures to the best possible advantage, but these ideas should be reasonable first of all.

Two Exceptional Exploitation Displays For Your Lobby

For advertising the serial "The Lion Man" the Whitehouse theatre at Milwaukee, Wis., built an "animal cage" over the box office and kept a "lion" therein. How this "cage" was constructed and the "lion" is shown above

Above is shown the aviatrix who advertised "The Great Air Robbery" as described on the opposite page. Even in New York, where people are used to "freaks," the stunt of the young woman dressed and resembling Francis Billington attracted a lot of attention and was responsible for much extra business for the engagement

Masked Girl in Automobile Gets Charleston's Attention

Auto Dealer and Showmen Work "Mystery Girl" Stunt for "Everywoman"

MANAGER T. L. KEARSE and House Manager Tom Morrow of the Strand, Charleston, W. Va., put a big campaign behind "Everywoman," in co-operation with the exploitation man of the Cincinnati office of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. It so happened that just the week before "Everywoman" opened, another exploitation campaign on a picture of similar title had been put on in Charleston. This made it necessary to devise new and unused means of exploiting the Paramount-Artcraft picture.

The flash of the campaign was a "masked girl" stunt. Securing the co-operation of the Hudson auto dealer in Charleston, Manager Morrow labeled the car "Everywoman's Car" and in the tonneau placed a girl wearing a mask. The car wended its way through the principal streets. On the screen of the theatre, a slide was flashed: "A free ticket to the first ten persons who identify the masked girl in 'Everywoman's' Hudson car. She has lived in Charleston fifteen years." The girl was an assistant cashier. The "lived in Charleston fifteen years" aroused curiosity and a desire to identify the girl. The stunt aroused a lot of attention.

Mr. Morrow, through his friendship with a laundry owner, succeeded in having wrapped into laundry packages hundreds of "Everywoman" heralds. A leading store also agreed to wrap heralds in all packages. Just about every other store in Charleston had some kind of a window display either cut-outs, especially painted cards with mortised "still" inserts or lithographs, and sometimes all three. The cards tied up with florists, dry goods stores, clothing stores, jewelers, drug stores, candy stores and furniture dealers.

The lobby of the theatre was decorated with cut outs, the mysterious nobody setting high over the entrance on a balcony.

Big newspaper space was used, augmented with special tie up ads, used individually instead of in a page lay out, because that stunt had been used the week before.

In the reading notices on the engagement, stress was laid on the "morality play" idea, making it appear as a special booking apropos of the Lenten season. In Charleston, the abstinence from movie going was emphasized by some of the churches during Lent.

Not overlooking any bets, Manager Morrow found a way to get his message into the auto show which was being held in Charleston the week before "Everywoman" arrived. He "sold" the idea to the Hudson dealer to carry the "masked girl" stunt right into the auto show and there she sat, surrounded with "Everywoman" lithographs and placards—right in the midst of the auto show crowds. The Hudson exhibit was the biggest crowd attractor of any and the dealer was mightily pleased.

"EXPLOITATION MEN'S MINUTE BOOK"

GIVING Credit Where Credit Is Due. The text of the pages under this heading is devoted exclusively to the achievement of the Exchange Exploitation Men

It places at the disposal of the exhibitor all the exploitation ideas these experts originate, renders their services practically universal and gives credit where credit is due.

Aviatrix Great Success for "Air Robbery"

The Consolidated Amusement Company, which operates a large chain of theatres, recently took advantage of the average man's interest in pretty girls to exploit "The Great Air Robbery."

Mr. Mangini, manager of the Arena theatre, 41st Street and Eighth Avenue, New York city, the key theatre of the Consolidated circuit, searched until he found a pretty New Yorker resembling Miss Billington. She was outfitted in smart togs including leather aviatrix coat, headgear, goggles and everything else that goes to dress a flyer.

For eight days before the showing at the Arena theatre, which was the first of the Consolidated theatres to play the picture, the impersonator strolled the avenue. During the day, Mr. Mangini had her take her station principally in the theatre lobby or in the immediate neighborhood.

In the evening he would send her farther afield, always flanked by some sturdy protectors.

In an interview Mr. Mangini said:

"It was a great success. Our actress passed hardly a person in crowded Eighth Avenue who did not turn to look or maybe stop altogether. Invariably they passed some remark; groups discussed her among themselves and we built up more conversation about her and what she represented than probably any picture ever enjoyed before its showing.

"We had her give out little cards with catch sayings and the dates on which 'The Great Air Robbery' would play at the Arena. We avoided mentioning the name of the theatre, thus adding a bit of mystery. Of course, it was quickly evident that she was impersonating Miss Billington, but it was more interesting for the passers-by to work this out for themselves than to have us tell them.

"The number of persons who saw our actress during the week before we played the picture can hardly be estimated, but I should judge they ran into the tens of thousands. Eighth Avenue is always a crowded thoroughfare; we are right in the heart of the Forty-second street traffic and we had her in the parade constantly.

"The Arena theatre and the Consolidated have never done any of this sort of thing before; we have always kept to the so-called 'usual' sort of advertising. But after this I believe we will do more of the usual kind of exploitation. It worked so well and it was so interesting while it lasted that I am going to try it again.

"Another thing: I notice that it helps business all the while the 'stunt' is being worked, even though the picture that is being advertised is a week away."

"Critic Contest" Wins at Jackson, Mich.

The interesting contest devised by Harry R. Guest, Press and Service Representative of Goldwyn Pictures for the Detroit district, might be labeled by the name of a well known playlet, "Suppressed Desires." At any rate, his appeal was directly to the multitude of potential motion picture critics, urged to voice their opinion but normally without any outlet for that critical faculty.

Jackson, Mich., got a healthy installment of Goldwyn productions. Five Goldwyn features were played in thirteen days by the Majestic theatre. It was necessary not only to rouse interest in the community, but to sustain it. With the co-operation of the Jackson News, a Photoplay Critic Contest was inaugurated. The public was urged to see as many of the Goldwyn pictures as possible, then to write a letter of one hundred words or less on any one of them, comparing it where possible with the other productions.

The contest closed soon after the completion of the extended Goldwyn engagement. The letters poured into the office of the Jackson News continually and in big volume. News items and paid advertising kept the public apprised of the contest's progress.

Neilan's Next is Announced

FOR the past month the First National Exhibitors' Circuit has been saying "Don't Ever Marry" in page advertisements in the trade papers. Considerable interest has been created around the trade as to why, what and how, no further information being available at the First National headquarters or exchanges.

And now the secret is out. "Don't Ever Marry" is the title of Marshall Neilan's second independent production to be released via First National, following "The River's End," the well-known screen hit of 1920.

This also accounts for the careful evasion of all mention as to title and details concerning Marshall Neilan's new film following "The River's End." From the publicity department of the Neilan organization there have been frequent hints as to the great "commercial possibilities" of the title, but that was all.

The second Neilan offering is an adaptation from Edgar Franklin's story which created great interest when it ran as a serial recently in the All Story Magazine. Every exploitation opportunity available in connection with this striking title will be taken advantage of in what is conceded to be one of the most extensive and novel campaigns ever prepared for a motion picture. This campaign includes many unusual stunt suggestions for exhibitors to gether with newspaper and other tie-ups which will give the showman wide scope in handling this production.

"Don't Ever Marry" was adapted to the screen by Marion Fairfax, whose work in connection with "The River's End" attracted great interest in and out of the trade. The story is one in which the hero, played by Matt Moore, is a victim of circumstances throughout. Secretly married to the girl of his choice, he is claimed as husband by two other women each of whom has an excellent reason for her false claim. In his efforts to explain his position in the many complicated situations that arise and at the same time retain the love of his wife and avoid a clash with her irate father, he is continually stepping from one bad predicament into another.

The picture is now finished and will receive its final treatment at the Rothacker laboratory within the next week. It is said to be a fast moving comedy presenting throughout many typical Mar hall Neilan touches of humor which have distinguished his pictures.

To get the desired background for the dramatic action of the plot, Mr. Neilan engaged one of the most exclusive hotels in California. Here he moved a complete motion picture outfit and scenes in practically all parts of the big building were "shot." Other interiors for this production were staged in the Douglas Fairbanks studio in Hollywood where several large sets were erected.

Chicago and the Mid-West

Covered By L. H. MASON

C. A. STIMSON, General Sales Manager for the American Film Company, has just made a "Flying A" trip to New York, in the interests of the two new releases, "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver," starring Margarita Fisher, and "Slam Bang Jim" in which William Russell carries the leading role. He reports that "Slam-Bang Jim" is going off with a start worthy of its name. "The House of Toys" has already been constructed by the American and is now getting its finishing and decorative touches at the Chicago laboratory. The foundation is found to be excellent, and the superstructure in fine condition. The chief actors in this "House of Toys" are Scena Owen, Pell Trenton, Helen Jerome Eddy, George Hernandez, Henry Barrows, Marion Skinner, Lillian Leighton and Perry Banks.

Messrs. Linick and Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, are scheduled to return to Chicago this week after spending the winter in California and Aaron J. Jones, who has been in active charge of the business during their absence, now will take his well earned rest. In anticipation of this he gave a dinner Friday night at the Sisson Hotel to his executives. Those present were: Samuel I. Levin, Ralph T. Kettering, Norman E. Field, J. C. Matthews, John G. Burch, Thomas Burchill, George Moore, Louis J. Jones, John J. Jones, Emil Mayer and Sig Faller.

From the fleet of motor cars recently acquired by Jones, Linick & Schaefer managers, it looks like it has been a prosperous year for the firm and that the managers must be sharing in the profits. Sam I. Levin has just invested in a new Mitchell Sedan, Ralph T. Kettering a Willys Knight Sedan, Sig Faller a Mitchell Touring car, Norman Field and John G. Burch, Moline-Knights and John J. Jones has a new Buick Roadster.

Horace T. Clark, far east representative of David P. Howell's, was a visitor at the Rothacker Chicago studio laboratory last week, stopping off for a day on his return journey to the Orient.

Manager Aschman of Pathe, reports some unusual good bookings including pathtme Pathe Topics of the Day into Barbee's Loop Theatre for the opening week. Two week's showing of "Bringing Up Father" at the Boston and Alcazar loop theatres also has been contracted for.

Chicago exhibitors are booking, "Women Men Forget," the new United feature, for exceptionally long runs, according to Manager Jack O'Toole, who is enthusiastic over the way the picture is being put over.

Douglas D. Rothacker is spending several weeks in New York with J. Alexander Liggett, manager of the Eastern Industrial division of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Company. Edward O. Blackburn, director, and Oscar Abbe, cameraman, took a company to Louisville, Ky., to make an industrial film. C. P. Tobin is on the trail of industrial contracts in Ohio.

G. H. Grounds, president of the Consolidated Portrait & Frame Company, has returned from an extensive trip through the south and to the west coast and reports exhibitors everywhere are showing great interest in improving their lobby display with the result that there is a very heavy demand for Bilt-Rite easels.

The new Irish play by Ralph Thomas Kettering, entitle "Rose O' Killarney," recently has been given a try out by the Stock Company at Shubert theatre, Milwaukee. Another Kettering play to reach production this spring will be a farce comedy called "The Cheaters" and will receive its premier at the Shubert theatre within a few weeks. The third of the new spring Kettering plays is called "Sin and Sable" and probably will get its trial in Cleveland. Each spring for several years Mr. Kettering has brought out a bunch of new plays and their tryouts are coming to be regarded as one of the signs of the season.

Many Chicago motion picture men are interested in the candidacy of Governor Frank O. Lowden for president, as he always has been an ardent friend of the motion picture industry. He was the first man in public life to use the screen as an aid in a political campaign, and in deciding on the innovation said: "It is physically impossible for me to reach all the people personally, so I am using the motion picture screen as the cleanest and most effective way to carry my message." During the present campaign, Governor Lowden is again making use of this medium to reach the greatest number of people.

Several changes in his staff were reported this week by Manager Aschman of Pathe's Chicago Exchange. M. Whitmoyer was transferred to the special squadron of feature salesmen and given a country territory. J. W. Carnrick was given a city territory, H. W. Ricker takes Mr. Carnrick's former field and Percy Havill has been added to the feature sales squad, having resigned from Robertson-Cole to accept this position.

Jerome Safron, manager of the Detroit branch of Robertson-Cole, was in Chicago last week and while here, visited the headquarters of Fitzpatrick & McElroy, who operate an extensive string of theatres in Michigan, and closed contracts with them for practically the entire Robertson-Cole service.

Manager J. L. Lesserman, of Universal Chicago Office, is elated over the way exhibitors are booking "The Virgin of Stamboul" in the Chicago territory. He reports that Lubliner & Trinz have booked more playing dates for this Universal super feature in their fourteen Chicago houses than they have ever given any other photoplay drama.

The Capital Film Company reports that they have contracted with Bill Forman, widely known sporting editor, for his new feature, "Bill Forman's Sporting Page," which will be released once a month to start with and later, may be a weekly. The first "sporting page" has been viewed by some of Chicago's leading exhibitors who say it will be a great feature, visualizing as it does, sporting events of the country including, billiards, baseball, rowing, track meets, football and all the events in which red blooded Americans are interested in their proper seasons.

The first of the Griever Educational Weeklys produced by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, "The Legend of the Corn," had its first showing last week at the Randolph theatre, Chicago, and marks a genuine advance in educationals.

Photography and direction are excellent, the various parts are filled by competent actors and the entire picture holds the interest of the audience.

The first part of the film is a picturization of the Indian Legend of how the Great Spirit first gave maize, or Indian Corn, to his children. The picture closely follows the legend as told in Longfellow's Hiawatha. Director Ray Aitken took real Redskins to Deer Creek and Starved Rock, a locality of primeval beauty and rich in Indian history, and the Aborigines showed dignity and ability as picture actors.

Follwing the legend of corn's coming to earth, the picture visualizes how man in the Twentieth Century converts this gift of nature into the tasteful foods millions of people throughout the world enjoy daily.

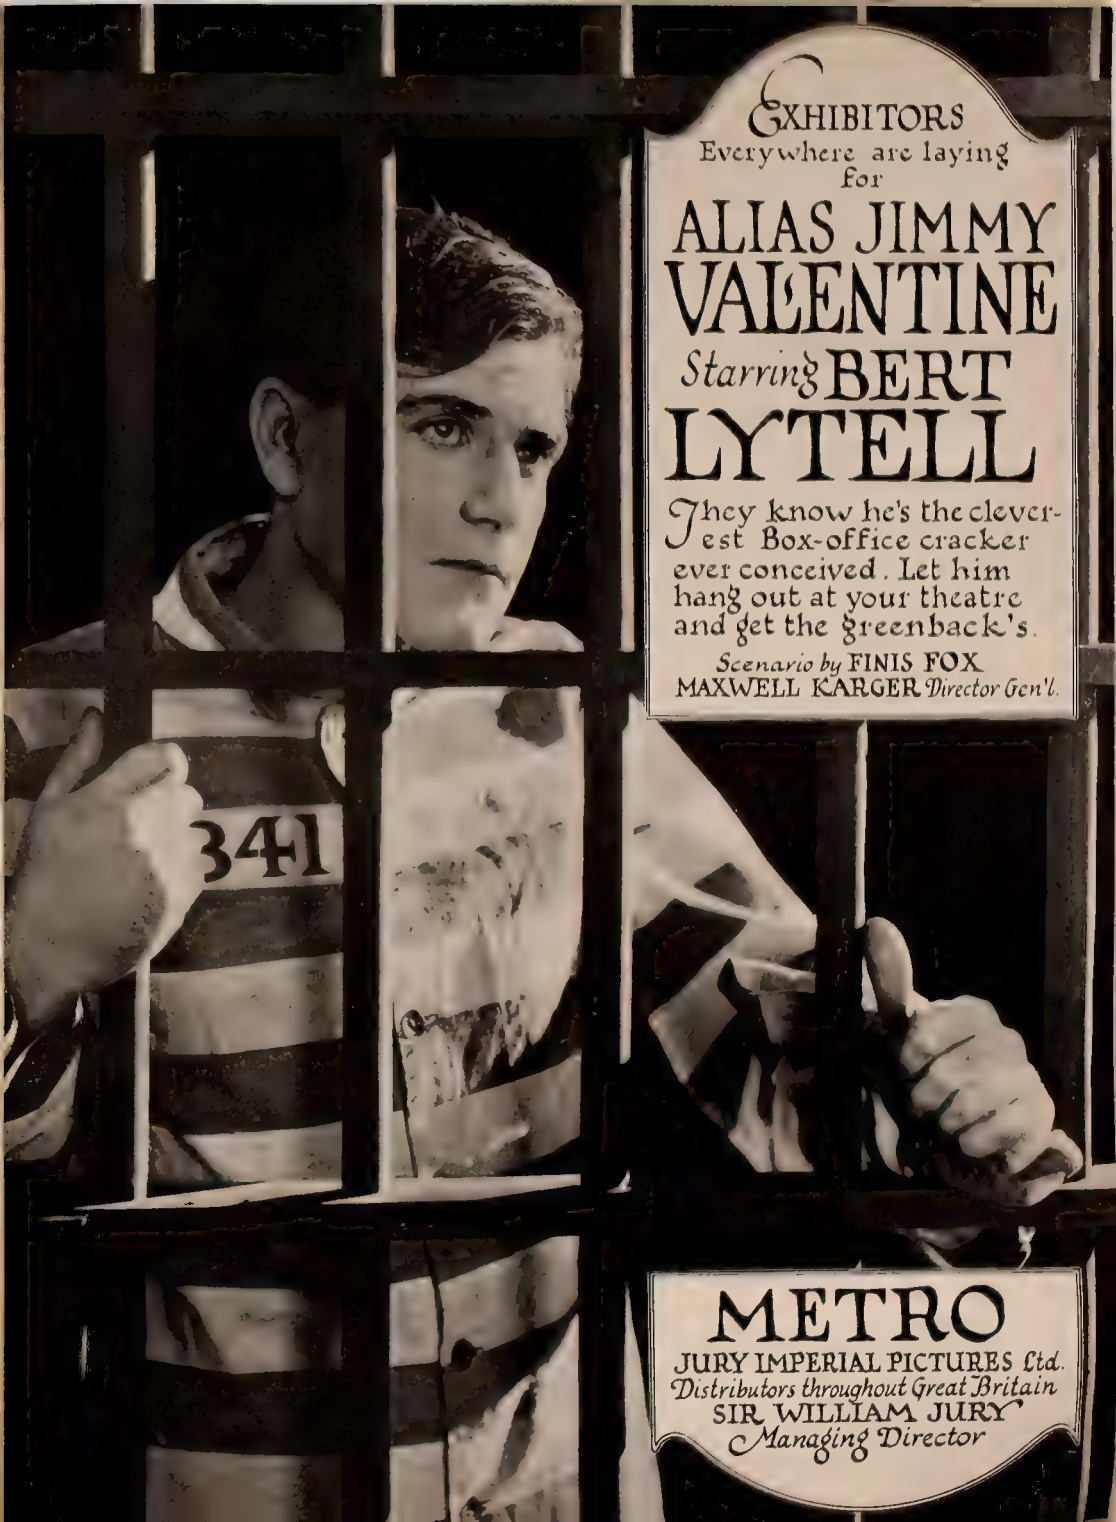
Watterson R. Rothacker has arranged to produce for the Griever Distributing Corporation an extensive series of educational films on diversified topics.

W. E. Calloway has rejoined the sales staff of Greater Stars after working for three weeks for Robertson-Cole. Harry Corbett also is with Greater Stars now. He was recently connected with the Pathe Exchange.

Elliott & Brockell have purchased the interest of Lubliner & Trinz in Greater Stars and will continue to be joint managers of the Greater Stars Chicago Exchange.

Hattie J. Tiude, well known organist, has been added to the Chicago staff of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company and will demonstrate and coach organists of theatres using the Bartola.

Chicago exhibitors are proving that they are possessed of more than the average amount of civic pride and are prepared to back their city by hard cash as well as talk by the way in which they are getting behind Mayor Thompson's Boost Chicago Plan. A meeting called by the Theatre Committee of the Chicago Boosters Publicity Club to acquaint the theatre managers with the plan, was attended by practically every prominent exhibitor in the city. Aaron Jones, Nathan Ascher, Ludwig Schindler, of Mickey Film Corp., Ben Beadell of Chicago Select Office spoke and then Dr. Atkinson, manager of the A. A. A., brought in the mayor and when his honor the mayor, got through talking, it was like taking candy from a baby to get the exhibitors to subscribe to the booster fund. It is announced that already the $20,000 quota set for the amusement business has been nearly raised.



Si Griever has returned from a trip to New York with contracts to show Griever Educationals at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres in his pocket. Mr. Griever reports extensive bookings of his educationals in Chicago and several other territories.

Universal is going to put "The Virgin Of Stamboul" over in Chicago with one of the greatest exploitation and advertising campaigns ever entered upon in the Windy City, according to Chicago Manager Sesserman. Newspaper advertising began a week and a half in advance of the opening date at the Playhouse April 18 and the city is already liberally papered. Bills also are being put up in all Illinois towns of over 25,000, Publicity Director Harry Rice reports.

The use of trailers by theatres in all parts of the United States is increasing with astonishing rapidity, according to Willis & Eckels, makers of Filmcraft Trailers, who have just closed contracts with Ben Pflaum of Johnson City,

Sennett Five Reeler Gets Premiere At Fort Wayne

Mack Sennett's long heralded five-reel comedy, "Down on the Farm," distribution rights to which have been secured by United Artists is having its premiere this week at W. C. Quimby's Strand theatre, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Mr. Quimby, who books from the Chicago United Artists' office, is giving the picture an exploitation campaign which should attract attention.

A big load of hay on top of which "roost" a number of characters in "rube" attire is making a tour of Fort Wayne streets daily and other stunts commonly known as "hokum" are being pulled, much to the amusement of Fort Wayne citizens.

Inside the theatre Mr. Quimby is carrying out the farmer idea also.

There is a suggestion of cows, chickens and the other barnyard folk all about the theatre. A stage setting which would have done credit for an act of "The Old Homestead" is being shown.

When the feature is screened the audiences have been treated to a "show" in itself in the novelties the Strand management has prepared.

"The Woman He Chose" Opens in Chicago

The Mickey Film Corporation is starting its national campaign on "The Woman He Chose" with a showing of this feature at the Ziegfield, the popular Michigan Boulevard Chicago house, for an indefinite engagement.

The musical setting and presentation will be on a high plane in keeping with the importance of the picture which has won the highest commendation from critics and reviewers. Miss Helen Boyer, operatic soprano, will render vocal solos; Hans Hanke, a famous pianist, will be heard at each performance, and Cavallo, noted orchestra leader, will be brought to Chicago especially to direct the orchestra which will render a specially prepared and elaborate musical setting during the screening of the feature.

New Story for Fay Tincher

Star to Start Work Soon on New Christie Comedy at Hollywood

FOLLOWING the release of "Petticoats and Pants," the latest Christie two-reel comedy featuring Bobby Vernon, which, by the way, is Vernon's first appearance at the head of a cast in one of the Christie two-reel specials, Fay Tincher will start work in a new two-reel fun film, production of which will begin within a week at the Hollywood studio.

After casting about for over a month trying to find a proper type of story in which the comedienne can appear to best advantage, a story titled "Belinda's Bluff" has been secured from Maie B. Havey, a scenarist of prominence, which will furnish the basis for the next Christie two-reel offering.

W. Scott Darling is now writing the continuity of Miss Havey's original story, while William Beaudine has been assigned to the direction. The story is a farce comedy, not unlike the comedy roles in which Miss Tincher first appeared on the screen in the D. W. Griffith company.

Earl Rodney, Helen Darling, Jimmie Harrison and others of the Christie company of stock players will also appear in the new comedy. Of the twelve two-reel Christie Comedies produced last year, Miss Tincher appeared in six, these being "Sally's Blighted Career," "Rowdy Ann," "Mary Moves In," "Dangerous Nan McGrew," "Wild and Western," and "Go West—Young Woman."

Ben Wilson in New Serial

E. S. Manheimer of Film Exchange Signs Star for Two 1920 Serials

E. S. MANHEIMER, one of the pioneers in the serial game, has recently signed up Ben Wilson, the screen star, to produce two serials for the current year. "In addition," said Mr. Manheimer, "I was fortunate enough to get Neva Gerber to play the leading feminine role, and let me say right now, this combination is unbeatable in the serial world. Just recall for a minute Ben Wilson's successes, such as the "Voice on the Wire," and you will see why I consider Wilson the biggest bet of the day.

"Why, although he only left for California several weeks ago, I received a wire from him today, stating that he has already acquired one of the best serial casts on the market and that he is going right ahead. Even though I have been led to expect such rapid fire reports, you can be sure that this one was a real surprise. As for the outcome of Wilson's first serial, I am cock sure that it will be one of his best and there is every precedent to forecast this."

"Is that all I have in the serial line?" repeated Mr. Manheimer quizzically, in reply to a question put to him. "I have the foreign rights for some of the best serials on the market today. First, there is "The Mystery Mind," starring Robert Pauline, Violet MacMillan, Paul Panzer and Peggy Shanor. Then there is "The Fatal Sign," featuring Harry Carter and Claire Anderson, which I have practically sold for entire foreign rights excluding but several territories."

Miss Talmadge to Make Emerson-Loos Story

Martin Saxe, manager of the Pantheon theatre, Chicago

Chicagoan Sets Example of Good Showmanship

The Pantheon, Lubliner & Trinz magnificent northside theatre, today is reported to be one of the biggest money-makers in Chicago, and its success is attributed largely to the real showmanship of Manager Martin Saxe, who has been connected with Lubliner & Trinz Theatres for seven years. For six years he was kept busy opening theatres for this firm and during that time started the following houses on the road to success: The Twentieth Century, Orchestra Hall theatre, Biograph, South Shore, Knickerbocker and Wilson.

Mr. Saxe responded to the call to the colors and on getting out of the army, became manager of the Pantheon.

Good music is one of his hobbies and Paul Beise was brought to the Pantheon to lead the orchestra. Mr. Saxe is an exceptionally close student of his audiences and picks pictures that will appeal to the taste of the people who patronize his theatre, as well as being constantly on the alert to give them courteous attention.

South Fetes Photoplay Stars

By Helen Moyer

"A UNIQUE event in the history of the screen was the trip to Knoxville and Atlanta by Marcus Loew and a collection of famous stars of the stage and screen. The remarkable feature of the trip was the welcome given the stars by every city visited, indicating the enormous interest in film personalities on the part of the general public. One paper in Nashville stated the reception given the stars was greater than that given Pershing, Bryan, Wilson, or the return of the soldier boys.

"Looking back upon it, it seems like a dream; a week's succession of parades, brass bands, receptions, luncheons, dinners, teas at country clubs and appearances at theatres, with very little sleep, a whole lot of excitement, and the greatest time any of us had ever known in all our lives. We were stared at, fought over, dined, and feted as no foreign potentate ever was, and we enjoyed it all, every minute of it, and every bit of it. We were making film history, and showing the world that there is greater interest in the stars than in high public officials. The reception given the stars in every city far exceeded any welcome ever given any body.

"It would take several volumes to describe the trip in detail, but a few touches here and there might be interesting. First the personnel of the party. Let me say here that they're a wonderful crowd. Our separating on our return made us all weep, and we weren't ashamed of it. Take sixteen people, put them in a private car, rush them through the South at top speed for seven days, and something is bound to break but not with this crowd. They didn't have a fight on the entire trip.

"Marcus Loew headed the party. He was worn to a ragged edge, and had to take a week off to recuperate from the excitement when he got back, but he certainly enjoyed it, and made everyone else enjoy it. Then came Doraldina, greatest of all dancers of her type, the toast of Broadway, but more than that, a wonderful girl. Then we had June Caprice, Rubye De Remer, with an $8,000 mink coat and two eight carat diamonds; Lillian Walker with her smile and dimples; Claire Whitney, with a million dollars' worth of personality; Mildred Reardon, the baby of the party; Anne Luther, notable for her wild red hair and her disposition; Jack Clifford, former partner and husband of Evelyn Nesbit, who danced with Miss Luther; Taylor Holmes, the gentleman and great actor; Frank Saunders, Doraldina's husband, and Harold Stern, a director of the Loew corporation; N. T. Granlund, publicity director, for Loew and guide of the party, and myself.

"We were all more dead than alive when we tumbled into our rooms in Mr. Loew's private car on that last night, but we left behind us vivid memories of marvelous days and nights, which we can never forget, and splendid men and women who made up our party, and who altogether helped make it a visit and glorious success.

"This gang would follow Mr. Loew to Zululand should he ever plan to open a theatre there. We're all looking forward to his next opening. Try to keep us away, that's all."

A remarkable attestation of the popularity of players with the public was given during a trip through Southern cities by Marcus Loew, accompanied by a number of film stars. This photograph shows the party being entertained at the Nashville Golf and Country Club by society women. Marcus Loew may be seen in the center (seated) flanked on the left and right by Lillian Walker and Anna Luther. Claire Whitney, Mildred Reardon, Doraldina, June Caprice, Helen Moyer, Jack Clifford, Rubye De Remer and Taylor Holmes are also in the front row

Company Buys Fourteen Farces

THE Charles Ray Productions, Inc., has just purchased fourteen of the most famous of Charles Hoyt's dramatic works for adaptation to the screen. With a purchase price running into large figures, the acquisition of these well-known farce comedies gives the star's producing organization a wealth of screen material which, in its original form, constituted the most popular theatrical amusement of the last generation.

The deal which brings these famous dramatic pieces to the Charles Ray organization was concluded last week in Los Angeles. The group of Hoyt plays includes: "A Black Sheep," "A Brass Monkey," "A Contented Woman," "A Day and a Night," "A Dog in the Manger," "A Hole in the Ground," "A Midnight Bell," "A Milk White Flag," "A Rag Baby," "A Runaway Colt," "A Stranger in New York," "A Trip to Chinatown," "A Texas Steer," "A Temperance Town."

It is not known whether Mr. Ray will find any of these plays adaptable to his own personal use, but the new star-producer is considered to have put over a clever business coup by the acquisition of the fourteen Hoyt comedies for the Charles Ray Productions, Inc.

It does not require much thinking back on the part of adults of today to remember the startling vogue which the farce comedies of Charles H. Hoyt had in this country from ten to twenty years ago. These stage pieces, which were unusually adapted to use by stock companies, were played extensively in all sections of the country and the name of Hoyt was as well known in the smaller centers of the nation as in the large cities.

Through all of this playwright's work ran a vein of genial warmth and of sparkling humor. They were popular in the simplest sense of that word, for their appeal was not to any one class of the population but to the millions. The Hoyt plays never failed to draw full houses, the reason being that they aimed at nothing more than to furnish an evening of fun, simple, innocent fun, and gave to the mass of the people what seems requisite to comfortable existence—an occasional season of utter abandonment to amusement.

Believing that these qualities in the Hoyt collection will be particularly welcome to the photoplay medium which appeals to a vast, conglomerate audience, the Charles Ray Productions, Inc., are contemplating the filming of the comedies. The unique situations, the true-to-life characters, and the bright humor of the pieces are expected to develop into a superior brand of screen farce.

The author, Charles H. Hoyt, began his career as a newspaper man in Vermont, and later became a well-known member of the Boston Post staff, handling several departments in turn. As a dramatic critic his association with theatrical people led him to write for the stage. So great was the success of his attempt that he devoted himself exclusively to playwriting.

"Man to Man" for Screen

Universal-Educational to Produce Work of John Leitch for Screen

JOHN LEITCH, author of "Man to Man", a work which is declared to have been translated into seven languages and to have had twenty three English editions, has written a scenario of his book in collaboration with Harry Levey of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's educational department This scenario is to serve as the working basis for the picturization of Mr. Leitch's "Man to Man", the production of which is to be undertaken by the Universal Educational forces. Mr. Harry Levey will direct the picture, and the author himself is scheduled to appear in the leading part

The following statement has been issued, concerning the message that "Man to Man" has to offer as a means of bringing employers and their employees into earnest and pleasant cooperation

"Under John Leitch's system of industrial democracy, now being picturized by Harry Levey, a plant is governed by a House of Representatives, a Senate and a Cabinet. The House has one representative for every 20 to 100 workers, the workers themselves electing their own representatives. The Senate is not elective; it includes minor executives, department heads, foremen —according to the organization. The Cabinet is composed of the executive officers of the company, with the president as chairman The House and Senate "pass" the laws. The Cabinet has the power of veto, but this power has rarely, if ever, been exercised. Questions of wages, of piece rates, of discharges, of grievances of any kind whatsoever, as well as ways and means of reducing costs are handled by the House."

Speaking of the cost of the forthcoming production, which, it is estimated, will run into six figures, Mr. Leitch, who regards the screening of his work as an historic mark in the development of the motion-picture, is quoted as having declared: "If the picture costs $250,000 to complete I shall be pleased. If it costs twice that sum I shall be better pleased. The money is ready."

The famous novelist, Robert W Chambers, and Marion Davies, the Cosmopolitan Productions star, talk over Miss Davies' latest feature, "April Folly"

New Company to Film "Black Sheep"

The Ore-Col Film orporation, recently organized in Portland, Oregon, with A. D. Frost, president, and O. D. Woodward, vice-president, have purchased the "Black Sheep," by Will Payne. The continuity is being written by Mr Arthur Maude

The Ore-Col. Film Corporation has secured the services of Director John B. O'Brien. Among the cast will be:

Holmes Edward Herbert, Alice Mann, Hugh Huntley, John Hopkins, Walter P. Lewis and Bryon Russell.

The production is to be made in Denver, Colo., and work will start at once.

Record Set by "Jekyll and Hyde" Picture

"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," the Paramount-Artcraft super-special, in which John Barrymore is starred, set up during Holy Week at the Rivoli Theatre the most astonishing attendance record in the history of Broadway picture houses, according to figures made public by the Rialto-Rivoli management. The statement says that with total paid admissions for the week of 60,496, the best previous week was beaten by 3,066. Transferred to the Rialto, where it is now playing, it proceeded to shatter the records it had set up at the Rivoli and on Sunday showed to 10,513 paid admissions, eclipsing the best previous performances in either house for a single day.

Universal Buys Stage Hit

"La La Lucille" Will Be Picturized as Second Five-Reel Comedy

"La, La, Lucille," the musical comedy by Fred Jackson, which made a hit on Broadway last season, has been bought for picturization by Universal and will be the second five-reel comedy turned out by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. The two comedians are just completing their first venture into five-reel comedy, "Everything but the Truth," from a magazine story by Edgar Franklin.

Universal is said to have paid a handsome price for right to "La, La, Lucille." It was announced that this is part of the policy to supply the two popular fun-flingers with the best stories that money can buy. It also may be taken as an indication that Carl Laemmle, who now is at Universal City, Cal., has seen the test filming of "Everything but the Truth," and is highly pleased with the result of his experiment in letting Lyons and Moran tackle long comedies.

"La, La, Lucille" played at the Henry Miller theatre in New York for six months and at the Criterion for several additional months. The principals in the cast were John E. Hassard, Janet Velie and Henry Clarke. One company of "La, La, Lucille" is now touring in the South and another company is to start on tour about the time the Universal picture will be released.

Metro Farce Under Way

Production of "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" Begins at Hollywood

PRODUCTION of "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," a picturization of the successful stage farce by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan, has been begun at the Metro studios in Hollywood, Cal. This special feature, with an all-star cast headed by Ruth Stonehouse and Eugene Pallette, will be a forthcoming Loew-Metro release and constitute another link in the company's chain of noted plays by noted authors.

In the selection of the cast for "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," great care was exercised by Metro officials to obtain precisely the types necessary to portray the various roles. Toward this end the choice of Miss Stonehouse for the role of Polly Hathaway, the sprightly society reporter who becomes a "wild woman," was considered ideal. This is the part created in the stage production by Florence Moore, when the comedy made its great hit in New York a few seasons back.

Others in the all-star cast of "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," besides Mr. Pallette, who will contribute to its uproarious merriment as a screen entertainment, are Kathleen Kirkham, Charles R. West, Helene Sullivan, George Periolat, Dorothy Wallace and Henry Miller, Jr., a son of Henry Miller, the well-known stage star.

"Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" was scenarioized by June Mathis and A. P. Younger. Edward Dillon is directing the production, and William M. Edmond is doing the photography.

Mrs. Chaplin Scores in First-Run Theatres

The success attending the showing of Mildred Harris Chaplin's Mayer-made First National attraction, "The Interior Sex," in several of the first-run cities, seems to guarantee the effective putting over of this star, according to the producers.

In Milwaukee the newspaper critics were particularly laudatory of both the star and the picture and declared it was the best Mrs Chaplin had yet made.

Radiosoul Opens Exchange in New York

The Radiosoul Films, Inc., has opened an exchange of its own at 126 West 46th Street, New York, for the purpose of distributing Henrik Ibsen's "A Man There Was."

The organization is now working upon its second picture, called "The Eternal Feminine," again with Victor Seastrom as director and star, and which, when finished, will be released as a super-feature.

Novograph Establishes Executive Offices

The Novograph Film Corporation, producers of the "Analysis of Motion" pictures which appear weekly in the Pathe Review, have found it necessary to establish executive and conference offices in 25 West 45th street, New York. They will take possession on May 1st.

J. S. Dawley to Direct Australian Drama

J. Searle Dawley, director of "The Harvest Moon," latest Gibraltar picture from the drama of Augustus Thomas, has been retained to revise for early production an Australian drama, "The Wallaby Hunt," which had a long run in Sydney and Melbourne last year.

"Uneasy Feet" Is Well Received in West

THE first Comedyart production to be released by Special Pictures Corporation, "Uneasy Feet," was received with such applause by the audience, while playing at Goldwyn's California theatre, Los Angeles, that Manager Robert Poole was compelled to give a second showing of the film for the spectators. The local press and the trade publications have given the picture favorable criticism. The Rialto, New York, has signed the comedy for a second week with an option on a third. The Rivoli, New York, is also giving the picture a second-week showing. Reports from twenty-two exchanges tell of heavy bookings on the second Comedyart release, "Ima Vamp," to be released April 4th.

Arsene Lupin Stories Bought

Robertson-Cole Will Re-Make Famous French Stories

ROBERTSON COLE, in one of the most important statements of the year, has announced the signing of a contract whereby it obtains the complete screen rights to the Arsene Lupin detective stories, which were written by Maurice Leblanc, and which are one of the most celebrated series of criminal studies and romances from a world standpoint. The Robertson-Cole contract will cover a period of years, and during this time the distributing company will have the exclusive right to use all the stories from the collection.

Arsene Lupin, the character who has the central role in all these stories, is the master criminal of fiction. He has even been pitted against Sir A. Conan Doyle's famous character, Sherlock Holmes, whom he repeatedly bests in one of the most popular books of the Arsene Lupin series, the book known as "Arsene Lupin vs Sherlock Holmes." The stories of the famous French detective of criminals have been printed in all languages, and the productions, it is believed, will find an immediate and eager world audience.

The pictures, which will be based on the Arsene Lupin stories for distribution by Robertson-Cole, are not the first screen productions which have been made in this country. Paramount Artcraft and Vitagraph have each made one picturized version. The present plan is to release a limited number each year and to market them as "Specials." Work on the first production is to start shortly.

Robertson Cole in contracting for the Arsene Lupin series of stories dealt directly with Joseph Menchen, who controls the world rights. The first one of the stories which will be put on the screen is "813," one of the most dramatic and mysterious of the whole series of Arsene Lupin stories.

Robertson-Cole has under contract for appearance as the leading character of this story, Wedgewood Nowell. This artist is said to fit more closely into the personal appearance and characteristics of the role of Arsene Lupin as it is described in the story than any other motion picture actor. He had a stage career in which he supported Blanche Bates, Amelia Bingham, and William Faversham, before going on the screen.

Arsene Lupin is described in the Leblanc stories as having been first a noted criminal with whom the police could not cope and later having mended his ways to become a government agent. His vast fund of information regarding the methods of criminals was of such help to the French government as to render him invincible in the detection and pursuit of criminals. Besides the book "Arsene Lupin vs Sherlock Holmes," four other volumes have been issued of these stories. They are "The Extraordinary Adventures of Arsene Lupin," "The Exploits of Arsene Lupin," and "The Hollow Needle." Each volume contains a great number of stories, furnishing in the aggregate an enormous wealth of material for the director seeking a story of mystery.

Robertson Cole is counting on the fame of Arsene Lupin, which is world wide, to be a tremendous factor in the distribution of this picture. However, no expense or time will be spared in making each picture an attraction which can stand on its own merits.

"Star Series" Plan Is Back

PREVIOUS to the release of the Big Twelve, "The Big Money Twelve" and the "S. R. O. Twelve," Universal released its pictures under the "Star Series" plan. While the three series have been successful for exhibitors, there has been an insistent demand for a resumption of the star series plan, and Mr. Laemmle, president of Universal, has not only agreed to put the old plan into effect again, but extend it considerably.

The star series plan contemplates forty eight exceptional pictures produced in rotation by six popular Universal stars. The first picture under this policy will be released the first week of July, and will be followed every week.

Mr. Laemmle was not only guided by the expressions of exhibitors, but the leading exchange managers of the organization were consulted. At conventions held in New York and Chicago two weeks ago, the unanimous opinion of exchange managers was to the effect that the star series plan is the most popular, and one which enables any exhibitor to obtain high class Universal pictures suitable for his particular theatre and patrons.

The stars chosen for the series are Harry Carey, Edith Roberts, Carmel Myers, Frank Mayo, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran (co-starring) and one other star not yet named. Each of these stars will make eight pictures during the ensuing year.

"I believe," said Mr. Laemmle, discussing the star series plan, "that Universal will be able to give the best possible service to the maximum number of exhibitors under this plan. We have taken into consideration that some of our stars draw better than others in certain localities. An exhibitor now will be able to book pictures by the stars he knows are popular with his patrons. He also will be certain of eight pictures by each of the stars he books. He will be insured against competition for an entire year.

Harry Carey, Universal star. He will be seen shortly in a new picture, "Bullet Proof."

"We are announcing this new series now, so that our exhibitors will know that they can count on first-class Universal pictures with which to fill their theatres during the hot summer months.

"Every effort is being made to make the Star Series the best all-around film product turned out in the business. Particular attention is being paid to the selection of stories. We have had experts analyzing the kind of pictures in which our stars have made the greatest appeal in all sections of the country.

"Those are the kinds of pictures our exhibitors want and those are the kinds we are going to give them. Already a number of popular magazine stories by well known authors, several original screen stories of unusual merit, and the rights to several successful plays have been obtained.

"Douglas E. Doty, known as one of the ablest fiction buyers and rewriters in the magazine world, and who at one time was the editor of The Century Magazine and later of The Cosmopolitan, has been engaged to occupy a prominent post in the Universal scenario department. He has just arrived at Universal City, the Universal west coast studios.

"Lucien Hubbard, a New York newspaper man of wide experience and who recently was the chief scenario writer for the Vitagraph Company, also has just arrived at Los Angeles, to take charge of the scenarios for the Star Series."

Exhibitors All Praise "Forbidden Woman"

Equity Pictures second Clara Kimball Young production, "The Forbidden Woman," is carrying away honors in cities in which it is shown, according to telegrams and box office reports from exhibitors who have already shown the pictures, announces Equity Pictures.

"The Forbidden Woman," by comparison, is causing new reports to issue in that it is even exceeding the results obtained by exhibitors with "Eyes of Youth."

Exploitation Dept. is Enlarged

F. P.-Lasky Provides for Every One of Its Exchanges

ONE of the most important announcements made, following the recent sales convention of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Chicago, was that concerning the proposed expansion of the exploitation department. At the convention it was the consensus of opinion of all present, salesmen as well as executives, that the exploitation men had more than justified their existence, so to speak, and that the force ought to be augmented so that every Famous Players-Lasky exchange in the country should have an exploitation representative.

Both President Adolph Zukor and Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution, were unreserved in their praise of the work accomplished by the department under the supervision of Claud Saunders, and Mr. Saunders was forthwith given authority to so enlarge the personnel and scope of the department so that practically every town of importance in the country eventually would be able to avail itself of the services of an exploitation expert.

Since returning from Chicago, Mr. Saunders has been largely occupied with the details of his department's expansion, and within the past few weeks nearly fifteen new men have received assignments to the various exchanges. In some cases older men, members of the original personnel of the department, have been given new assignments, the larger and more important centers as a rule being placed in charge of the older man.

The list of appointees is now practically complete, the following being the present personnel of the force: A. G. Birch, Denver, Colo.; E. O. Child, New Orleans, La.; Frank A. Cassidy, Chicago, Ill.; Norman H. Dixon, Des Moines, Ia.; Oscar A. Doob, Cincinnati, O.; John P. Goring, Kansas City, Mo.; Edgar Healy, New York City; John D. Howard, San Francisco, Cal.; Benj. Laskin, Charlotte, N. C.; Walter Lindlar, Minneapolis, Minn.; John J. Maloney, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Fred W. McClellan, Philadelphia, Pa.; John P. McConville, Buffalo, N. Y.; Paul L. Morgan, New Haven, Conn.; Hal Alver, Omaha, Neb.; Eli M. Orowitz, Detroit, Mich.; N. K. Parkhurst, Salt Lake City, Utah; Norman Peel, Oklahoma City, Okla.; Herman Phillips, Washington, D. C.; H. Wayne Pierson, Atlanta, Ga.; Al Price, Los Angeles, Cal.; Charles Raymond, St. Louis, Mo.; Daniel Roche, Chicago, Ill.; Wayland H. Taylor, Seattle, Wash.; Fred E. Walters, Cleveland, O.; Leslie F. Whelan, Dallas, Tex.; Charles L. Winston, Boston, Mass. (temporary.)

"The best feature of the work of our department," said Exploitation Manager Saunders, "is the fact that we have sold the exhibitors on the proposition. When we started in, not a few exhibitors were skeptical, and of these nearly all practically refused to be shown. But there were exhibitors, big ones, too, who welcomed the aid we offered them and gave their complete co-operation. The result of the work accomplished by our men in putting over George Loane Tucker's 'The Miracle Man,' the first of our super-specials, was an eye-opener. So when Cecil B. DeMille's 'Male and Female' came along, we had a record to point to.

"What Happened? Where 'The Miracle Man' broke records, 'Male and Female' broke them again. The demand for the exploitation men increased a hundred per cent. Then came 'Everywoman,' and there were more new records set up. And so it has been with 'The Copperhead,' 'On With the Dance' and the other super-specials. Moreover, the expansion of the department makes it possible for us to give personal attention to second and third-run houses, and in many instances houses of these classes have duplicated the successes scored in the larger centers."

The Big Author in Filmdom

Tamar Lane Decries Practice of Preferring Authors to Stories

THE following expression of opinion comes from Tamar Lane, production manager of the Character Pictures, and centers around the question: Are "Big Authors" worth while in the picture industry? Mr. Lane says:

"It has been amusing during the past few months to watch the producers in their mad scramble to secure 'Big Authors' vieing with one another to get an imaginary corner on the imaginary market. It seems time that some one gave the infant industry a new bottle of milk and scratched up the surface a bit. The producers, who are scrambling to get these 'Big Authors' are merely covering up their inability to secure good stories by a camouflage of big names. The worst of it is, the exhibitors are paying dearly for it.

"This does not mean that Character Pictures is averse to buying the works of successful authors and playwrights as we have already purchased several, but they were not bought because they were written by 'Big Authors' but because they were 'Big Stories.' And that is what the screen needs—'Big Stories' It matters not who they are written by."

"There is no reason for making such an almighty fuss over the "Big Author", as though the entire salvation of the silent drama depended upon them. We are all very glad to have as many brilliant men as possible turn their attention to the motion picture; but simply because they are well known and have made a success at writing fiction is no reason we should humble ourselves prostrate before them.

"Before the 'Big Authors' are awarded such royal receptions and treated with such importance, they should first show, at least, a sympathy in their motion picture work and evidence an ability to write as well for the screen as our own original scenario writers.

New Keenan Picture Now Ready

Announcement has been made by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., that the latest Frank Keenan production, "Dollar for Dollar," will be released on May 2. The picture is another powerful play of the type created in the last year by Mr. Keenan, and, according to the unanimous opinion of all who attended the first showing at the Pathe Exchange home office, it will be generally regarded as another masterpiece of the able actor and director.

The picture is a drama of high finance and society, and Mr. Keenan has surrounded himself with a splendid cast of screen favorites, several of whom have been with him in other successes. Among them are Kathleen Kirkham, Harry Van Meter, Kate Van Buren, Jay Belasco and Gertrude Clair. In direction Mr. Keenan was assisted by Elliot Howe and the author of the story, Ethel Watts Mumford.

The picture is said to be a worthy successor to "The World Aflame," "Brothers Divided" and "Smoldering Embers," all plays that have met with great popular favor, and it will please the great mass of motion picture patrons who have come to have the highest regard for Mr. Keenan as one of the leading character actors of the screen.

Equity Special Picture Opens in Washington

Equity Pictures special production, "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives," starring House Peters, opened at the Metropolitan and Knickerbocker theatres, Washington, D. C., for week beginning Sunday, April 4, appearing simultaneously in both theatres on the same day.

House Peters, Mary Alden, Vincent Serrano, Eva Novak, Mildred Reardon, Sam Sothern and other prominent people are seen in "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives."

Ince Managers Perfects New Still Camera

An unique arrangement whereby a still camera will be attached to a motion picture camera and automatically operated by the cinematographer for the purpose of taking production and publicity "stills" simultaneously with the shooting of actual scenes, has been perfected by Clark W. Thomas, Production Manager of the Thomas H. Ince Studios at Culver City, California.

Mexican Village Built for Tri-Star Picture

Construction work has been begun in the heart of the Connecticut hills on a lifesize replica of a Mexican village, for use in filming a number of dramatic incidents that run through the story of "The Super-Woman," the production in which Miss Ethel Barrymore is being starred by Directors Joseph Byron Totten and Joseph W. Smiley for Tri-Star Pictures.

Pathe Reports Glowing Accounts on Serial

Pathe states that reports from a great majority of the theatres playing "Daredevil Jack" announce that the later releases of the picture are drawing greater numbers all the time. And this increased patronage, according to Pathe, is due rather to the appeal of the picture itself than the magnet of the extensive exploitation and publicity that have been carried on for the production. Branch managers continue to send in reports of an unprecedented demand, it is stated, and exhibitors are stated to have forwarded glowing accounts of "clean-ups" in the box-office

Alice Brady Starts on Another for Realart

This will be Miss Brady's first picture since she completed "The Fear Market," by Princess Troubetskoy. It will be Mr. Robertson's second picture for Realart, the first being "Erstwhile Susan."

Douglas Fairbanks Buys an Original Story

Douglas Fairbanks announces that he has purchased an original story by Louis Weadock, which may be produced in the near future.

Mr. Weadock, who was formerly a newspaper man and magazine writer, spent four months in the scenario department at the Fairbanks studio, where he assisted the star in the preparation for the screen of Mr. Fairbanks' story, "When the Clouds Roll By."

N. L. Royster Will Not Open Exchange

Nat L. Royster, publisher of the Southern Picture News, announces that contrary to certain statements which have been circulated, he has not opened a state rights exchange in Atlanta and has no such project under contemplation. He will continue to edit and publish his weekly, the Southern Picture News.

Carpentier Picture Is Begun

Press Publicity to Be Used in Robertson-Cole Campaign

THE debut of Georges Carpentier, the French pugilist, in the coming Robertson Cole release, work upon which has already been started, according to advices from that company, is made the subject of a lengthy statement recently received from the Robertson Cole headquarters. The statement follows:

"Work has already been started," says the report, "in the Solax studio, New Jersey, on the Carpentier picture. During the first two weeks that the noted Frenchman was in New York, John G. Adolfi, who is directing the production which Carpentier is making for Robertson-Cole, was busy in settling the details. He has now engaged a company which will support Carpentier adequately, and little time will be lost in turning out this release, which is to be released in the late spring.

"The speed with which work is being pushed, however, will in no wise be allowed to detract from its dramatic merit. At all times the director will have in mind, that he aims to make a dramatic picture able to stand alone as a Special even without the aid of the noted Frenchman's name.

"The great number of applicants which came to Mr. Adolfi, wishing positions in the picture, can be taken as an indication of the wide interest which there is in the Carpentier production in the show world. As for the interest on the outside, this can be measured excellently through the enormous amount of newspaper space which has been devoted to Carpentier since he landed in America.

"The French boxer, aviator, and war hero has been maintaining headquarters at the Biltmore Hotel. Here he has been besieged by countless newspaper and magazine writers, motion picture people, and others of various pursuits interested in obtaining from him contracts of many sorts.

"To show the immense popularity of Carpentier, Robertson-Cole has sent broadcast excerpts from the leading dailies in the United States. Statistics compiled by Robertson-Cole prove conclusively that Carpentier has received more publicity upon his arrival in New York than any other celebrity of international repute.

"In the first week, in addition to editorials commenting upon Carpentier's manly prestige, there appeared in the New York dailies more than one hundred columns of publicity and all writers were in accord in the statement that this world hero is all that the European papers have declared him to be.

"Following are a few of the most pertinent criticisms used in the New York dailies on Carpentier and which are being used for exploitation purposes by Robertson Cole in preparation for the Carpentier special:

"The Standard Union of Brooklyn, N. Y., wrote: 'His sunny disposition and ever ready smile enlisted the greatest gathering of sportsmen in this country as his friends. The veteran of the big war still further won the admiration of the club when, in reply to the speech of Major General O'Ryan, the toastmaster, he said in very good English "Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you for this great welcome and hospitality."'

"The New York Mail said: 'There is such a demand for the appearance of Georges Carpentier in various places in this country that he could spend two years here and not satisfy all the demands for his time.'

"From the New York Sun Herald came the following: 'When Georges Carpentier appeared before the International Sporting Club, at the Commodore Hotel, the real dyed in the wool boxing fans were astonished and delighted to see present at the speakers' table Charles S. Whitman, former Governor of New York State, remembered as the man who chased boxing across the Hudson River. Gaston Liebert, the French Consul General in New York, represented Jules Jusserand, the French Ambassador.

Acquires New Authors

Goldwyn Adds Cynthia Stockley and E. P. Oppenheim to Its List

ADDED to the list of well known authors, whose works are being transformed into photoplays by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, are two more names that stand for the best in current fiction both here and in England, E. Phillips Oppenheim and Cynthia Stockley.

Contracts with those two writers were signed last week, giving Goldwyn Pictures Corporation the screen rights to their books for a period of years. Mr. Oppenheim's novels have long held a high place in the "best seller" class, and only a few of them have been done in pictures. They are rich in dramatic material of the kind that lends itself particularly well to screen interpretation.

In selecting the most suitable works of the novelist, the Goldwyn company may turn to some of his earlier stories as well as those of a more recent date. During his long career, Mr Oppenheim has been a prolific writer with a seemingly inexhaustible fertility in plot building. His works are always marked by fast action and dramatic incident. Among his books published during the last ten years are "The Mischief Maker", "The Amazing Partnership", "The Wicked Marquis" and "The Curious Quest".

Although Cynthia Stockley is not so well known in America as Phillips Oppenheim, "Wild Honey", "Poppy", "The Claw" and other works from her pen, published in this country by G. P. Putnam's Sons, have had a large sale. She lived all of her early life in South Africa and most of her books deal with the Free State and its people. Probably no writer of the day has a more thorough knowledge of Boer character and customs.

Goldwyn has not yet announced its selection of the first works of the two English novelists to be filmed.

Improve Screen via Scenario

That Is the Dictum of William LeBaron of Cosmopolitan

William Le Baron, scenario editor for Cosmopolitan films

WILLIAM LE BARON, scenario editor for the Cosmopolitan Productions, recently issued a statement on the relation of the scenario writer to the screen of the future. In Mr. LeBaron, the improvement of the screen as a vehicle of original expression depends primarily upon the development of writers whose objective shall be to write for the screen exclusively and directly and not for the screen via the novel or the stage play. Coming from an authority of Mr. LeBaron's calibre, this statement contains added force. He was formerly editor of the Collier's Weekly and is well known as a playwright, two of his best known hits being "The Very Idea" and "Apple Blossoms." Mr. LeBaron's statement follows:

"The greatest need of motion picture producers today is to develop writers for the future—specialists in screen material because only in that way will the motion picture ever attain the standing of true literature, the highest form of pictorial expression, which is its destiny.

"There isn't any doubt in my mind," said Mr. LeBaron, "that so far as the scenario department is concerned, the screen is still in its embryonic state. Nor, in my opinion, will the motion picture come into its own until it has established a story source within itself.

"While we have today several scenario writers whose weekly salary mounts up to a thousand dollars, we have not one writer who is as expert in his or her field as any one of thirty or forty playwrights I can name is in the production of stage plays, or magazine writers in the production of magazine stories. I mean to say that playwrights and magazine writers have achieved a higher degree of excellence and perfection at their respective callings than have any of our scenario writers at the screen.

"Contrary to first impression, this is rather a hopeful condition because it shows that however good some photoplays are there is still room for improvement. And the improvement lies with the producers. It is up to them.

"The idea, as I see it, is to encourage able writers to take up the screen. A magazine writer writes his story with the magazine in mind. The playwright writes his play with the stage in mind. The technique of the photoplay is vastly different from the technique of either of these. To adapt a magazine story or a play to the screen and to do it as it should be done requires a thorough knowledge of the screen's latitude and scope. We have playwrights who can take a magazine story and make a play out of it not only to do them proud but to uphold the best traditions of the stage. But we have no scenarists who know their trade as well as the playwrights know theirs and who can turn out as good work comparatively.

"What we need is able technicians, writers who can adapt for the screen as successfully as playwrights adapt for the stage. We must interest able writers in this new form of expression. We must make it profitable for them both from a literary and artistic point of view and the financial point of view to devote their best energies towards the production annd development of screen material. To do so we must compete with the stage. We must establish some sort of basis of reward whereby the writer will profit from his writings in accordance with their value as established by the public. Perhaps a royalty arrangement like the playwrights' will do.

"But only when we succeed in establishing a field of able technicians who will be as thorough in their work as are the playwrights in theirs, will we have started right towards insuring and giving to the screen a high quality of photoplays."

Cosmopolitan Adds Another Author to Staff

Cosmopolitan Productions has added another famous author to its staff of well known writers. James Oliver Curwood has signed a contract giving Cosmopolitan Productions exclusive motion picture rights to any and all of his stories published in Cosmopolitan, Hearst's, Good Housekeeping, and Harper's Bazaar. By this arrangement several of the best Curwood stories will be picturized by Cosmopolitan Productions. Arrangements are now being made for the scenario of the first Curwood story.

Former Universal Man Heads New Concern

R. R. Rockett, for two years with Universal as purchasing agent, recently tendered his resignation, and last week he became president and general manager of a newly formed organization incorporated as the Ramona Film Corporation of California, with a paid up capital of $100,000. Other officers of the company are A. L. Rockett, secretary; E. H. Christianson, vice-president, and S. C. Buchannan, treasurer.

It will be the policy of the new company to produce features, and President Rockett will leave for New York in a few days to complete negotiations for release and screen rights to a number of books the company has under consideration.

Bert Lytell Praised by Press Reviewers

Unanimous praise from newspaper reviewers greeted the showing of "The Right of Way," starring Bert Lytell, on the occasion of its recent run at Tally's Broadway Theatre in Los Angeles. Of "The Right of Way," Henry E. Dougherty, writing in the Los Angeles Express, said, among other things:

"Mr. Lytell's performance is so finished that I am sure his newest picture is going to prove a sensation. Those who see the picture will say that its threads have been carefully woven into a priceless fabric—a wonderful play—and through it all scintillates the personality of Bert Lytell."

SIMPLE SOULS

Border is Eager to See Pathe's "Rio Grande"

The Edwin Carewe production of Augustus Thomas's famous stage play, "Rio Grande," released by Pathe is exciting the greatest interest in cities and towns along the Mexican border, and in the last week, one month before the release date, many theatres have wired for early dates on the production. The picture involved the use of several hundred cowboys and Texas rangers.

Among the houses that have already contracted for the picture are the Amuse-U, of Las Cruces, New Mexico; the People's theatre, of Port Arthur, Texas, and the Jewel and People's theatres, of Beaumont, Texas. Others have wired for contracts and will close in the next week. Many newspapers have commented on the filming of Mr. Thomas's story, as the public of the area are intimately concerned in the border situation.

Miss Kellerman Makes Underwater Scenes

Annette Kellerman and her company have been devoting the past week to the underwater scenes for her new comedy drama, which she is making for Sol Lesser. A pool of clear water was specially constructed at Riverside, California, and with the aid of a huge diving bell some of the remarkable underwater photography was secured by the Kellerman cameraman.

During the making of the scenes J. D. Williams, president of the First National, and Sol Lesser, who controls the Los Angeles franchise for the organization, motored to Riverside on a tour of inspection.

Associated Exhibitors Engage Phil Ryan

Phil Ryan, who recently resigned his position as feature sales manager for Pathe Exchange, Inc., has become connected with Associated Exhibitors, Inc., with which organization he assumes duties under General Manager F. C. Quimby which will bring him into intimate touch with the holders of franchises and sub-franchises in the association. It is with the holders and prospective holders of sub-franchises that Mr. Ryan will be concerned most directly.

Pathe Reviews Its Year's Work

Feature Business for Three Months Beats Previous Year

WHILE Pathe's feature business during the first three months of this year has been booming at a rate to carry the total figures beyond the best total for any three months in 1919, a consistent effort has been made by officials of the great releasing organization to improve the merit of its product. The success attending these efforts has been very marked, and included in the January, February and March releases of Pathe have been some of the most successful productions of the year, namely, "Other Men's Shoes," "My Husband's Other Wife," "Fighting Cressy," "Smoldering Embers," "Tarnished Reputations" and "The Deadlier Sex."

During March, "Brunet Anniversary Month," when all feature sales and collections of a similar period were shattered, the releases were, "In Walked Mary," starring June Caprice; "Tarnished Reputations," with Dolores Cassinelli, and "The Deadlier Sex," with Blanche Sweet's name billed as the big attraction.

Each of these productions has been selling at a rate calculated to far exceed the quotas set for them by Pathe.

In the previous month, "Other Men's Shoes" was the distinguished performer in a trio of pictures rated among the finest Pathe has ever released. In the first month of its existence the big Edgar Lewis production sent into the discard booking records established by "The Thirteenth Chair" and "Common Clay," which had stood at the top of all Pathe feature business.

During February, in addition to "Other Men's Shoes," there was also released "Smoldering Embers," called by some exhibitors and critics the best picture ever produced by Frank Keenan with the exception of "The World Aflame." Another issue was J. Stuart Blackton's "Respectable by Proxy," starring Robert Gordon and Sylvia Breamer, ranking next to "My Husband's Other Wife" in the list of Black ton triumphs. Incidentally the latter production inaugurated the year for Pathe, being the first feature release in January. It recalled to exhibitors some of the great productions made in the past by Commodore Blackton, and did, and is still doing, a business in proportions exceeding Pathe's expectations by many thousands.

During the last month, "Fighting Cressy" and "The Web of Deceit," respectively starring Blanche Sweet and Dolores Cassinelli, were other releases, and they, too, proved not only their class, but became established with the best box office attractions of the period.

Maintaining the excellence of product distributed during the first three months, Pathe offers during April three more above the average attractions, "Lifting Shadows," a Leonce Perret production starring Emmy Wehlen; "The Blood Barrier," a Blackton melodrama starring Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon, and "Rio Grande," Edwin Carewe's first independent feature, based upon Augustus Thomas's famous stage play of the same name.

Producers Are Thanked by Capitol Manager

THE following letter was addressed by Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol theatre, New York, to the Cosmopolitan Productions:

"At the end of the week of Marion Davies in 'April Folly,' the first of your productions which we have exhibited in the Capitol, I want to thank you for the splendid co-operation you have given us and for the magnificent box-office result.

"As you know, this is Holy Week, and we had every reason to anticipate the customary decrease in gross receipts, due to the Lenten observance, but it may gratify you to know that our receipts for this week instead of showing a decrease have shown a very material increase.

"With thanks and appreciation, I remain,

"Very truly yours,

"Edward Bowes,

"Managing Director."

"Flying A" Picture Named

"The House of Toys" Taken From Novel by Henry Russell Miller

THE forthcoming American super-special is to be called "The House of Toys," a visualization of the novel by the same name, written by Henry Russell Miller, who was made famous by "The Man Higher Up," published by the Bobbs Merrill Company in 1910.

This new "Flying A" drama is one of romance and ambition which barely misses being a domestic tragedy. In it the doll house dream of the wealthy society girls comes to grief when she marries a talented but the poor architect, and faces the realities of economical home-making, but in the end she reaches the eminence of a true helpmate just before her husband's dream of love is forever shattered.

"The House of Toys" is being directed by George L. Cox, and an unusually well balanced cast has been selected. For the big role of the heroine, "Shirley Ford," Seena Owen has been secured, with Pell Trenton as leading man and Helen Jerome Eddy in a very prominent part. In the cast also are George Hernandez, Lillian Leighton, Marian Skinner, Stanhope Wheatcroft, William Buckley, Henry Barrows and Perry Banks.

Ince to Film "Beau Revel"

Heads the List of Vance Stories to Be Picturized by Thomas Ince

THE first of a series of high-grade attractions written by Louis Joseph Vance and enacted by all star casts, will enter production at the Thomas H. Ince Studios within the next ten days, it was announced this week by Mr. Ince.

"Beau Revel," a modern society drama depicting the undercurrents of the transgressing Smart Set, heads the list of famous Vance stories to be picturized and produced under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

Louis Joseph Vance, who recently signed an agreement which gives the Ince Studios exclusive motion picture rights to his original stories and published novels, is at present in New York City, where his work on the continuity of "Beau Revel" is nearing completion.

Following on the heels of the initial Vance special will come six or eight more big feature productions from the pen of the noted author and traveler, whose printed works are widely read in every corner of the civilized world, and whose contributions to the Ince schedule of attractions insures exhibitors and the public a series of all-absorbing modern dramas constructed around themes of vital interest to all classes of theatregoers.

Thomas H. Ince and his casting staff are now engaged in selecting principals and players to portray the unusual characters suggested by the original "Beau Revel" story. The locale of the piece is along New York's Great White Way, where the "Beau Revel" of Broadway's "shimmy-ized" cabarets becomes entangled in certain romantic complications which involve his son, Dick, and lead to startling dramatic situations.

Louis Burston Approves Present-Day Methods

In voicing his enlarged faith in serials and pictures as they are now being made, Mr Louis Burston, whose experience dates back to the earliest days of the industry, when West Fourteenth Street, New York, was Manhattan's film bourse, before even the General Film Corporation was formed, said

"The public is deciding the direction of film stories, serial and otherwise, just as it decides the direction of the plays of the regular stage, and for that matter of the direction of the fiction of books. It's old-time satisfaction with merely pictures that realized motion is gone. Today's public demands a high tone of consistency, a swift succession of incidents, a common sense expression of the emotions of the characters. The old days of lost motion in direction, when, if a character was leaving one locality for a trip to another, the details of the trip had to be shown, are happily gone. Now, the imagination of the audiences generally may be relied upon to be as alert as the imagination of the director, with the result that the footage may be used for vital drama instead of unnecessary detail fluff."

Gladys Brockwell Is Keeping Busy

Completing work in "Rose of Nome," an Alaskan story, written especially for her by Barbara De-Marr Deely, and in which she was directed by the veteran Edward J. LeSaint, Gladys Brockwell, Fox star, stepped at once before the camera in the role of Elinore Duane, central character in "Sister to Salome," on the same day she finished her previous vehicle.

"Rose of Nome" was finished by LeSaint in the morning, and the scenario checked by cameraman and director. During luncheon at the studio, the star and director studied the story of "Sister to Salome," and at the end of the meal Miss Brockwell went to her dressing room and donned her make-up for the new tale written for her by Julius G. Furtman, who is a recent addition to the Fox scenario staff in California.

Pioneer's "Jekyll and Hyde" Film a Hit

Sheldon Lewis in Pioneer's version of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" is enjoying a big success in all parts of the country, it is said. In the New York territory the demand for this picture has been so great that several additional prints have been ordered to fill all the first run contracts, according to Pioneer.

Reports from Herman Rifkin of the Eastern Feature Company of Boston, who holds the Pioneer franchise for New England, indicate that "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" will be the greatest success that has ever been shown in that territory under the Pioneer banner.

Every exchange of the Pioneer Co-operative Distribution System has doubled its order for prints, it is stated, with the result that the laboratories, handling the Pioneer work, are running night and day.

Nazimova Establishes Record

NAZIMOVA established what is for her a speed record in the filming of a production when she completed her newest Metro picture, "The Heart of a Child," in forty working days. Seven weeks after the picnic scenes that began the play were photographed at Silver Lake, Cal., the final scenes were "shot" in the Metro studios in Hollywood. The Russian star enacting the rôle of Sally Snape, Limehouse gutter snipe, sped up her production to this extent notwithstanding she was ill with a cold for three days during its making as the result of working all night on location in extremely cold weather, Metro declares.

Nazimova played blindman's buff and other outdoor games during the first days of production. A bank holiday picnic of the employes of a London jam and pickle factory was the occasion, and the scene was supposed to be a pretty stretch of country near London, the British metropolis. Sally Snape, the little gutter child, whose early life is told of in Frank Danby's novel, is a worker in the factory and a member of the hilarious picnic crowd.

Silver Lake is outside of Los Angeles. It is a favorite site for local picnic parties, and its possibilities for artistic motion photography were taken full advantage of by Rudolph Bergquist, cameraman for the Nazimova production.

In "The Heart of a Child" the woodland picnic comes in pleasant contrast to the sordid Limehouse tenement incidents which open the romance of Sally Snape and the Lord Kidderminster.

Nazimova in one of the scenes of her new Metro picture, "The Heart of a Child."

There is a barbaric severity in the dull orange, stippled walls of the London modiste's shop designed by Allen Ruoff. The showroom of the shop is octagonal in form and permits what the cameraman calls "long shots" of fifty feet in one direction and sixty feet in another. The roughly surfaced walls of orange are unrelieved except by a base line of marble which, at one end of the room, borders a circled proscenium arch through which the fashion mannequins emerge.

The stage behind the circled opening is backed by a silken curtain of dark gray. The opening itself is draped with transparent netting, dotted with red ball mooms and bound by cords with heavy tassels. On either side of the opening stands a polished Japanese crocker jar in which are lotus leaves.

Thus is the frame in which Nazimova, in outre fringed smock and Chinese trousers of pale blue silk, poses for the aristocratic customers of a smart dressmaking establishment.

The "Frank Danby" who wrote "The Heart of a Child" was in private life Mrs Julia Frankau, an English woman journalist, who preferred to be known under a masculine nom de plume. "The Heart of a Child," published in 1908, was her seventh novel. She subsequently wrote eight other books, but "The Heart of a Child" still remains one of her most popular works. In 1915, the year before her death, she published "Nelson's Legacy" and "The Story Behind the Verdict." Charles Bryant adapted "The Heart of a Child" to the screen for Nazimova and wrote the scenario.

With Nazimova, Charles Bryant, Victor Potel, Nell Newman, Ray C. Thompson and the other principals of the cast, ninety persons worked on the location. The scenes were directed by Ray C. Smallwood. It will be distributed by Metro as an early release. It follows "Stronger Than Death" and "The Brat."

Educational to Own Exchanges

CONTRACTS involving the expenditure of more than a million dollars, signed during the past fortnight, represent some of the recent activities of the Educational Films Corporation, according to announcement of the company this week.

Arrangements are progressing with all the rapidity consistent with careful selection of representatives for opening of Educational exchanges in principal centres. These will be controlled directly by the company and will handle nothing but short subjects.

During the week contracts were signed with some of the most important exhibitor interests in the country for the establishment of exchanges. Several of the largest centres await only announcement of locations of the offices; negotiations are near the signature point with several others, while a few territories remain open.

While Educational will maintain the controlling interest in each exchange, it is adopting a cooperative policy whereby men of high standing are interested in this ownership. In every case these are men who have large exhibitor interests and who have been led to become associated with the company because of their knowledge of the high quality of Educational product.

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of Educational, this week outlined the exchange plans for the first time. "During five years of Educational Films Corporation's existence," he stated, "it has been distributing through independent exchanges. For some time we have realized the imperfections of this system. In the first instance, these arrangements have prevented the direct supervision of sales and exploitation that we have desired. While this plan has made money for us and each exchange, we have been satisfied that we were unable to afford the degree of service we desired to give.

"This is no reflection on the men who have been handling our product in the various territories. The chief fault has been the same found in every exchange that handles 'mixed' products both long and short subjects. It is natural that salesmen should devote the greater portion of their time to selling and exploiting pictures that bring the greater volume of revenue. Specialization in the handling of short subjects is absolutely essential. We have been convinced for some time that they should be handled by absolutely separate exchanges, and this will be our policy hereafter.

Offices to Open Soon Will Handle All Short Subjects

"We believe that our new policy will bring about the three things necessary for the ideal exchange system: First, the exchange will handle nothing but short subjects, enabling a specialization in this product that is not possible with exchanges handling the features as well. Second, we will be able to exert direct control of the exchanges and provide sales arrangements and exploitation aids that will be of direct aid to the exhibitor. Third, the management of the exchange will have financial interest in its earnings and in its permanency, and therefore there will be every urge for fair business dealing, the fullest cooperation with the exhibitor, and the creation of a volume of business that is bound to have its reflex in the quality of product.

"Some of the leading interests of the country have signed contracts. Other important territories will be closed in a few days, and a minor number remain open until we get in touch with men whose connection we consider desirable."

Tarkington Signs Contract

Author to Write Screen Stories for Baker During Current Year

BOOTH TARKINGTON, the well known fiction writer, has added his signature to a contract whereby he agrees during the current year, to write directly for the screen. Tarkington Baker, who has just resigned as general manager of production for Universal, to start his own company, is the man who signed up the famous novelist. Mr. Baker is the author's cousin.

Up to the present time Mr. Tarkington has been averse to writing for the screen. It was his judgment several months ago that motion picture producers were too much inclined to sacrifice all other considerations to plot alone. He deplored the fact that characterization played, as he saw it, only an insignificant part in screen productions.

"No limitations have been placed on Mr. Tarkington's efforts," states Baker. "He has a free hand. As a result he means to put into his work all the genius and enthusiasm characteristic of his plays for the stage. I haven't the remotest idea what he will write about. That is his affair. I only know that he will write directly for the screen and bring to his credit new fame and glory."

Mr. Baker, it is announced, will sign similar contracts with at least three more authors of world-wide prominence. "I believe in the story," Mr. Baker has declared, "Silk purses aren't made of sow's ears; good pictures aren't made out of no-good material. The time has come when the author will come into his own with discriminating audiences the country over."

Mayflower Keeps Busy Pace

Isaac Wolper Denies Any "Split" Between Mayflower and Realart

An interesting new portrait study of June Elvidge, who has just completed the filming of Charles Miller's production of "The Law of the Yukon," adapted from Robert W. Service's poem of the same name, and which is soon to be released by Mayflower-Realart

IN a statement from the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, a vigorous denial is registered by Isaac Wolper against a story that has been circulated to the effect that a "split" has occurred between the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation and the Realart interests.

"Any printed statement to the effect that Mayflower and Realart have 'parted company' is not true," Mr. Wolper stated. "Arrangements are now being made by Realart for the release of both Walsh's picture, 'The Deep Purple,' and Miller's production, 'The Law of the Yukon.' In fact, the billboard paper is out on these productions and the advertising campaigns are well under way. Several weeks ago an announcement was made through the trade papers that these would be the last two of the Mayflower pictures to be released through Realart. This, however, does not mean that there has been any 'split,' as the papers choose to call it."

According to Mr. Wolper, several deals are now pending which relate to the manner in which productions presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation are to be released. As yet, however, no arrangement has been closed and consequently nothing definite can be said about the method or medium of release.

Walsh has been working diligently at the Paragon studio on the film version of Paul Armstrong's and Wilson Mizner's famous play and expects to deliver the film to Realart within the next few days. Charles Miller's screen interpretation of Service's classic poem is now being cut and titled and delivery of the finished picture will be made shortly. Both pictures are scheduled for release through Realart on May second.

Charles Miller is now looking for another story, and Emile Chautard is finishing work on his latest production, as yet unnamed. Allan Dwan expects to start work on his sixth and last production to be presented by Mayflower the first of next week. Sidney A. Franklin, who is filming Robert W. Chambers' novel, "Athalie," at the Brunton studio, Los Angeles, is well along on production now, having been shooting for the past three weeks. Having completed "The Deep Purple," R. A. Walsh is now reported to be sleuthing for another story. It is very likely, according to reports, that he will decide upon a vehicle dealing with city life.

"The Illiterate Digest" Not a Space Filler

The newest of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, Inc., releases, "The Illiterate Digest," by Will Rogers, noted Goldwyn star, will not be a program filler in any sense of the word, according to West Coast advices from Mr. Kohn. "On the contrary," states Mr. Kohn, "the time will come, and in the near future, too, when the Will Rogers' epigrams will be looked upon as the shortest feature in the world."

"The Illiterate Digest" will be marketed via state rights. The first three prints have already been sent to New York for a preview. The necessary cinematograph is being done by one of the best of the Goldwyn cameramen. Laboratory work will also be done by Goldwyn.

Agnes Ayres Is Made Star

Actress Signs With New Neilan-Kaufman Alliance

FOLLOWING the announcement of the co-operative production alliance between Marshall Neilan and Albert A. Kaufman comes the news of the signing of Agnes Ayres, the beautiful and talented screen-actress to a long term contract by Mr. Kaufman under the terms of which Miss Ayres is to be starred in a series of special features which it is freely predicted will soon bring her into the limelight as one of the really great stars of the photoplay.

Miss Ayres is a girl of remarkable beauty and screen personality, and with several years' experience as "leading lady" of recognized ability, she has all the necessary requisites to enter stardom with an assured success.

After her graduation from high school in Chicago, Illinois, Miss Ayres was intent on entering the University of Chicago to take up the study of law or medicine as a profession. While on a visit to the Essanay studio, however, her attractiveness was noted by the director and she was asked to play a small part in a picture which she did in a capable manner. A permanent engagement was then offered her, which she accepted.

Agnes Ayres, who is to star in Marshall Neilan and Albert Kaufman productions.

The fascinating thought of a motion picture career offset her ambition and she determined to make the screen her life work.

By conscientious application to her work Miss Ayres advanced steadily and with each succeeding picture she was given roles of more importance. After her engagement with Essanay she joined the Mutual Film Company and under the direction of Frank Powell she supported Nance O'Neil in one production and Marjorie Rambeau in five. Then she went to the Eastern Vitagraph Company, where she remained two years.

During this period Miss Ayres supported Alice Joyce in "Richard the Brazen," Harry Morey in "The Gamblers" and "Honor's Web," co-starred in one production with Edward Earle and played the lead in twenty of Vitagraph's series of O. Henry's stories.

It was during her engagement with Vitagraph that Marshall Neilan, after viewing a picture in which Miss Ayres appeared, commented on her beauty and talent to a mutual friend and predicted a great future for her. The friend told of Mr Neilan' compliment and it served to instil a self-confidence which she had not had before possessed.

Recently Mr Neilan and Mr Kaufman watched her work on the screen and both were enthusiastic about the probabilities of her becoming one of the most popular stars appearing before the camera. Both producers were anxious to obtain Miss Ayres for their respective companies. But being friends of long standing and with the proposed co-operative alliance, which is now a reality in mind, it was amicably agreed that Mr. Kaufman should make the bid for the new star with the proviso that Mr Neilan should have an option on her services whenever she was available.

While her first starring vehicle is in preparation, Miss Ayres is playing the leading role in the third Neilan picture, which affords her exceptional opportunities. The Agnes Ayres Company will be the second company under the Kaufman banner, he having recently signed Allan Holubar to direct a series of special productions starring Dorothy Phillips.

London Manager Sails After Studying Field

S. Rowson, managing director of the Ideal Film Renting Company, Ltd., one of the oldest and largest distributing organizations in Great Britain, sailed Saturday on the Lapland for London after spending several weeks in New York studying American motion picture conditions in general and especially familiarizing himself with the activities of Educational Films Corporation.

On his last trip to England, E. W. Hammons, vice president and general manager of Educational, completed the purchase of the controlling interest in Ideal, which insures perfect distributing arrangements in Great Britain.

Sailing on the Lapland also was William Davis, of Educational Films, Co., Ltd., of London, which is one hundred per cent owned by Educational Films Corporation.

New Studio To Obviate Editorial Troubles

The new Famous Players-Lasky studio, now nearing completion at Long Island City, L. I., will be able to boast one of the most efficiently organized editorial departments in the country, it is reported. Gardner Hunting, eastern production editor, outlined the company's plans in a recent interview.

"For some time past," Mr. Hunting said, "the task of editing our productions has been surrounded by difficulties. Owing to the crowded studio conditions and the consequent lack of office space, we have hitherto been compelled to distribute the various units of our department around in our different studios; which, in spite of the best of co-operation has not always had the tendency to produce entirely satisfactory results. In our new plant, all undesirable features will be eliminated for we shall all be housed under one roof."

Metro is Gladdened by Exhibitor's Praise

J. F. Davis, Metro branch manager in Pittsburgh, recently received an unsolicited letter of endorsement of Metro productions from Bennett Amdursky, manager of the Garden theatre on the North Side of Pittsburgh.

Bessie Barriscale has a congenial role in the new Robertson-Cole production, "The Notorious Mrs. Sands."

New Release Announced

Robertson-Cole Has Barriscale and Hayakawa Productions Ready

BESSIE Barriscale in "The Notorious Mrs. Sands," a romantic drama of American society, showing this star in one of her finest characterizations, and Sessue Hayakawa in "The Devil's Claim," a fascinating tale of mystery and adventure, with Greenwich Village, New York's Latin Quarter and Egypt as a background, are two superior pictures announced by Robertson-Cole for release shortly.

Miss Barriscale, in "The Notorious Mrs. Sands," makes much of her excellent opportunities for a display of dramatic talent hitherto unrevealed because of the limitations of her roles. She is assisted by a small but capable cast: Forrest Stanley, who plays opposite her; Dorothy Cumming, Cyril Maude's leading lady in the great stage success, "Grumpy"; Harry Meyers, Grace Pike and Ben Alexander.

The new Hayakawa picture, a thrilling story, has a novel theme. Its central figure is Akbar Khan, a Hindu novelist, living in the Bohemian quarter of New York. He has achieved a reputation as a writer through his uncanny method of collecting his material.

All New York Likes Lloyd

Comedian's Second Series Booked at Capitol and Strand Theatres

HAROLD LLOYD's meteoric rise to the foremost ranks of screen comedians is reflected in the flying start made in the booking of his second series of two reel comedies distributed by Pathe.

Broadway's two large houses of entertainment, the Strand and Capitol will play the new Lloyds day and date. The Pathe star is new to the Capitol patrons, but his entire first series has been featured and widely exploited by Managing Director Jack Eaton of the Strand. It was only after spirited bidding that the Capitol was enabled to land Lloyd. Edward Bowes, manager of the cinema palace, was determined to get him and paid the highest price he ever gave for a comedy series.

No concerted effort has been made by the New York branch or any other office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., to book the second Lloyd series, yet virtually every important theatre in the metropolitan district has signed for the new comedies. The success that greeted Lloyd's first two-reelers was so great that exhibitors have brooked no delay in tying him up for the second series. The new comedies will be played over the entire Marcus Loew circuit in the metropolitan era, and in five of B. S. Moss's leading houses.

The Loew theatres that will play the subjects include the Victoria, Greeley Square, Lincoln Square, American, Orpheum, Boulevard, National, De Kalb, Fulton, Delancey Street, Palace, Avenue B, Warwick, Circle, New York, Forty-second Street, Broadway, 116th Street, Eighty-sixth Street, Seventh Avenue, Bijou, Burland, Brevoort, Hoboken and Metropolitan.

Carmel Myers Will Be Starred by Universal

Carmel Myers, who ran away from the screen a year ago to enter musical comedy, soon will be seen again in the film world under the Universal banner. She has signed up with Universal for several years, and will be starred by that company.

Miss Myers will do crook society dramas. This will mark a difference from her former work with that film company, which included various kinds of pictures, comedies and otherwise. Her first picture is not chosen yet, but Universal expects to have it ready for her when she reports at Universal City several weeks hence.

Bert Williams Signed by Tarkington Baker

That Tarkington Baker's plans are rapidly coming to a head is evidenced in his announcement that he has signed up Bert Williams to star in a series of two reel comedies. Bert Williams is called by some critics the most popular comedian on the American stage. In recent seasons he has been featured in the Ziegfeld Follies.

Mr. Baker announces that some of the Williams pictures will be made at the coast. Later, when the comedian appears as a star on Broadway, the picture production activities will be transferred to New York City.

The exceptionally attractive page photograph of Marjorie Daw, which opened the Professional Section in the April 10 issue of the News, was the work of Alfred Cheney Johnston. Inadvertently a credit line was left off the reproduction and it is in response to the many inquiries received and in justice to this excellent work of Mr. Johnston's this commendation is gladly given. Goldwyn Picture to Be Shown at Church

Another endorsement of the high spiritual quality of Basil King's "The Street Called Straight," produced by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation as an Eminent Authors Picture, comes in the news from the Goldwyn offices that the film has been selected for showing at the Oak Cliff Christian church, Dallas.

Buster Keaton to Make Comedies for Metro

Sporting Writer Joins Mayflower Staff

The Mayflower Photoplay Corporation has secured for its exploitation department the services of William P. He also conducted the "Live Tips" column on the Morning World while acting as sporting editor on that newspaper.

"Mac's" acquaintance with newspaper men throughout the country is varied and friendly. He was for a good stretch with the Chicago American and the Hearst newspapers in New York.

Priscilla Dean's Next a South Sea Story

The next big picture scheduled by Universal for Priscilla Dean, the star of "The Virgin of Stamboul," will be "Marama," a story of the Fiji Islands, by Ralph Stock, a popular magazine story writer. "Marama" was published as a magazine story in 1913.

As "Marama" Priscilla Dean will have an opportunity of displaying the latest fashions in South Sea feminine adornment. The role will call for an unusual display of her volatile screen temperament.

Exhibitors Book The Latest Star

Realart Reports Great Interest in Wanda Hawley Picture

THE unique selling campaign conducted by the field forces of Realart Pictures Corporation in behalf of Wanda Hawley's first production has resulted in contracts from big exhibitors and circuits in such numbers that the machinery to approve and inspect them has been kept busy. The stampede to close contracts on the new Realart artist, according to Realart officials, is without parallel in their memory.

Southern Enterprise, Inc., has closed for "Miss Hobbs" for their three "key city" houses, and the balance of their large circuit. In a letter to Realart they call Miss Hawley "one of the film's fairest," and say they waived their customary rule of seeing a picture in advance of booking in her favor.

Sam Harding, of the Liberty theatre in Kansas City, Mo., wrote to the company that "I am wasting no time taking no chances, but instead have signed contract on "Miss Hobbs.'"

W. D. Dineen, general manager of the H. C. Moir Theatrical Enterprises, wrote that he knew "Realart had picked a winner" when they signed Miss Hawley, and speaking of the proposition under which her first picture was offered, said, "I have never heard of its equal in the history of the industry."

The Comerford Circuit in Pennsylvania and the Chamberlain Circuit have booked "Miss Hobbs" among others, according to advices from Jay Emanuel, Realart's manager in Philadelphia. Tom Moore has taken a contract for the picture for the Rialto theatre in Washington, and a flood of contracts arrived from the Boston office which officials of the home office were unable to examine this week.

The campaign conducted by Realart which produced these extraordinary results was based on theory that the producer should assume the risk in introducing a new star. By the arrangement the exhibitor was offered only the first picture and not a series, as is usually done.

If the first picture was a success and the exhibitor wanted a series, he was told that he would be given the chance to obtain it after the showing. Furthermore, the picture was offered first to exhibitors holding the contracts for the Realart star series, and no attempt was made to stir up competitive business.

The manner in which this contract was received is well illustrated by the following extracts from a letter from Dan Michalove, director of theatres for Southern Enterprises, Inc.

"We are mighty pleased to advise you that we have booked your first starring vehicle, featuring Wanda Hawley in "Miss Hobbs" covering our entire circuit of theatres to the extent of the maximum run for any picture we play.

"Another thing, I booked this attraction without a preview, which is rather unusual for us. However, Realart has made good on everything they have promised, and when one knows the integrity of the producer, the star, the story and the director, what more is there to do?"

Fox Buys Author's Output

Option Secured on All Works of Writer of "Her Elephant Man"

WITH the verdict of approval following the introduction of Miss Shirley Mason as a Fox star in the screen adaptation of "Her Elephant Man", William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, at once set about to secure an option for the world's motion picture rights to the entire literary output of the woman who wrote "Her Elephant Man" Mrs. Pearl Doles Bell. The news of his success has just been made public.

With Shirley Mason as star, Mrs. Bell's first story to reach the screen was an instantaneous hit. Then followed a Mason picture, "Molly and I," from a book by Frank R. Adams called "Molly and I and the Silver Ring." The next production for this star, which is scheduled to reach first run houses in May, was taken from another book by Mrs. Bell. "Love's Harvest" it is called the title of the book being "His Harvest."

Mrs. Bell has given several other equally popular books to American readers, including "Floria Gray," a story which contains interesting film possibilities; but, as the author herself declares, the "editorial page" is her forte, and she never is happier than when painting vivid word pictures with all the high coloring of her rich imagination.

The third of Pearl Doles Bell's stories to be used as a vehicle for Shirley Mason is known as "The Little Pagan." It was written especially for the star after the author witnessed the showing of "Her Elephant Man" and "Molly and I," and it is said to offer the winsome little artiste a most fascinating character role set in the colorful atmosphere of the Orient.

Erecting Big Studio in New York City

One of the largest motion picture studios in the East is now being erected at Jackson and Westchester avenue, New York City. The building will cover a plot 224 feet by 175 feet, facing three streets, Westchester, Barretto and Jackson avenues, and covering an area of over 45,000 square feet. The studio proper will have a clear height of thirty feet without column, and will provide sufficient stage space for six to eight companies to operate at one time. The operation is being conducted by the Jackson Palm Studio Corporation, William H. Weissager president and Ed Davidow, treasurer. The executive offices of the company are at 1493 Broadway, New York.

Century Lion Injures Trainer on Coast

The filming of the Century Lion Comedies is wrought with more danger than generally is supposed. Last week Charles Gay, the noted lion trainer engaged by the Century Comedy Company, was badly injured during the filming of a scene from "Harem Lions" at Hollywood, California. Although the set was enclosed by a wire netting, the lion broke through, then turned upon and attacked Gay when the trainer tried to stop him. Gay's right leg was badly lacerated. It will be several weeks before he will be able to return to the studios.

Five Reeler Heads Program

"Five Foot Highness" Leads List of Universal's Weekly Releases

AMONG the releases on Universal's program for the week of April 19th, is a five reel special attraction, "Her Five Foot Highness," featuring Edith Roberts. The subject is taken from a story written by Tarkington Baker. It is directed by Harry Franklin.

In the telling of this clever mixture of comedy and drama Miss Roberts has excellent support from Katherine Kirkham, Harold Miller, Leonard Clapham, Ogden Crane, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Leota Lorraine, Rudolph Christians and many others.

"The Lion Man," the Universal serial with Jack Perrin and Katherine O'Connor, is now in its seventeenth episode and as it only has one more episode to run, every foot of film is full of virile action. Another serial is "Elmo the Fearless" featuring Elmo Lincoln. The release for this week is the eleventh episode, entitled "The Temple of the Dragon."

An Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran comedy entitled "Somebody Lied" and a Rainbow comedy, "A Jazzy Janitor" featuring Zip Monberg, Virginia Warwick and William Irving, are the fun rollickers for this week.

A two reel western entitled "One He-Man" with Jack Perrin and Josephine Hill, International News Numbers 19 and 20, and the Universal New Screen Magazine Number 62 round out the program of releases.

New Features in Studio

Innovations in Electrical Equipment in Famous Players Studio

THE electrical equipment, which is now being installed in the new Long Island City studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is to include a sub station in the studio which will allow 7,600 volts alternating current to be received direct from the Central Station. Special permission had to be obtained before this could be put into effect. Seventy-six hundred-volt synchronous motor-generator sets will apply the direct current for studio lighting. The general lighting and power will be obtained from a step-down transformer connected to the 7,000-volt primaries. The entire plant is automatically controlled.

On account of the life hazard which is involved, safety features of many different kinds have been installed. In the event of a breakdown of a transformer or motor generator it becomes automatically disconnected. All high tension connections are enclosed in a high tension concrete vault which is two stories high. A network grounding system, with shafts sunk twenty feet into the ground, has been provided as a precaution against accidental grounding, in case of faulty insulation.

Another departure from convention is to be found in the direct current feeder system for lighting the studio stages. It consists of stacks of bare bus bars, run from the main switchboard to the generator room, up studio walls and across the girder space of the main studio to feed the various switchboards.

Universal-Education Current Activities

John Leitch, author of "Man to Man, the story of Industrial Democracy," signed a contract yesterday with Harry Levey, general manager of the Industrial and Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, for the immediate production of a feature motion-picture for world distribution based on the book. Mr. Leitch will himself play the leading part in the picture. Actual work on the production of "Man to Man" has already started under the personal direction of Mr. Harry Levey.

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America has entered into a contract with the Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company whereby the entire organization has been visualized.

Educators Considering Film Possibilities

That the foremost educators of the country are ready to consider seriously the educational possibilities of motion pictures, was amply evidenced last week when Dr. Rowland Rogers, director of the Educational department of Bray Pictures Corporation, appeared before the Faculty Club of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology at the Walker Memorial hall in Cambridge.

The address by Dr. Rogers followed the showing of Bray Pictures covering a variety of subjects.

Von Tilzer Song Aids "The Harvest Moon"

That another of the W. W. Hodkinson releases has been the inspiration for a ballad of tremendous appeal is revealed in the announcement by Harry Von Tilzer of his newest song hit, "When the Harvest Moon Is Shining," based on the new Gibraltar picture, Augustus Thomas' "The Harvest Moon," starring Doris Kenyon.

The ballad, dedicated to the star, is sponsored by Mr. Von Tilzer and Andrew B. Sterling, authors of a string of song successes, the Von Tilzer organization declaring it the finest sentimental number since "When the Harvest Days Are Over, Jessie Dear," also a Von Tilzer triumph.

Ethel Clayton Renews F. P.-Lasky Contract

The re-engagement of Ethel Clayton on a long term contract has just been announced by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. A particularly interesting feature of this announcement is that it has been arranged that in October Miss Clayton shall go to London to make two photoplays in the London studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. At least two plays have been specially selected because of their fitness to Miss Clayton's characteristics and they will be made with a London background, which will, it is believed, prove exceptionally effective.

Ethel Clayton has always expressed a desire to make pictures abroad and is naturally overjoyed at this prospect. Further details concerning her forthcoming vehicles will be made known shortly. At the present time she is engaged under the direction of Paul Powell in making a drama titled, "All in a Night," much of which is laid in the Orient.

Post to Stage Fine Show

Big Bill of Prominent Actors Is Set for Drew Post's Performance

THE FRANKLIN DREW POST, composed of ex-service men who are engaged in either the theatrical or motion picture field and their allied branches, announces that a benefit performance is to be held at the New Amsterdam Theatre on Sunday night, April 11th. The report from the theatrical post promises a program unique in the character of prominent talent that has been secured for the evening's bill. The announcement in part follows:

"Heading the bill, which has been arranged through the cooperation of several of Broadway's most prominent producers, is no less a trio than the Barrymore's, Ethel, John and Lionel. Sam Bernard will be there; Irene Bordoni will be there; Clifton Crawford, he of the nimble feet, he will be there; Ernest Truex, comedian of the stage and screen, Richard Travers, the famous screen star and world's war veteran, as well as the popular Adele Rowland; James J. Corbett will do his stunt with Jack Wilson, famous black-face artist.

"Georges Carpentier will speak to the audience from the stage. Frank Morgan, known throughout the country as one of our most versatile character actors, will present a sketch supported by his own company. Demarest and Collette, the latter also a member of the Post, will offer a novelty vaudeville skit; and an octette of singers from the United States Navy Glee Club will also entertain. The opening overture and the national anthem will be played by a Navy orchestra and the United States Navy Recruiting Service Band, combined.

"Mrs. Sidney Drew, who is now on the Pacific Coast, making two-reel comedy pictures, has written the Post's office that she will be in New York in time for the show, and that she will do her share behind the 'lights' to help put over the success that will put the Post permanently on the map. Mrs. Drew is the president of the women's auxiliary which was recently formed in connection with the Post, and it is reported that the ladies of the auxiliary are doing some splendid work in this drive for funds with which to erect a gymnasium for the Post somewhere in the heart of the theatre district."

Allan Dwan Turns Author

Producer Will Write Scenario Featuring California Locations

ALLAN DWAN, who won fame first as a director and later as a producer, has now turned author. He will leave his Los Angeles studio early next week for the mountains of Northern California to write a scenario featuring locations spotted from the window of the train which recently bore him westward from New York.

This is said to be the first time a producer has made a concerted effort to make his story fit the locations—usually it is the other way around, and it is believed this policy will present a new angle from which to exploit the picture.

"I saw some wonderful mountain scenery on my way to the coast," said Mr. Dwan, "so I have chosen the section through which I traveled as the locale for my next picture. By a strange coincidence this country is exactly suited to the story."

The producer believes that by going over the ground where the picture is to be made and writing the scenario with a view to using definite locations, a great deal of time will be saved when he starts shooting scenes.

"What this amounts to," says Dwan, "is a location rehearsal. It means that in addition to having rehearsed the characters in their parts before production commences, the locations also will have been rehearsed with the result that every condition of light will be understood and we will also be thoroughly familiar with the country in which we are to work."

Although he is keeping the title of his new production a secret, Dwan announced that it is an original story based on a powerful theme, the idea for which developed from a conversation which took place at a dinner in New York during the producer's recent visit to the metropolis. This will be the last Allan Dwan production to be presented by Mayflower, making a total of six pictures, which fills the requirements of the contract.

In all the large cities and in the smaller places, "Who's Your Servant?" is stated to be one of the successes of the hour. This picture takes up in forceful style, the question of the betrayal of his master by a trusted servant.

The press book which Robertson-Cole issued for the exploitation of this picture shows many ways in which this timely theme may be put before the public attractively. The press book illustrates the elaborate lobby display which can be made to attract audiences.

"Sex" Booked by Big Houses

W. W. Hodkinson Issues Statement on New Release

J. PARKER READ'S latest production, "Sex", is made the subject of a lengthy report, just issued from the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. The booking of the feature by some of the leading first run houses of the country is especially emphasized in the Hodkinson announcement, which follows:

"The prevailing adage of the picture business that you know when a picture's big by seeing which exhibitors book it, holds especially true with regard to J. Parker Read, Jr.'s sensational Louise Glaum production, 'Sex,' by C. Gardner Sullivan and directed by Fred Niblo. The W. W. Hodkinson sales organization is now feeling all of the thrills and satisfaction that a distributor has when he has a tremendous winner on his hands.

"Right from the jump Louise Glaum in 'Sex' has demonstrated that producer Read and herself have a 'stampede picture', one that everybody wants one that displaces previously booked pictures in theatres because the exhibitors themselves are so full of enthusiasm that they defer other pictures to get "Sex" played instantly and on release date.

"This, for example, is what Jacob Lourie, owner of the Modern, Beacon and Park Theatres, Boston, did to start 'Sex' playing on April 11. 'Sex' goes into the Modern and Beacon, playing a full week day and date in each house on its national release date and it is the first production in months to open with half page advertising announcements straight across the entire field of Boston daily newspapers.

"Close by, over in Springfield, Mass., Abe Goodside is opening his new Capitol theatre and 'Sex' will be the second attraction to play in his fine new theatre. Mr. Goodside also has booked 'Sex' for his Empire Theatre, Portland, Maine.

"Frank L. Newman and his manager, M. H. Feld, displaced another picture to put 'Sex' in the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, on release date as did Leo Landeau at his popular Butterfly Theatre in Milwaukee.

"After its first run under W. C. Dineen in the Harry Moir Rose Theatre, Chicago, with two weeks' the Spyros Skouras chain of theatres in St. Louis, where there will be three full week first runs under the personal direction of Mr. Skouras, the new holder of the Missouri franchise of the National and an exhibitor whose use has been one of the sensational achievements of the industry.

"Finkelstein & Ruben instantly booked 'Sex' for Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth first runs in Pittsburg the Blackstone has opened for the downtown first run, in Flint, Mich., Charles Gerfield's Orpheum plays on release date and in Texas the Southern Enterprises, Inc., have booked 'Sex' in 11 theatres then on the booking membership through John C. Shannon, the Hodkinson manager for Texas with headquarters in Dallas."

protection. "Sex" opens on April 7th in Chicago in the Lubliner & Trinz Circuit theatres and simultaneously in other neighborhood first run houses in all sections of the city. On April 8 fifteen prints will be working day and date in the city limits of Chicago, and all of these prints are booked solid from that date onward for sixty days in Chicago. To date one hundred and three theatres in Chicago have signed contracts for 'Sex.'

"In Atlanta, Ga., the Tudor Theatre instantly booked 'Sex,' as did

Miller Overrode Precedent

Realart Says He Got Local Color Without Use of Usual Expedients

PRECEDENTS that have stood for years were completely disregarded by Charles Miller in making "The Law of the Yukon," the first of his series of specials for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation says Realart Picture Corporation. The picture is about completed and will be released within a short time by Realart Pictures Corporation. The story is inspired by Robert W. Service's famous poem in the volume, "The Spell of the Yukon," published by Barse and Hopkins, New York City.

More than 100,000 feet of film were exposed, it is said, in making the picture this winter at Port Henry, N. Y. This amount was used in the two takes of all scenes and presented a heavy task to Mr. Miller in cutting to the required 6,000 feet for the final negative.

Regarding the cutting of the finished picture, Realart states:

"In making the picture, Director Miller flung precedent aside in the interest of cleaner pictures. He has proved, according to Mayflower officials who have seen parts of the picture during the process of assembling, that atmosphere in a dance hall need not connotate orgy and lust and that touches of atmosphere merely suggested can be made as effective as those actually represented.

"The atmosphere, which he has injected into the scenes, resembles more a reality than a reproduction, it is said.

"Mr. Miller has achieved these results without resorting to the banalities associated with dance hall scenes since the early days of motion pictures. Not one drink is seen to be taken. Gambling is subtly suggested, not pictured. The female attaches of the place disport themselves with an abandon tempered by discretion. There is a fight, but not the customary long drawn out, rough and tumble affair. It is brief but thrilling.

"Director Miller is reported to have handled the scenes of tempestuous whirl of pleasure in the Alaskan dance hall so that they glow with life and color, and yet are free from anything that might be considered objectionable."

On the garden wall where Constance Binney gets the kiss from which her latest Realart feature, "The Stolen Kiss" gets its title

Miss Binney on Broadway

Rivoli Books Its Third Realart Production, "The Stolen Kiss"

THAT large body of exhibitors who get a line on "what's what" from things shown in New York City, will find some food for thought in the Rivoli Theatre's choice of Constance Binney in "The Stolen Kiss" for the week of April 4th.

Not only does this booking make it nine straight for Realart Pictures Corporation in the big Broadway houses, but it emphasizes the fact that the Rivoli has booked its third Realart picture. Others previously shown were "The Beat Market" and "Anne of Green Gables."

"The Stolen Kiss" is an adaptation of the novel, "Little Miss By The Day," by Lucille Van Slyke. It is the story of a little Brooklyn girl, who is kept in sheer ignorance of the simplest things of life by an affectionate though misguided grandfather. There is a kiss over the garden wall and a romance in which fate is tantalizing.

In the production Constance Binney plays three roles. In the early part of the picture she is Felicia Day at the age of ten and her mother, Octavia Day. In the later scenes of the picture she plays Felicia Day as a young lady in her "teens."

Rod La Roque plays the leading male role opposite Miss Binney. Others in the cast include Frank Losee, Robert Schaible, Bradley Barker, Richard Carlyle, George Backus, Edna Davies and Ada Nevil. Kenneth Webb directed the production and George Falsey did the photography. The scenario was the work of Kathryn Stuart.

Metro Plans Special Aids

New Department to Give Special Exploitation Service Under Way

SPECIAL exploitation service, in addition to the many valuable suggestions embodied in its various press books, is now being devised and supplied to exhibitors by Metro Pictures Corporation, it is stated. At present this special exploitation service is taking the form of mimeographed sheets containing from eight to a dozen out of the ordinary "stunts," carefully explained and elaborated by a department of expert film salesmen who know the problems that confront exhibitors of motion pictures.

"This new department in the Metro-Loew organization will be rapidly expanded to cover all exploitation needs on the part of showmen and to give them every assistance in putting over Metro-Loew special productions for their full box office value," is the announcement from the Metro offices.

Loew-Metro recognizes that the company's responsibility does not end with the rental of a film production that local conditions and other circumstances frequently present problems to individual exhibitors that can be and should be settled by expert advisers to insure the biggest money returns with the picture.

"Even in advance of the organization of its new department, however, Loew has been and is supplying exhibitors with invaluable assistance in the matter of exploiting the Loew-Metro productions. It is pointed out, as one specific example that Loew-Metro accessories include more lithographed paper than is supplied by any other company in the industry. The Loew-Metro poster accessories embrace a smashing twenty-four-sheet, two handsome six-sheets, three three-sheets three one-sheets and a half-sheet size window card for display in shops."

Kerrigan Well Received

Many Bookings Reported for "The Dream Cheater," Latest Picture

WITH a Balzac story as a medium for bringing out all that J. Warren Kerrigan does best in the silent drama and a typical Kerrigan cast to aid him in a series of startling surprises, "The Dream Cheater," newest in the star's series on Robert Brunton pictures, to judge by the volume of contract business received at the Hodkinson home office, will undoubtedly win public acclaim, announce the producers.

"The Dream Cheater," adapted by Jack Cunningham from Balzac's "The Magic Skin," is unlike any of the hundreds of stories Kerrigan has done for the screen. For five reels the popular entertainer discards his familiar light comedy attitude and runs the gamut of human emotions.

Among the first-run bookings reported on "The Dream Cheater" are: The Savoy, Syracuse, N. Y., the Toy, Milwaukee, Wisc.; the Alamo, Atlanta, Ga.; the Hippodrome, Portland, Ore.; the Peoples, Port Arthur, Tex.; the Empire, Ottumwa, Ia.; the Burke, Kenosha, Wisc.; the Picture Garden, Baltimore, Md.; the Majestic, Spokane, Wash.; the Colonial, Braddock, Pa.; the Rex, Racine, Wisc.; the Apollo, Dayton, O.; the Lyric, Cheyenne, Wyo.; the Princess, Pueblo, Col.; the Amusu, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Lloyd Comedy Is Coming

"An Eastern Westerner" Will Be $100,000 Two-Reeler for Pathe

"AN Eastern Westerner," a keen satire of a popular type of motion picture drama, will be Harold Lloyd's $100,000 two-reel comedy, produced by the Rolin Film Company for distribution by Pathe.

With the completion of this production, and its issue on May 2nd, Lloyd will have finished his first series of two reel comedies for Pathe. First introduced to the public as the star of multiple reel features, in "Bumping Into Broadway," little more than six months ago, Lloyd has contributed five triumphant comedies to exhibitors. In last release, "Haunted Spooks," he attained his greatest success. From every section of the country, exhibitors are heaping praise upon Lloyd for his work in this picture, and, in many quarters it has been hailed as the best and most wholesome comedy seen on the screen.

When Lloyd begins work on his second series of six special comedies for Pathe, he will have a much greater experience than was his when he first inaugurated his two reelers.

Dick Kennedy, a well-known cartoonist and one of the most popular contributors during the war to "The Stars and Stripes," the official newspaper of the American Expeditionary Force, will supply a new animated "comic" for Universal's proposed Novelty Reel, it is announced by Hal Hodes, who will edit the reel. Kennedy was the creator of Mickey, the Dam Family, Binks and other popular "comic" characters syndicated throughout the country. He drew for the Hearst papers for several years preceding the war

Brentwood Starts Another Special Film

Brentwood Film Corporation has just completed the second and is about to start production of the third of a special series of pictures directed by Henry Kolker and featuring Zasu Pitts with strong supporting casts. Speaking of this series, L. C. Haynes, Brentwood's president said, "We searched for and commissioned writers to prepare for us four stories suitable for filming as comedy dramas, each one of which should provide a distinctly different characterization for Miss Pitts to portray.

"We are now starting 'The Little Widow' in which Miss Pitts portrays the character of a smart young waitress. In the final picture of the series the title for which has not yet been decided upon Miss Pitts' role will be that of an intensely practical and unselfish young woman."

Variety of Subjects Reach Laboratory

Since the laboratory of the American Film Company has been open to commercial work as well as for the regular work of the "Flying A's" an interesting assortment of subjects has been handled by it which gives some clue to the various uses to which the silversheet is being put commercially, and for private entertainment.

The superintendent reports that there were fifty reels advertising a new tractor, twenty reels illustrating the results of medical experiments, and a five-act amateur drama of which Hobart Hutchinson, son of the president of the American Film Company, was the author, scenarist and producer.

W. Hodkinson release, "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," by Louis Joseph Vance. At its conclusion Mr. Coates remarked that it was such productions that permitted the American producer to put such a wide gap between himself and his competitor

Report on Foreign Markets

IN a recent report from the offices of the David P. Howells, Inc., the Oriental and Mexican film markets are discussed with considerable detail, and the present and future possibilities of these fields for the exploitation of American productions are treated at some length. Mr. Howells' interest in the Oriental market is evinced by the fact that he has dispatched his representative, Horace T. Clarke, for the second time within the year to the Orient with a large number of big productions and a selection of short-length subjects. In addition Mr. Clarke takes with him motion picture equipment for distribution in the Far East. Mr. Clarke left New York for the Orient last week. His itinerary will take him to Japan, China, the Philippines, Straits Settlements, Dutch East Indies, India, Burmah and Ceylon.

"The American producer must, for the time being, not expect exorbitant prices for his pictures from the Orient," said Mr. Clarke "There is a prevailing notion that the Oriental territories are worth considerably more than they are This is probably due to the fact that the various countries of the Far East have such tremendous populations At the present time, only a very small percentage has ever seen a motion picture, and until picture house construction develops there is little possibility that pictures will become a popular amusement in anywhere near the sense that they are popular entertainment in America and in some of the European countries.

"With considerable less population than many of the neighboring territories, Japan will become the best market for American pictures and will develop the possibilities of motion picture quickest The possibilities in Japan are almost limitless. The development must be gradual for the Oriental is not as quick to absorb new ideas as the American and the European."

Pirating and duping of films are the sore-spots of the industry in the Orient, said Mr. Clarke, but active steps are being taken that will do away with these practices "Any renter in the Orient, who contracts to run pirated films, is going to be boycotted and his supply shut off."

"The motion picture business in Mexico is feeling the stimulation of general prosperity in the Carranza republic. New theatres are going up, film pirating is being reduced; and better pictures are in demand" This is the statement of William Eat, Jr., who has just returned from a tour of Mexico for David P. Howell, Inc

"Mexico is again on a sound internal financial basis," says Mr Eat The currency is all gold so that the visitor takes no chances on his money shrinking as it did some years ago. Business is good Building construction is going ahead at a rapid rate The new municipal theatre is being completed, and when it is finished will be one of the finest buildings of its kind in the world

"New capital is being invested in motion picture theatres Old theatres are being rebuilt Some new houses are under construction Many more are contemplated. One new house in the course of construction in Mexico City will seat between four to five thousand people

"The tendency to secure films that are cheap simply because they are cheap is gradually being overcome The distribution is getting stronger and building his business on a more substantial and more responsible basis I feel that it will be short time before there will be more film piracy in Mexico than there is in the United States."

Buys Employes' Tickets

Big Manufacturer So Pleased By Picture, He Will Treat All Hands

I WILL purchase five thousand tickets for my employees to see 'Dangerous Hours' because I consider this production a most powerfully appealing picture for fairness, squareness and truthfulness and the very best method with which to combat the most dangerous evil that has confronted America since the subjugation of the diabolical Hun."

Thus spoke George H. Hannum, president of the Saginaw (Mich.) Manufacturers' Association, director of the Board of Commerce and general manager of all the General Motors Corporation interests in Saginaw, when asked for his opinion as to the effectiveness of "Dangerous Hours," Thomas H. Ince's Paramount Artcraft-Special production in stemming the tide of radicalism, Bolshevism and other isms which are incessantly interfering with our business, law and order.

Mr. Hannum was one of the number of Saginaw's prominent industrial heads who attended a private screening of "Dangerous Hours" as the guests of Charles Q. Carlisle, president of the Mecca-Palace Theatre. With the co-operation of Eli M. Orowitz, exploitation representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at Detroit, the showing was arranged for eight o'clock in the morning, and, despite this early hour, nearly eighty per cent of the membership of the Saginaw Manufacturers' Association and the Employers' Association of Saginaw attended.

The two associations have been waging a determined fight against the Red Menace and other turbulent elements whose activities throughout the country have aroused the vigilance of Government officials. The members who spoke stated that in their estimation there could be no better way to deliver a crushing blow to this menace than to show "Dangerous Hours" to the people, and each and every one backed up his opinion by ordering in advance of the Saginaw engagement admission tickets for all their employes.

Anita Stewart Turns Vamp

Star Will Be Seen in New Role in Latest Louis Mayer Picture

FOR the first time in her screen career, Anita Stewart will be seen as a vampire when her latest Louis B. Mayer production, "The Yellow Typhoon" is released through First National channels.

Miss Stewart has two roles in the picture, playing the part of twin sisters of widely contrasting natures. Hilda a brunette, is a sweet wholesome girl, well educated and trained and devoted to the care of her invalid mother. Berta is a blonde whose affections are guided by an insatiable desire for wealth and luxury. During her meteoric career she ruins and deserts several men easily lurins, a new victim into her net each time by her great beauty and personal magnetism.

Taken all in all, Anita Stewart became a very dangerous vamp on her first trial. She said that she got a lot of fun out of portraying the part as it was in such great contrast to her other role in the picture and so different to any character she had ever had.

"The Yellow Typhoon" was directed by Edward Jose and photographed by Rene Guissart. Supporting Miss Stewart are Ward Crane, Joseph Kilgour, Donald MacDonald, E. J. Brady, George Fisher, Mrs. Orlamonde and Frank Tokunaga. Monte M. Katterjohn prepared the screen version.

"Smilin' All the Way" will be directed by Fred J. Butler, who scored heavily with "Sitting on the World."

To substantiate the claims made by Herman F. Director Broke Record in Recent Serial

How Director E. A. Martin saved "The Lost City," might be the title of a short story of efficiency and ability if the full account of his efforts on that serial were chronicled. He had been ill for six weeks when called from his bed on October 15th by the news that Juanita Hansen, starring in the big serial, had signed to go with Pathe on January 1st.

Treats Current Problem

"A Child for Sale" Is Said to Be Effective Presentation of Topic

THE evils in our modern social structure that give rise to such practices as the sale of young children by their parents to save the youngsters from grim want are graphically depicted in Ivan Abramson's latest picture, entitled "A Child for Sale". In a statement just issued by the producing forces, Mr. Abramson is credited with having achieved a really notable production and one that is due to attract the attention of the thinking public to this problem of modern life more effectively than any other agency thus far perfected. The picture, says the report, "is rather a daring piece of work, and Mr. Abramson did not stop a minute to think whether he would be praised or condemned. Every angle of the problem, not sex, that the story sets forth is outlined with unerring precision in the various situations with the result that rarely a work, be it oral, literary, or a feature picture, has been witnessed that has so perfect a sequence as "A Child for Sale". Mr. Abramson possesses one big advantage over other producers, in that he is his own manager, author, scenarioist and director and in this way is enabled to put his ideas upon the screen exactly as he conceives them.

"One of the remarkable accomplishments of this picture is the evolution of Creighton Hale into a dramatic artist of high order, as critics of the press have carefully noted. This young man heretofore essayed juvenile roles, invariably playing the young lover, but this time the director cast him into a serious role that called for entirely different kind of screen acting."

Garsson's Picture Scoring

Says "A Dream of Fair Women" Is Winning in South and Mid-West

MURRAY W. GARSSON, general manager of the Foundation Film Company, has returned to New York following a trip through the South and Middle West in the interest of "A Dream of Fair Women," the two reel special, featuring the four winners of the "Fame and Fortune" contest of Motion Picture Magazine, Motion Picture Classic and Shadowland, which he is releasing on the state rights plan. Mr. Garsson reports that exhibitors in the various sections that he visited are enthusiastic about the reception which the film is meeting among moving picture patrons, and he has disposed of additional territory for exclusive presentation.

The principal attraction of "A Dream of Fair Women," according to Mr. Garsson, is the opportunity it affords the fans to see four of the most beautiful girls in the United States, who, it is stated, were selected out of a list of more than 100,000 contestants to win fame and fortune in the films.

Mr. Garsson is a firm believer in the appeal of the two-reeler, provided it has the merits of excellent story and cast, picturesque scenery and skillful direction. He relies upon the traditional impatience of the American amusement-seeker. His experience in the amusement business has taught him that the public will always respond more readily to a short and concise idea than to one that is dragged out interminably.

Bessie Love Cast Named

Capable Players Are to Support Star in First Callaghan Picture

Bessie Love, who will be seen in "The Midlanders," her first A. J. Callaghan picture.

THE announcemept this week of the completed cast of "The Midlander," the first picture which Bessie Love is making for the Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., is said to assure the star the support of a capable cast for her forthcoming independent productions.

Following the acquisition by the Callaghan organization of Joseph de Grasse and Ida May Park to direct Miss Love, the producing company announced its intention of obtaining the services of a high-class supporting company to assist the star in putting over a noteworthy film version of her first vehicle, "The Midlanders," which is being adapted from the novel of the same name by Charles Tenney Jackson.

Truman van Dyke in the role of Harlan Van Hart will play opposite Miss Love. In the role of the picturesque editor of the town newspaper, Lloyd Bacon, a film actor of long experience, brings a dramatic finesse to a highly colorful part. Playing the parts of Judge Van Hart and Mrs. Van Hart, the pillars of this small town society, are Sydney Deane and Frances Raymond, both qualified by considerable experience in similar roles to adequately portray the narrow philosophy and snobbery of this particular upper class household. Jack Donovan, C. Norman Hammond and Curt Rehfield complete the principals of the cast.

The Bessie Love Company will leave soon for location work in the north of California, after completing several interior scenes at the Los Angeles studios. A portion of the story will be made in the very locale around which the narrative was written, the Mississippi Valley, and for this purpose Miss Love will take her entire company eastward in the near future.

"Screen Snap Shots" to Be Ready in a Few Weeks Announces Cohn

FOLLOWING his conference with leading independent and state rights buyers, during which they demanded more short subjects for the independent field, Jack Cohn, president of the firm of Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of Hall Room Boys Comedies and other single and double reel subjects, has determined to advance the release date upon the first issue of Screen Snap Shots.

Independent buyers who have seen previews of this interesting release are said to be enthusiastic in its praise. Its purpose is to escort patrons of the country's photoplay houses through the mysteries and intricacies of motion picture production in the West Coast studios. Not only does it do this, but it brings the private life of the most famous stars to the patrons of every theatre which books the release.

The first issue will be released within a few weeks, according to Mr. Cohn, and it promises to help fill the shortage of quality short subjects available to independent buyers, and will contain studies of Nazimova, Bessie Barriscale, Bert Lytell, Alice Lake, J. Warren Kerrigan and others well known in pictures.

Arrow Tells of New Pictures

"Love's Protege" and All-Indian Feature Should Go Big

AFTER a careful study of the independent field W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, acquired the rights to the new special productions that company now has ready for the independent market, according to an announcement made this week.

"After I had studied the field," said Mr Shallenberger, "I decided that 'Love's Protege', in which Ora Carew is featured formed an ideal subject for the independent field as it is today. There is in it a charming romance, a good mystery element, and a scenic setting that beats anything of the kind I have had the pleasure of seeing in months."

"Love's Protege" was photographed in the mountain country of the west, and is the type of story which has ever been popular. It relates the story of a beautiful mountain girl, Ruth, portrayed by Miss Carew, who, clad in rags and without shoes or stockings, romps through the five reels a veritable mountain flower.

It is a picture which will stand extensive exploitation, and Arrow has announced that a special press book has been prepared, entirely in keeping with the spirit and beauty of the picture itself. All aids usual in the exploitation of feature productions will be provided by the company, so that exhibitors and exchangemen will encounter no difficulty on that score.

The Arrow Film Company also recently acquired the rights to "Before the White Man Came." No more unusual picture was ever offered state rights buyers and others who are interested in an ideal vehicle for road show work than this feature, it is claimed. The special feature tells a story of a tribal war between two factions of Indians before the days of the white man in the Old West.

The story is offered by a cast composed entirely of Indians. The impassiveness and unemotional countenances of these sons of the New World have never before been screened with the reality, vividness and appeal which characterize the narration of this story, according to those who have seen previews of the subject.

The fact that every member of the cast is an Indian, and that the thrilling struggles of the western plains before the advent of the white man are done over again for the camera, make it, it is believed, an ideal subject for road showings and for special showings anywhere. While it is an ideal subject for these purposes, it is also said to be worthy of a place on any program, because of its historical and technical exactness.

Arrow has already received many letters and telegrams relative to this special feature, and while territory has not yet been offered for sale, there is already a demand for rights.

Will Produce Short Subjects

Special Pictures Plans Two-Reelers to Help Exhibitor's Bill

THAT the Special Pictures Corporation plans to increase its producing and distributing activities, as indicated by story in recent issue of Motion Picture News, became a definite certainty last week. H. J. Roberts, general sales manger of Special Pictures Corporation, made a statement covering the plans of his company. According to Mr. Roberts, the proposed output of the company will materially aid exhibitors in solving one of the present-day problems, arising from change of policy of many of the companies. The statement follows:

"Now that many of the big comedy producers are devoting more of their attention to the production of comedies four reels or more in length, we may expect, on the present plans of these producers, from two to four comedies each month, each of which will be four reels or more in length.

"What is the exhibitor going to do for the necessary weight and punch for his 'show'?

"The experience has been universal that when an exhibitor has a five or six-reel drama, he must have a certain amount of comedy and of diversified subjects to balance his 'show' or the audience leaves with a bad taste in their mouths. The reverse is just as true. When he gives them four or five reels of comedy they must have also two or three-reels of something heavy, something meaty, or they are going home feeling that they have been cheated.

"This is one of the conditions that has lead to the decision of the Special Pictures Corporation to produce a series of two-reel dramas. Another consideration has been the fact that having proven that they can boil a two-reel comedy down to 1,400 feet as is demonstrated by 'Comedyart,' they are confident also of their ability to boil a five-reel story down to a two-reel drama, giving it greater punch, fast-er action and uninterrupted tensity.

"Preliminary arrangements have already been made for these productions and according to announced plans these two reel dramas will be as expensively built as the dramas of greater length being ordinarily released. The cast must be as good, the setting as elaborate, the story as broad and as strong. The supervising director, Ward Lascelle, is carrying these facts in mind as he aims at the ultimate goal of the release of the two-reel dramas, which must be exceptionally tense, exceptionally strong on account of the exceedingly great amount of comedy with which it will be mixed and which it is to leaven.

"The first release will be on the screen about the middle of May and thereafter at regular intervals.

"Entirely aside from the use of these dramas with the multiple reel comedy a broad field is opened up to this class of production by the very profitable method that it opens up for exhibitors to build at least one show each week out of short reel subjects giving them a greater variety and still of a class that any patron might enjoy."

Simplex Notes

Harry K Lucas, sole southern distributor for the Simplex Projector with headquarters at the Lucas Theatre Supply Co., Marietta Street, Atlanta, Ga., made his quarterly annual visit to the metropolis last week. On this occasion he was accompanied by Mr Lucas who took occasion to make as much of her visit as social as possible while her progressive husband squeezed all the business he could into his week's stay here

Mr. Lucas, whose Simplex franchise includes the entire South and covers more territory than any other single distributor, was highly optimistic as regards conditions in his territory He is particularly pleased with the volume of business he has done through his Dallas, Texas, office which is being operated under the direction of Mr. E. J. Callahan

Mr. Lucas reports that the state of Texas, which up until a couple of years ago was particularly destitute of Simplex machines is being Simplexized at a rapid rate and the only complaint from his territory seems to lie in the fact that he cannot supply machines fast enough.

Mr Lucas while here held several important conferences with the Simplex officials and plans were laid for a most intensive sales campaign which will be backed up by factory production at an early date Mr Lucas reports that owing to his large mail order business he has found it necessary to install a large printing establishment fully equipped with a twelve by nineteen press together with folding, cutting, addressing and ruling machines

The Lucas Company are preparing to print their three hundred page catalog on their own press as well as the "Cusiki" that snappy little Lucas house organ which is so well known to the trade

Mr and Mrs Lucas spent some time with E. M. Porter and W. C. Francke of the Simplex organization and one of the bright spots of the visit was an Italian dinner and theatre party with a trip through Greenwich Village At the time of going to press Mr Lucas was confined to his room at the Hotel Astor with an acute attack of pleurisy, but it is hoped by his numerous friends in the industry that he will have fully recovered by the time this story reaches the readers and that both Mr and Mrs Lucas will enjoy to the fullest extent the beautiful new and handsomely furnished bungalow which they have recently purchased in an exclusive section of Atlanta

Story Cheerfully Chosen

Efenel Film Selects "The Secret Formula" From Many Submitted

THE story upon which "The Secret Formula," the Efenel Film Corporation production, was founded was carefully selected from a vast number of manuscripts submitted by leading authors, according to an announcement of the producers Because of its unusual magnetism, "The Secret Formula" was selected, first because it furnished film enthusiasts with a story that is realistic and free from improbability and at the same time tell interestingly of the trials of a misunderstood couple—one a lovable, fearless girl, and the other an ambitious physician who is too much in love with his work to give thought to woman

Another feature said to be deserving of mention is the capable work done by the all-star cast. To sift out each individual player and point out his good qualities would be on the verge of discrimination in that the entire cast, as a whole, does meritorious work throughout. Each individual character is well taken care of.

The story involved will appeal to all classes, it is said. Its theme is not that of the every-day stereotyped photoplay. This picture is replete with thrills, love, pathos, adventure and suspense. And yet it tells a story of love and adventure, bringing both into action and through them mending the hearts of the young lovable people. Interwoven in this tale is an interestingly thrilling seach for a stolen formula by a foreign agent

By J. C. JESSEN

METRO

THE Metro companies are getting to work on their new series, and present plans provide that this plant will have seven units at work during the next week on new films, the greatest number to be at work at one time since the plant was opened.

"Head and Shoulders," has been purchased by Metro, and will serve as the next vehicle for Viola Dana, in which that actress will appear in the role of a shimmy dancer. The story is laid around a theatrical enterprise of the Follly type. A Yet General Manager Joseph Engle has not selected a director for this company.

Wm. C. Dowlan has been named to direct Alice Lake in "The Outsider," which is an original screen play by John Hearn and "Held In Trust" will be the next vehicle for May Allison. The latter is by Gibbs Turner, and the screen continuity was written by Sarah Mason. John Ince will in all probability direct Miss Allison.

Edward Cecil and Landers Stevens have been added to the cast of the Bert Lytell unit filming, "The Temple of Dawn," being directed by Ed Fitzgerald. Exterior scenes are now being made by this company in which Seena Owen and Cleo Madison are the principal women.

C. E. Shurtleff is in San Francisco this week to secure boats for the filming of the next Jack London story, "The Mutiny of the Elsinore." Continuity for this is being written by A. S. LeVino, and the company will make practically all of the exterior scenes in San Francisco, where much of the story is laid. The Shurtleff Company is now making the final scenes for "Burning Daylight," featuring Mitchell Lewis, who is to be starred in the other London stories to be made.

UNIVERSAL

THE most apparent sign of spring in Los Angeles is the renewed production activities at Universal City, where four new subjects are being started under the general management of President Carl Laemmle, who is in charge of the plant pending the appointment of a general manager.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have purchased the screen rights for the Fred Jackson musical comedy, "La La Lucile," and will use this as their vehicle for the second comedy drama of five reels. Lyons and Moran have completed their first film with the exception of a slight bit of editing, and are now working on the continuity for the new production and the selection of a cast.

Rolin Sturgeon is to direct the making of "The Girl in the Rain," an adaptation from the novel, "The Girl by the Roadside," by Varick Vanardy, and in this Ann Cornwall becomes a Universal star. Miss Cornwall was brought west by Lyons and Moran to play a featured lead in their first production, "Everything But the Truth."

Lynn Reynolds is to direct the making of "The Red Lane," an adaptation from a story of the Northwest by Holman Day. The only member selected for this cast so far is Frank Mayo.

Another story ready for direction is "Hitchin' Posts," adapted for the screen from the story of that name by H. H. Shumate. This picture is to have an all star cast, and will be directed by Jack Ford.

Other feature subjects in production are "Dodd -His Diary," being made by Harry Franklin with a cast made up of Edith Roberts, Walter Richardson, Ruth King, Harry Van Meter, Voda Johnson and others, and "Crossed Claims," starring Harry Carey with Mary Charleson as leading woman. The Universal has purchased "Sundown Slim" by Henry Herbert Knibbs, author of "Overland Red," and this will be made later with Carey as star. Another story purchased for this star is "Fighting Job," an original story by H. H. Van Loan.

President Carl Laemmle, Sam Van Ronkel, a business associate, and W. C. Hermann, manager New York Universal exchange, previewed the Von Stroheim production, "The Devil's Passkey," this week before it was forwarded east.

It is evident that the Universal-Smithsonian party in Africa intend to go through to the east coast, as a letter received this week from Orrin Denny, cameraman of the party, states they have reached Tabora, and are enjoying the African summer. This town is on the boundary of the Congo country and German East Africa, from which point they will go to Dar-es-Sallam, and from there it is but 350 miles to the east coast. The expedition is meeting with great success so far as securing scenic film, and all speak enthusiastically of the trip.

FOX

A REINCARNATION story with the early part of it laid in Rome, in the early days, is the vehicle selected for the next Gladys Brockwell picture which will be

Work of filming this subject will be started the end of this week.

One of the big thrillers for the coming Fox western starring Tom Mix titled "No Limit Carson", will be the riding of a bucking bronco in an old time honkey tonk set where there are 300 people, together with gambling tables, paraphernalia, chairs, etc. The scenes were made this week by Director Jacques Jaccard, and fortunately no one was injured.

Director Scott Dunlap is making the last of the Buck Jones picture; and Director Howard M. Mitchell is finishing "His Harvest", which stars Shirley Mason.

Cleveland Moffitt, the novelist, has been engaged by Vitagraph and is expected to arrive in Los Angeles shortly where he and President Smith will collaborate in the preparation of serial stories. New office building with quarters for Messrs. Smith and Moffitt is now being built at the plant.

The Vitagraph Company has leased a big plot of land adjoining their twenty-acre site, and will use this for exterior location scenes. It is in the foothill country, and the first setting to be built there is a mammoth bridge which will be destroyed by explosion for scenes for "The Silent Avenger."

Another definite title selected this week is that for the Joe Ryan-Jean Page serial, which is to follow the William Duncan serial, "The Silent Avenger." The Ryan story has been named "Hidden Dangers," and the company is this week working at Lancaster on the fourth and fifth episode.

William Duncan, Edith Johnson and company are now at work on the eleventh and twelfth episode of "The Silent Avenger."

Lieutenant Kellogg M. Patterson, in charge of recruiting publicity for the Army, was in Los Angeles this week and was the guest of Bradley J. Smollen, director of Vitagraph publicity department at the western studios. Patterson and Smollen served in the same company during the late war.

HERE AND THERE

WORK on the next United Artists Fairbanks picture has been delayed because of the accident to Mr. Fairbanks while in the mountains. The star's finger, which was broken, will be completely knitted in two or three weeks more, and then work will be resumed on "Mollycoddle." It is estimated that but two weeks of filming will be necessary at the studio.

In the past several weeks Santell has been directing Hall Room Comedies, the most recent being the one titled "4th Baby." The date for beginning work on the Edgar Rice Burroughs productions has not been fixed.

Advice from Wm. E. Keefe, who recently accepted the position of manager of production at the American Lifeograph Company, of Portland, Oregon, is to the effect that the company is starting the production of a series of two reel comedies to be satires of society life. Alan Dwan is leaving shortly for a mountain retreat, where he will write the continuity for a Mayflower production which he will begin work on about the first of May.

JOTTINGS

LOS Angeles Film Row on Olive Street is to be materially changed within the next few weeks. Practically all film exchanges located on Olive Street between Seventh and Ninth Street a number of years ago, but in the past two years there has been a general movement of the big stores to the city to Seventh street and the ban made the section one of the most popular retail districts of the city. For this reason, traffic in the business of the exchanges is extremely congested, and with the expiration of leases landlords are increasing the rental prices. For these reasons there is to be a general movement of exchanges southward, and ultimately it is expected most of the branches will be between Ninth and Tenth street on Olive.

The first exchange to locate in this block is that of the Goldwyn when the Goldwyn branch was opened. Pathe and Realart are moving to a new building especially erected for the exchanges needs on the adjoining property to the Goldwyn, and during the past week least was made by Famous Players-Lasky which provides for the erection of a building immediately.

The new building for Famous Players-Lasky will, according to statement of Branch Manager H. O. Ballance, give this exchange twice the space it has in its present quarters, two blocks off Film Row. When the Famous Players-Lasky organization moves to Olive street, all exchanges of the city will be located within the three blocks of each other on the same street. It will be a great convenience to exhibitors, and also in the handling of express packages.

Pathe Branch Manager Field Carmichael expects to have an opening of the new Pathe exchange by April 5th, and Branch Manager Orrin Woody of Realart exchange hopes to be located in the new home by about the same time.

F. C. Ahern, formerly with Pathe at the Atlanta Exchange, has come to Los Angeles and expects to make this his permanent home, having resigned his position in the east.

J. C. Wrightsman has sold a half interest of the Liberty theatre, one of the leading houses at Long Beach, to Mr. Johnson, formerly of Cherokee Falls, Texas.

G. T. Hayes, who has been connected with the Denver branch of Universal, has been transferred to Los Angeles where he will serve as salesman for Branch Manager C. J. Thurkauf.

Personal and Otherwise

DIRECTORS are slowly but surely coming into their own. Now we learn that Tom Terriss, who has been making such big productions for Vitagraph as "The Third Degree," "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Climbers," "Vengeance of Durand," and "The Fortune Hunter," has concluded an arrangement whereby he is to make a series of productions with no star. These will be featured as Tom Terriss' Productions, and it is promised that they will be the greatest superfeature ever produced under the Vitagraph banner, both from an artistic and financial standpoint. Mr. Terriss' first story will be an adaptation of Gouverneur Morris' "Trumpet Island," entitled "The Girl from the Sky," and will be followed by that well known play "The Great Divide," which will be filmed in the Grand Canyon. We are eagerly awaiting Mr. Terriss' pictures.

Word comes from another director, Oliver D. Bailey, who was responsible for "The Whirl of Life," "The Melting Pot" and Gerald Bacon's "Blind Love," that he was the first man to take a company of players north of '53—beyond the Arctic Circle, playing all the camps along the Yukon, from Juneau to Dawson. Mr. Bailey writes that since Alaska has grown so popular, it recalls vividly to his mind a period fifteen years ago, when he started on his tour of the mining camps with six dollars in his pocket and returned with $18,000.

Maurine Powers, the possessor of a spiritual face surrounded by a halo of golden curls, plays the part of Mary, the personification of the spirit of light in "Democracy—The Vision Restored," the timely screen epic written by Lee Francis Lybarger and directed by William Nigh. Little Miss Powers' motion picture career began about two years ago when she played a small part in a Metro picture starring May Allison. She first attracted the attention of directors by her graphic portrayal of an emotional bit in the special photodrama "To Hell With the Kaiser." Following this picture, Mr. Nigh engaged Maurine for the role of Frederick the Great's sweetheart in "Beware." She next supported Johnny Dooley in two of his fun-films, and when Director Nigh prepared the scenario for this latest production, he decided that nobody but Maurine Powers should create the wonderfully sympathetic role of Mary, the blind girl.

Rod La Rocque is going again! Rod has just finished the leading role in Vitagraph's "The Garter Girl," and he is now with Burton King playing opposite Grace Darling in "The Hidden Path."

Vincent Coleman, who left the stage about a year ago to play in pictures, has returned to the spoken drama in "Martinique," a new play by Lawrence Ayre. Vincent plays the leading male role in this play, which is expected on Broadway shortly.

Beulah Livingston tells us that it has long been a custom among the students of Princeton University to select each year, by vote, their favorite actor, actress, poet and scientist. For many seasons Maude Adams held chief place in the boys' hearts as their favorite woman player, but it is interesting to note that with the growing influence of the cinema, there are new idols among the old, and the 1920 Princeton choice has been announced as Norma Talmadge, John Barrymore was chosen as favorite actor and Rudyard Kipling as favorite poet.

George B. Seitz, already known for his versatility by having proved himself an author, producer, director and star of screen serial plays, added another enterprise to his list of activities by presenting "The Hole in the Wall," a drama by Fred

NUPTIAL KNOTS.

Everybody was talking about it, and some were honest enough to say they were surprised. The local press and all of film-land was agog, and it was. The papers carried pictures of the bride and groom, and reproduced the marriage certificate which is a new way of telling it. It was to be a secret, but somebody tipped it off, and then the papers heard about it, and sent swarms of reporters out, and they wrote columns; but suffice to say Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks were married by Dr. Whitcomb Brougher Sunday evening. HOKUM extends congratulations, but returned from sending a telegram, because we were afraid receiving such a message would be a shock, as many people think of telegrams as bringing only unpleasant news.

Jackson, at the Punch & Judy theatre recently. At the studio of George B. Seitz, Inc., in New York, Mr. Seitz is at present directing a serial film, "Velvet Fingers," which Pathe will present with the director as star.

Charles Ray is said to be receiving numbers of letters from Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire, the writers of nearly all of which wish to tell him that they know some one exactly like him, and that they recognized his type instantly. One woman wrote to ask him if he "copied" his picture after one Hiram John Snibby, who lived in the next farm but one. "You looked and acted exactly like him," she wrote, "only Hiram is more religious."

Grace Davison is back in New York after a six weeks' vacation on the coast. Charles T. Horan is preparing the scenario for her next film, and production will be started within a week.

Arline Pretty, who has been playing the leading role in the special Selznick production, "The Timber Wolf," being made under the direction of Burton George, from an original story by Willard Mack, has been experiencing some unusual contrasts in temperature. After four weeks on location in northern New Hampshire, Miss Pretty arrived in New York during one of those rare days when summer really seems to have some idea of being with us this year. As the little star had been enduring scenes that necessitated the exposure of her bare feet and legs for more than four hours in ice and snow, she was delighted with the change in temperature. That is, until she struck the glass covered Selznick studio at Fort Lee, where interiors had to be taken, with her wearing all the clothes in which she had hoped to

To Form Aid Association

Help for Needy Studio Workers to Be Object; Big Ball Planned

FOR a long time J.N. Naulty, general manager of the eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been considering the possibilities of establishing an association to aid the studio employees when in need. As a means to raise the necessary funds an association was formed to give a ball, the proceeds of which will be devoted to the formation of this beneficial association. The organization in charge of the ball, which is known as the Eastern Studios Ball Association, is headed by J. N. Naulty as president, Gardner Hunting as vice-president, M. Healy, Association, is headed by J. Mcfarland, secretary.

The Commodore Hotel ballroom has been engaged for Wednesday, April 28, and committees to handle the arrangements have been formed.

The plans now under consideration are for vaudeville to occupy the evening between the time the doors open at 8:30 until 10 o'clock at which time dancing will begin and last until twelve. The grand march will be at twelve, and after the grand march more dancing. Plans for some form of entertainment between these periods are being made. A buffet supper will be served.

The souvenir of the evening will be a program, the front cover of which will be done in colors by one of the members of the art and decoration department. Photographs of the stars done in sepia, with a perforated edge, so that they may be removed for decorative purposes, will be part of the program.

The attendance of everyone prominent in the motion picture business, including as many stars as will be in town at that time, is expected. Two bands of twenty pieces each have been engaged to supply music for the entertainment and dancing.

"You Get What You Give"

So Says Henry Kolker in Speaking of Director's Handling of Actors

HENRY KOLKER, who as author-director produced "The Third Generation" with an all-star cast for Brentwood and who is now directing ZaSu Pitts at the same studio with marked success in the second of a special series of Kolker-Pitts pictures, is a very firm believer in the biblical maxim "as ye sow so shall ye reap."

In the course of a chat with the western representative of Robertson-Cole Company, Mr. Kolker said, "I do not think a director can get the best results out of his players by assuming an attitude of omniscient aloofness and requiring each player rigidly to adjust his conception of the character he is to portray to that of the director. Real artists of the stage or screen are such because of the brains, soul and experience they have. They must be given all reasonable latitude of expression. Otherwise their performance will be stilted, stiff and wooden.

"I feel that in proportion as the director encourages the co-operation of his players so he frees within their minds that interest or sympathy which alone marks the difference between a rigidly exact and a heart appealing performance. Spontaneity and originality can only be expected from the player whose mind and body are relaxed and 'invited into the spirit of the play' by the genuine sympathy and hearty co-operation of the director.

"In short, I feel that a director gets just what he gives, either a performance which gets across by the very humanness of its appeal or a stilted though perhaps technically correct portrayal, according to the degree in which his own attitude either invites or repels the sympathy and sincere co-operation of his players."

These two charming youngsters are the son and daughter of Maxwell Karger, Frederick Maxwell and Mary Ann, respectively, Metro's director general

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, Universal comedy stars whose hilarious antics have incited laughter which encircles the globe.

America Far in Leap Admits Englishman

Sidney Coates, one of the best known writers on motion picture matters in England, discussing pictorial drama on the eve of his departure for England a few days ago, remarked that the American producer had put a wide gap between himself and his nearest competitor in the turning out of film drama for world consumption.

"The preeminence of the American film is easily explained," said Mr. Coates. "While the British producers were still floundering along with makeshift methods the Americans were in a position to turn out the finest technical work in the world. They are still doing it. Of course the English producer is going ahead now that his eyes are open, but it is still difficult there to get backing for native product in films."

New Inventions Shown In Screen Magazine

In the Universal New Screen Magazine No. 62 may be seen Elmer A. Sperry's latest invention the most powerful searchlight in the world. Another feature shown in this reel is the beam that helped win the war. From this beam, oil was produced for Liberty motors. The different mannerisms of the Japanese also are shown, and the animated drawings by Leslie Elton entitled, "The Adventure of Cinema Lake," and Laughographs complete the reel.

Madge Kennedy Vehicle Has Change of Title

The title of Octavus Roy Cohen's first story written for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has been changed from "Two Cents Worth of Happiness" to "Dollars and Sense." Madge Kennedy is starred in this picture which was directed by Harry Beaumont. Included in the cast supporting Miss Kennedy are Richard Tucker, Willard Louis and Florence Deshon be fairly comfortable in the zero weather of New Hampshire. Then after surviving several days under the studio lights and steam heat in heavy furs, she was called for a few outdoor night scenes in the shortest of evening gowns. She thinks that if "The Timber Wolf" doesn't prove the best picture she has ever done, it won't be her fault she hasn't been truly cold—anyway.

Bessie Love, who has won popularity during the past two years as an ingenue, is now going to have a chance to make the most of her talents in a variety of roles. The Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., are planning to present her in some big picture that will allow her genius scope for versatility that they believe she undoubtedly possesses. Miss Love is to have two directors, Joseph de Grasse and Ida May Park, in order to introduce both the feminine, subtle and keenly humorous temperament that is attributed to Miss Park, and the dramatic and emotional color that Mr. de Grasse can inject into serious scenes. Callaghan Productions are expecting great results from this idea.

Annette Kellerman is busy with the feature she is making for Sol Lesser, the title of which has been chosen, but is to be kept a dark secret until the film is cut, edited and ready for release. Wheeler Oakman heads the supporting cast, and the company is reported to have been on location all over California. According to Mr. Lesser, the picture will be a different sort of production from anything Miss Kellerman has yet done. It will show her not only as a maritime genius but as a normal, healthy American girl with all round athletic ability. It is a comedy drama of today with a strong melodramatic climax.

William D. Taylor, the Paramount director, sees great significance in the statement made by a New York theatrical reviewer that John Barrymore has shown in his stage work beneficial effects from his screen experience. Barrymore is now playing Shakespeare's tragedy, "Richard III," in New York with sensational success.

The critic referred to declared that the actor shows a sureness, ease in method and a repose that never characterized his work until recently. "These virtues," said Mr. Taylor, "are sure to come from experience before the camera. I know not only from observation but as a former actor of the stage who now realizes the handicaps under which the player of the footlights labors. The big thing about the screen, from the actor's standpoint, is the privilege it gives him of scrutinizing his own work."

Exhibitor Aided in Studio

Made Suggestions on Stills for Katherine MacDonald's Production

With the completion of the finishing touches which represent cutting and assembling, Katherine MacDonald's latest attraction, "Passion's Playground," will be forwarded to First National Exhibitors' Circuit for distribution as provided by her contract with that organization.

The large number of California exhibitors who are said to have taken a personal interest in the various steps leading up to the production of this picture is definite evidence, according to Miss MacDonald and her studio associates, that "Passion's Playground," in addition to relating a story that maintains remarkable human interest, at the same time affords them unique chances for promotion. Scores of exhibitors are reported to have made personal visits to the MacDonald studios during the filming of the picture, and their suggestions as to stills which may be made into attractive lobby novelties, newspaper ads and even into twenty-four-sheets guided the studio manager and director in the shooting of stills.

The release of "Passion's Playground" marks the fourth production of Miss MacDonald following her rise to individual stardom upon the formation of her own company and the distributing negotiations entered into with First National. In the "Thunderbolt" and "The Beauty Market" she scored great successes and was given the sobriquet of "The American Beauty." In "The Turning Point," her own beauty amidst the choice settings and romance of Robert W. Chambers' story won her added admirers. But in "Passion's Playground" she is declared to have attained a perfection rarely found when natural beauty and charm, emotional ability, masterful direction and loyal work on the part of a supporting cast are required, says First National.

Miss MacDonald claims that a large amount of credit for the success of her latest is due to Norman Kerry, Nell Craig, Edwin Stevens, Virginia Ainworth, Rudolphe Valentine, Alice Wilson, Howard Gaye, and Walt Whitman.

Time Must Be Given Continuity Writer

Philip Lonergan, who is doing the continuity of "The Girl With the Jazz Heart," which Goldwyn will soon produce with Madge Kennedy in the title role, believes in plenty of time for proper preparation of scripts.

"What would people think of a builder," Mr. Lonergan asks, "who spent insufficient time upon the steel framework of a skyscraper, trusting to the brick and stonework to keep the building from crashing down upon the passing throngs? And yet that is exactly what producers do who make a continuity writer rush a story through in a few days and then expect the director and star to get the production over. It isn't fair to the star, the director, the writer, or—the public."

Metro Obtains Control of Dallas Exchange

Metro Pictures Corporation has come into full ownership of the Dallas, Texas, exchange formerly controlled by the E. H. Hulsey interests. This exchange reaches virtually the entire southwestern motion picture territory.

Absorption of the Dallas exchange, following Metro's purchase of its New Jersey exchange from Herman Jans about a fortnight ago, leaves only two offices among those handling Metro pictures in the United States, still under independent management. These are in Boston and Philadelphia.

Metro's southern district manager is L. L. Dent.

"New Theatres"

The locations of loges and projection room in the Queen theatre, Dallas, Texas, are worthy of attention

Facade and cross-sectional view of proposed Palace theatre to be built by the Allen interests in Montreal. The theatre was designed by C. Howard Crane of Detroit

It is intended to incorporate in this house many improvments found desirable from the performance of the many other theatres in the Allen chain

Seven other Allen theatres will be opened within the next six months

C. Howard Crane Has Finished Plans for Latest Allen Theatre in Canada

The Palace Will Be Located in Montreal

ANNOUNCEMENT was recently made of the plans for the big motion picture theatre, which is being erected in Montreal on St. Catharine street, opposite Victoria street and extending back to Cathcart street. The builders, Messrs. Juel and J. J. Allen, have issued a statement promising that this will be the finest cinema establishments in all Canada.

Allen's Palace Theatre, as it will be called, will cost a half million dollars for the house and decorations. It will be entirely fireproof and equipped with every convenience and accommodation that is known in modern houses.

The entrance on St. Catharine street will be twenty-five feet wide and this will run back to the main auditorium, which will occupy a plot ninety feet by one hundred and seventy-five. The seating capacity will be approximately three thousand, including two thousand seats on the ground floor, eight hundred in the balcony and two hundred loge seats. The front of the building will be constructed of glazed terra cotta and will be very ornate. There will be an ornamental iron marquee extending to the curb, the full length of the house. Special arrangements have been made for the protection of the patrons so that there will be ample lobby space and ticket selling booths, which will protect from the weather. The floors and walls of the lobby will be of white and green marble. There will be unusual decorations followed in the frieze and the ceilings.

When one enters the theatre there will be a striking scene presented with the foyer luxuries. Here there will be provided comfortable seats for parties desiring to meet, and leading from this there will be dressing rooms for the ladies and smoking rooms for the men, equipped with every possible comfort.

Directly over the foyer, and between the ground floor and the balcony there will be a mezzanine lounge which promises something distinctive in Montreal theatre construction. This will be treated in the form of an eliptical well opening, giving the patrons a sight of the foyer. This will be constructed largely as a lounge room.

Italian Renaissance will be followed as the interior architectural designs. Ivory, old rose and gold will be used for the colors. There will be impressive draperies designed to match the color scheme and the remainder of the house. The walls will be alternated in color effect, with tapestry panels that will afford a relief to the eye, but at the same time a glimpse effect that appeals to harmony.

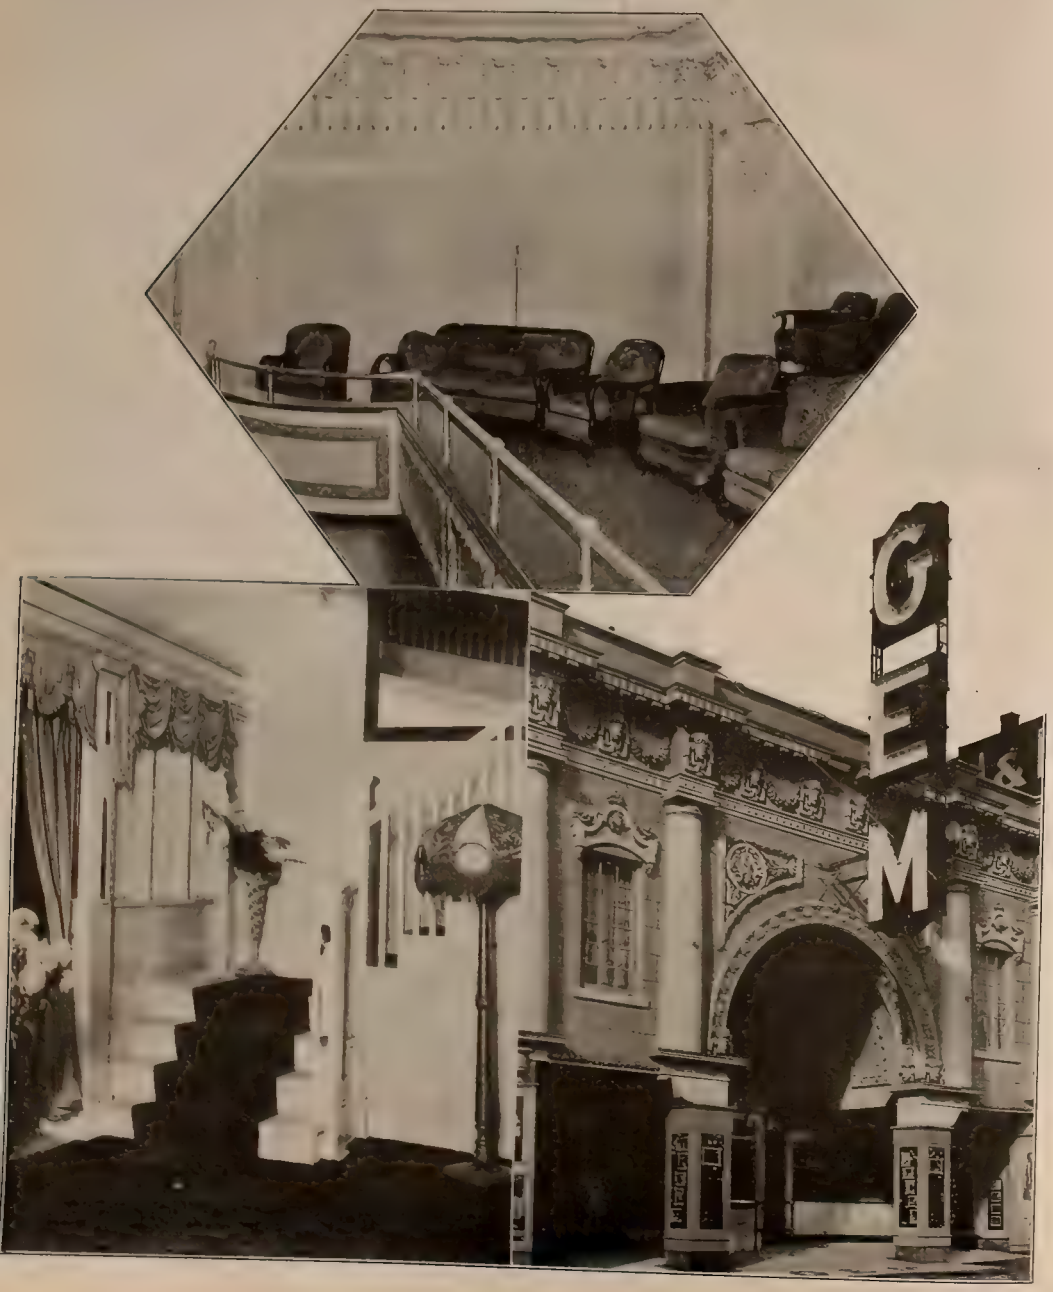
The lighting system will be what is known as the concealed type. Those lights, by gradation, will be dimmed and brought out as a number being presented calls for. There will be no direct change from darkness to full light, but one will be unconscious of the raising or lowering of them. There will be four different colors of lights used, so that the house may be bathed in blue and then swathed in pink.

It is the policy of all Allen theatres to give the closest attention to the comfort of their patrons and therefore an amount larger than is usually spent in the construction of most theatres will be devoted to the system of heating and ventilation. This system will be so arranged as to provide every patron with thirty cubic feet of fresh air per minute. In the summer time this air will be cooled, reducing the temperature some twenty degrees below the street; and in the winter will be distributed over the heated pipes assuring the same temperature in all parts of the house. The oil burning system of heating will be used, so that Montreal folk need never be worried about their comfort in Allen's Palace Theatre, by any shortage of coal.

The very greatest attention will be given to music. There will be installed the largest pipe organ ever built for a Canadian theatre. There will be an orchestra of about twenty-five pieces under the direction of an eminent musician, and this orchestra will accompany the pictures and special musical scores, and will afford the local and visiting artists who appear at the Allen's Palace appropriate settings.

Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen are building their Palace theatre with the idea of affording Montreal people the acme in entertainment of the silent drama and music. They have given direction to the architect, Mr. C. Howard Crane, who is one of the leading theatre architects of the entire world, to put into the house his best ideas. The Allens recently opened their new theatre in Winnipeg, which has been hailed by theatre owners everywhere as the perfection in cinema construction. Mr. Crane is responsible for the statement that the Allen theatre in Montreal will even surpass the Winnipeg house in luxury and comfort. (Ed. note: The Winnipeg House was described in the March 6 issue.)

It will be possibly late summer or fall before the house is opened, because the contractors have been told that the essence of excellence is necessary.



It was only thirteen years ago that Mr. B. Allen with his two sons, Jule and Jay J. started their first motion picture theatre in Brantford. Pictures were then being exhibited regularly only in Montreal and Toronto, also the larger cities of the Dominion. It was at a time that most people looked upon the motion picture as a passing fad and the far greater portion of those who went into the business of showing them did so with the idea of getting the quick profits, before the fad died out. They had no idea of conducting their theatres on the lines of other sound business undertakings. But one of the chief elements in the success of the Allens has been their vision. They saw ahead that the motion picture had come to stay and so at the very start of their career they laid down two rules that have remained a part of their business creed, that none but the cleanest pictures obtainable should be shown in their theatres, and that the patron must be pleased no matter what trouble or expense.

Such policies were so successful that there came a second and a third theatre in Brantford and then these were extended into a chain of theatres through smaller cities in Western Ontario. However, at that time the distribution of motion picture film was entirely unorganized. They were compelled often to go in person to Buffalo or Detroit to get the film to show, often to make long trips through the snow at great personal discomfort. They were impressed with the idea of going into the business of motion picture film and they did this so successfully that they were attracted by the virgin field offered by the Prairie Provinces. So they sold out their Ontario theatres and moved to Calgary where they established the headquarters of their film service. This was an immediate success from the start, and rapidly broadened.

It was only during the summer that the announcement was made of their "invasion" of the States. The character of their theatres and the quality of their presentations had spread all over the country south of the border and invitations were sent them to bring their quality of amusements to the principal cities. They have already started work in theatres in Cleveland and Detroit that represent the investment of several millions of dollars, and have plans for the erection of houses in a number of other principal cities. But they have by no means dropped their plans for Canada, which call for a theatre at every point of importance in the Do-

Some Beautiful Spots to be Found in the Salt Lake City Gem

The Gem Theatre Has Unique Loges

THE Gem Theatre in Salt Lake City is a strictly family theatre. That was the idea the owners and builders had in mind when it was built and that is the result as turned over to them by the contractor and decorators. Nothing can show this so well as the illustrations in this issue. The staircase for example has been designed and decorated similar to those ordinarily found in the average home. There is nothing theatre-y about it. It differs greatly from the grand staircase of the usual motion picture house.

One other illustration shows the Divan Floor from which the patron can see the picture while.

One other illustration shows the Divan Floor with its sumptuous easy chairs and davenports. Imagine if you can view a good picture from such a viewpoint as this and while reclining in comfortable chairs of this type. Could anything be added to make the patron more comfortable?

The woodwork in this theatre is finished in old ivory with some rose tints to give a pleasing contrast. One of the most pleasing effects is the "long distance phonograph," by means of which a single phonograph transmits its music through hidden tubes about the house. Six sound stations are located in the walls, each capable of being isolated, and the music is carried swinging across the auditorium without break or tone change. Special provision has been made for theatre parties and rocking chairs have been placed on the mezzanine floor supplanting the regulation theatre chairs.

Randolph Theatre Well Equipped with Lobby Frames

The new State Street Lobby of Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Randolph Theatre in Chicago is a work of art, its exquisite plainness being what makes it most attractive. The floor is a fine example of tilers' work and the walls are Italian marble extending fourteen feet in height, surmounted by panelled tapestry. Gorgeously hand-carved marble urns, settees and benches are found on either side of the lobby and in the center is a carved electric fountain of artistic design.

One of the most attractive features in the lobby is the solid mahogany Bilt-Rite easels, the product of the Consolidated Portrait & Frame Company of Chicago. Each easel contains exquisite art works and oil paintings of the current and coming productions and makes a beautiful appearance with the marble walls of the lobby as a background and adds the finishing touch to the artistic elegance of the Randolph's new entrance.

Incidentally, the Randolph is the only motion picture playhouse in Chicago and the middle west having two separate entrances, one being on Randolph Street and the other on State.

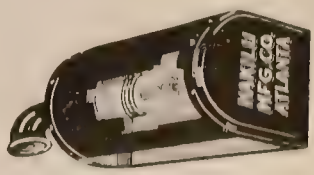
minion These are being announced as rapidly as sites can be secured and the plans prepared.



The Allens now have in actual operation the Allen, Beach, Beaver Bloor, Danforth, Royal, St Clair and Christie in Toronto; the Allen and New Grand in Montreal; Auditorium and Allen in Quebec; Regent and Russell in Ottawa; the Temple in Hamilton; the Majestic in London; Allen in Cobourg; Allen in Peterboro; Allen in Brantford; Imperial and Allen in Kitchener; Lyric in Cobalt; Windsor in Windsor; Allen, Province Dominion, Gaiety, Bijou and Rex in Winnipeg; Allen and Bijou in Calgary; Allen, Rex and Rose in Regina; Allen, Monarch and Imperial in Edmonton; Allen in Moosejaw; Allen in Brandon; Lyric in Swift Current; Royal Victoria in Victoria; Rex and Globe in Vancouver; Liberty in Trail; Stazland in Nelson; Allen in Stratford; Allen in Yorkton and Allen in Paris.

In addition there are under construction and to be opened within a period varying from one to six months, the Parkdale and College in Toronto; Allen in Halifax; the Allen in London, Allen in Windsor, Allen in St. Catharines; Allen in Vancouver and a number of others for which the locations have not been definitely announced. It may be safely stated that the building operations of the Allens for the current year run into ten millions of dollars.

Mr. B. Allen, president of the Allen Theatre Enterprises, has largely retired from active work and has left the management of the now vast business in the hands on his sons, Jule and Jay J., two remarkable young men whose work is known today wherever motion pictures exist Their personal enterprise and the sound judgment which they have used has been fully recognized and the motion picture world knows them today as commanding figures in the entire field of exhibition.

To Make Aisles Safe for Patrons

From the workshop of the Lucas Theatre Supply Company comes a new light fixture for use on the sides of aisles. The illustration gives a good idea of the appearance of the device. It is arranged to be bolted on the under side of the chair arm at intervals of about 12 feet. The fixtures are 5¼ long and 2⅛ square The entire device is enameled black with a baked finish but special finishes can be supplied on order. A 10 watt lamp supplies sufficient illumination for the ordinary installation. The trade name for the article is the Saftelite.

T. F. Uhlemann Is One of the Pioneers of the Industry

He Was Turning Out Projection Machines Back in 1897

T. F. UHLEMANN, works manager of the Nicholas Power Co., lives with his wife and his boys at Richmond Hill, L. I. He is proud of his family but running a close second in his affections is the Power's Projector. While making no claim that he is the father, or even the godfather, of motion picture machines Mr. Uhlemann has a right to call himself an uncle or some sort of relative. In the prehistoric period of the motion picture industry Mr. Uhlemann was making projectors in Europe, turning out one at a time, built to order. This was about 1897, and the machine was usually made according to specifications for some professor who, even at that early date, saw the possibilities of motion pictures in connection with lectures. The work, of course, was actually done in an experimental shop and nearly all by hand. In spite of this they were practical and from these Mr. Uhlemann acquired much information which was of real assistance to him later on. In 1903 he joined the Power's forces and has been with them ever since.

In 1903 Power's 3 and 4 were being made and the whole plant was about as large as Mr. Uhlemann's present office. The first Power's plant was in Nassau Street, New York City, but was soon moved to Jacob Street, where it is still retained as one of the smaller factories of the Nicholas Power Co. Within six months after Mr. Uhlemann secured his first position with Power's he was made foreman and has been in full charge of the manufacturing end of the business since 1915.

Mr. Uhlemann is responsible for many of the improvements that have been made in Power's Projectors and the method of manufacturing them. At one very early period the Power's and Edison mechanism was attached to a wooden table board and anyone at all acquainted with Motion picture machines will know that wood in connection with projectors is now absolutely out of the question. In fact all parts are not merely of metal but all metals are carefully selected for the purpose for which they are intended. The mills supplying metals furnish a scientifically developed product which must be adapted to the particular part in which it is to be used. Nearly ten years ago Mr. Uhlemann saw the advantages of manganese bronze and tungsten chromium steel for the wearing and strain bearing parts of the Power's Projector and these have since been used in all machines.

He has also insisted upon the use of special and automatic machinery whenever these could be used efficiently. The plant of the Nicholas Power Co. is well equipped with the latest machinery for turning out the delicate and complicated mechanism used in projectors, and all this has been installed while Mr. Uhlemann has been connected with the Power's company. The inspection department of Power's was organized and developed by him and it has always been one of his hobbies. Every part of every machine is carefully inspected at every stage of manufacture and the liquid gauge which registers within one-tenthousandth of an inch is used almost exclusively for inspection. The pin cross, which requires twenty operations in the manufacture, also receives twenty inspections. Every stage of manufacture of every part is inspected in just this way. This system is extremely characteristic of Mr. Uhlemann's methods and explains why he has held his present important position so many years.

Some of the incidents related by Mr. Uhlemann referred to the early days of the film industry when almost every vacant store in the United States was being turned into a movie house. It was not unusual at that time to have unfilled orders on hand for a thousand machines, and exhibitors were pleading for them. C. B. Kleine, brother of Geo. Kleine, came down one day with two boys and carted a machine away on their backs. Projectors were lighter then than they are now, but this was some job for one man and two boys. The machine was urgently needed and this was the only way apparently it could be got in a hurry. We are reminded of an incident which came under our notice some years ago during the boom days of Goldfield, when fortunes were being made on mining leases and machinery was none too plentiful. One mining company with a very short lease on a very valuable claim had a complete equipment for mining sent by express from Chicago. But it was worth the expense. Every industry has its boom days and there was just such a period when the movies looked like a sure road to wealth for the exhibitor with small capital. Many of these pioneers have passed on to other fields but some of them are still with us.

Mr. Uhlemann is still a young man and has many years of usefulness before him. He has been a pioneer and important pathfinder in a great industry. The part he has played in developing the Power's Projector should not be overlooked, for the present splendid reputation, nationally and internationally, of this machine is in no small degree due to his great experience, energy, ability and enterprise. We think T. F. Uhlemann may be saluted as one of the real pioneers of the motion picture industry.

Chamberlain Amusement Enterprises Buy Opera House

L. J. Chamberlain, president of the Chamberlain Amusement Enterprises, announces the purchase of the Shamokin, (Pa.) Opera House for the sum of $100,000. With the addition of this theatre the number of houses under the control of the corporation is increased to 9, with options on a number of others.

Ventilation of Theatres Discussed

Another paper having to do with the construction and equipment of new motion picture theatres has been announced for the forthcoming meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. This paper will be by Mr. O. K. Dyer, on the subject of "Heating and Ventilation of Theatres."

The author will cover the importance of an ample fresh air supply and the physical effects of humidity and temperatures. He will take up the various methods of introducing the air supply, the apparatus necessary and the cost of installating an apparatus.

There will also be some space given to the benefits to be derived from mechanical ventilation and also to the cooling effect obtainable without refrigeration.

It Didn't Happen in the "Movies"

This is a real live hornets' nest fully occupied only a short time before the picture was taken the man with the rod is in dead earnest and the machine, as shown in the illustration, is a real Sturtevant Vacuum Cleaner of that type which motion picture theatres have found very useful in keeping their floors and carpets clean. In this case the hornet family had taken up its quarters a little too close to the school window for comfort. There were a number of methods of handling the situation but none seemed to be perfect—there was always a chance that some of the fiery inmates might escape, which would offer a stinging rebuke to the procedure.

These vacuum cleaners work as well on bees as on theatre dust and dirt

The always efficient Sturtevant however solved the problem. It was called into service and quickly drew all the winged visitors into the dust receptacle.

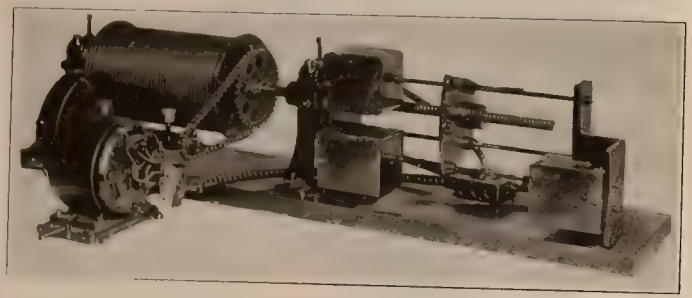
Decorations of Picker's New Rio Theatre Have Caused Considerable Comment

But Skill Was Required to Carry Out the Scheme Without Overdoing the Effects Strived For

THERE is a constant attempt on the part of motion picture theatre owners to strive to create most elaborate and expensive interiors. Since there is always grave danger of overdoing these effects, an artist of rare ability must always be selected. In the case of the interior decorations of the new Rio theatre on upper Broadway, New York, Mr. William Fekari, father of theatre decorations in this country, was in charge of the work.

The decorations at the Rio theatre consist of brilliant gold and metal effects, interminglings a small series of black ornaments, surrounded by blue, green and golden glazes. In creating this color scheme the artist strove to put the audience in a mystified atmosphere and still, leaning towards a restful feeling.



As one enters the auditorium of this theatre, one is amazed at the richness of the interior. The feet hit soft, velvety, blue carpets; the eyes strike the color spectrum on walls and ceiling everywhere, and still all is refined and cozy.

Curtain Control Perfected

Following a four years' trial of an electric automatic curtain machine, the E. J. Vallen Electrical Co., of Akron, Ohio, has been organized to manufacture and market it.

The machine was invented about five years ago by E. J. Vallen. The first model was installed in The Strand, Akron's first photoplay theatre, Sept. 2, 1915. This model was in continuous service until two months ago, when it was replaced by a later model, of the type to be manufactured. Altho several machines of this nature have made their appearance in the country, the Vallen invention is reported to be the first to stand the test of long service. J. P. Dunlevy, manager of The Strand, where the machine has been operated, vouches for its practical use and says its efficiency and economy of operation has been demonstrated beyond doubt.

The Vallen machine is electrically operated and can be controlled from two points, either in the operator's booth or from the stage. Only one button is used in switching the electric current on and off. The machine not only automatically controls the current which serves as a protection for the screen or for dividing photoplay offerings into various periods, but can be used to control such lights as are necessary during intermissions. The fact that the machine can be controlled from the projection booth means the saving of labor time and adds efficiency to the showing of pictures as the curtain, screen and lights can thereby be controlled at the will of the operator. The advantages of such co-ordination can readily be seen. The machine can be manufactured for about $300 and the installation cost is said to range from $25 to $50. The Company manufacturing the machine is prepared to back the offering with a guarantee of service. It occupies a space three feet long, one foot wide and one foot high when installed.

A Theatre Organ "Wonder" in Completement

Some idea of the amount of material and the work involved in installing and erecting a modern motion picture theatre organ can be gained from a report received from the new Colonial recently opened in Tacoma, Wash.

More than 50,000 feet of wiring was necessary to connect up the various pieces of apparatus on the Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Organ at this theatre. Everything is worked by electricity which accounts for this tremendous length of cable.

There are 3200 pipes arranged in several swell boxes ranging from 16 x 19 to 16 x 11 feet. There is also a Tibra, which is a special set of pipes developed by the Wurlitzer Co., especially for motion picture theatres. Included in the array of instruments at the beck and call of the organist are drums, cymbals, bird whistles, cathedral chimes, oboe, violin, xylophone, glockenspiel, vox humana, flute and piano.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Practical Electricity—VI
Study Lessons for the Projectionist

AN electric circuit is the path in which the current flows and is distinguished according to a series circuit, a parallel or multiple circuit, or a complex circuit which is a combination of series and parallel connections.

When several pieces of apparatus are connected so that the current has a single path then they are said to be connected in series and the circuit is known as a series circuit. In a series circuit the current flowing in any part of the circuit flows through each piece of apparatus connected in succession so that an ammeter connected in any part of the circuit would register the same.

A typical series circuit is shown by Fig. 10 in which three resistances are connected together around the terminals of a battery. When resistances are connected in series the total resistance of the circuit is equal to the sum of the separate resistances.

As illustrated in Figure 10 the potential of the series of batteries is 6 volts and the values of the resistances are 1, 2, and 3 ohms and we wish to find the current which will flow in the circuit.

If we neglect the internal resistance of the batteries and the resistance of the conductor, the combined resistance is 1 + 2 + 3 or 6 ohms.

Then from Ohm Law I equals $\frac{E}{R}$, the current which will flow in the circuit is $\frac{6}{6}$ or 1 ampere.

Now since we know the current flowing in the circuit to be 1 ampere we can find the drop around the separate parts of the circuit. From Ohm's Law E equals I times R. Then the difference in potential or drop around R_1 is the current times the resistance of that section or 1 ampere times 1 ohm which gives 1 volt. Similarly the drop around R_2 is 1 ampere times 2 ohms or 2 volts and around R_3 is 1 ampere times 3 ohms or 3 volts.

Also in a series circuit the sum of the drops in potential around the separate parts of the circuit is equal to the applied voltage to the whole circuit of 1 volt + 2 volts + 3 volts equals 6 volts or the applied voltage exerted by the series of batteries.

An arc circuit shown by Fig. 11 for a projection lamp is a series circuit. Thus if we have a 110 volt D. C. supply voltage and wish to obtain 40 amperes at a 50 volt drop across the arc then we would find the required series resistance necessary for the circuit as follows: The drop in voltage necessary in the rheostat in order to keep to drop across the arc at 50 volts is 110 − 50 or 60 volts. Then the value of the resistance should be from Ohm's Law

R equals $\frac{E}{I}$ or $\frac{60}{40}$ equals 1.5 ohms which is the necessary grid resistance for the circuit. In order to change this resistance depending on the variation of the carbons and the setting or length of arc the resistance is usually connected with several leads so that the amount of resistance used in the circuit can be varied and thus

Correct answers to questions of March 20 issue:

1. 0.0559 gr. silver
2. 6 amperes
3. 0.5 ampere
4. 120 volts
5. 55 volts
6. 55 ohms
7. 24 ohms
8. 100 coulombs

vary the drop across the arc and therefore the current flowing through it.

Another reason for a rheostat in circuit is to cut down the flow of current when arc is struck or in other words when a short circuit is placed across the line. Thus when arc is struck 110/1.5 or 73.4 amperes would flow and unless this resistance was connected in the circuit a complete short circuit would be placed on the line and an excessive current would flow and blow all the fuses protecting the line. This increased amount of current flows only for a short interval when the arc is being struck for as soon as the carbons are separated the resistance of the arc is added to the circuit, and the current flow is cut down to normal.

Resistances are very wasteful having only about 50 per cent efficiency, but they are the easiest method available when direct current is used and the initial expense of a motor generator is too great to be considered. Yet much expense would be saved in the long run by the installation of a motor generator set which would have an efficiency of about 70 per cent and would do away with the objectionable heat developed by rheostats, also the motor generator set gives a much better control of the arc.

Care should be taken in placing carbons in a lamp to see that the clamps are clean and securely fastened in order that a good contact may be obtained with the carbon.

The greater percentage of light used in projecting a picture comes from the crater of the positive carbon. The positive carbon should be the upper one and may be distinguished as the one which remains red the longer when the current is cut off. Should the lower carbon remain red the longer time the arc is then said to be "burning upside down" and the connecting leads should be changed.

The positive carbon burns about twice as fast as the negative and therefore is usually made twice the length, also a positive carbon is about ⅛ inch larger in diameter than the negative.

A parallel circuit is one in which several paths are provided for the flow of current. If these paths are all of equal resistance as would be the case where a number of similar lamps as shown by Fig. 12 were connected across the line then the total current flowing in the circuit would be the product of the number of lamps times the current flow of each lamp. Or if 110 volts causes a current of 1 ampere to flow in each lamp the total current supplied would be 6 times 1 or 6 amperes.

When several paths of unequal resistance are connected across the line the amount of the current in each section is inversely proportioned to the values of the resistances. The total amount of current to be supplied is the sum of the current flowing in the different branches.

A circuit made up of unequal resistances in parallel is shown by Fig. 13.

Thus if we have resistance of 1 ohm, 2 ohms, and 3 ohms respectively connected across a 6 volt potential, since the drop across all the risistances is the same the current flowing in the 1 ohm branch will be $\frac{6}{1}$ or 6 amperes, the current in the 2 ohms branch $\frac{6}{2}$ or 3 amperes, and the current in the 3 ohms branch $\frac{6}{3}$ or 2 amperes. The total current flowing from the source of supply would be 6+ 3 + 2 or 11 amperes.

In order to find the equivalent single resistance which when connected across the supply voltage would allow the same current to flow we would use the formula where R is the single equivalent resistance and r_1, r_2, r_3 are the given values of the resistances.

$$\frac{1}{R} = \frac{1}{r_1} + \frac{1}{r_2} + \frac{1}{r_3} \text{ etc.}$$

Using the values of Fig 13

$$\frac{1}{R} = \frac{1}{1} + \frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{3}$$

reducing the right hand side of the equation to a common denominator, we have $$\frac{1}{R} = \frac{6}{6} + \frac{3}{6} + \frac{2}{6} \text{ or } R \text{ equals } \frac{6}{6}$$

Answers to Study Lessons

A B., Lodi, Calif., writes

I take pleasure in answering your question "What is a Dynamo?"

The principal parts of a dynamo are: the bearings, shaft, armature, armature windings, commutator, brushes, field magnets, field windings, leads and terminal block

The current is generated as follows: When the Generator is not running the field magnet still retains a very little of its magnetism, and is sending a very small amount of magnetic lines of force through the armature When the armature starts revolving, the armature windings cut through these lines of force and a very weak current is generated but weak as it is, it is strong enough to travel around the field windings and as it travels around the field it makes the field a little stronger and the field magnet sends more and more magnetic lines of force through the armature as the magnetic field is thus increased so is the current generated in the armature, increased. This makes the field still stronger and this action keeps up until the capacity of the field rheostat is reached whereupon the voltage stops rising.

If there were no field rheostat in series with the field then this rise would continue until the field became saturated with magnetism and could hold no more; then the rise would stop.

Reply: Your answer is correct in so far as it goes, altho you have limited your description to one type of generator, namely a self-excited shunt type. This type is, however, the one which is most generally used.

The fundamental meaning of the term dynamo is a machine for converting mechanical energy into electrical energy by means of electromagnetic induction. No electricity is created by a dynamo but an induced electromotive force is generated or produced which causes a current to flow in the circuit connected to the dynamo.

The principal of operation of the dynamo depends on the fact that if a conductor is placed in a magnetic field and a change in position or a change in the magnetic field strength be made so that the conductor is made to cut lines of force then an E.M.F. is set up which is proportional to the rate of cutting.

The operation of a dynamo depends upon the following factors: a magnetic field, produced by electromagnets, and a number of loops or turns of wire wound on an iron core, forming the armature, which is so arranged that the lines of force set up by the field magnets may be cut by the armature conductors, and an E.M.F. generated.

The operation of a shunt generator depends on the residual magnetism retained by the field magnets so that when the armature is revolved the conductors cut a very weak field and an E.M.F will be set up at the brushes. This E.M.F. will cause a current to flow in the field windings and tend to increase the magnetic field, and consequently the generated E.M.F This action continues until the iron of the magnetic field becomes saturated with the maximum number of magnetic lines of force depending on the design of the special machine. The dynamo will then produce a constant voltage which is slightly reduced by the cross-magnetizing effect of the armature when the load is applied.

The field rheostat has the effect of added field resistance so that a smaller current will pass thru the fields and the effective ampere turns and resulting flux will therefore be reduced. By this means the field strength can be varied so that any desired value of brush or terminal voltage may be obtained

Thinks He Has Ideal Projection Room

E. Buras, Tudor theatre, New Orleans, La., writes in as follows:

Reading in practically every issue of Motion Pictures News about some model or ideal projection room, in some larger cities of the North I want to say as a projectionist from the South (as it appears to be this time) that I have an up-to-date equipment placed in a booth (not sweat box) which measures 20 ft. wide, 8 ft. 6 in. deep and 7 ft. 6 inches high Two Simplex Projectors Lujes S Equipped, with arc controller, two rheostats in multiple, a set for each lamp, drawing 68 amperes at arc, using a ⅝ cored carbon top and 5-16 silverty bottom. Have a 120-foot throw, on which I use two wing shutters of my own design and eliminate all flicker at any speed. Have always an extra head and lamp on hand for emergency. An 18-inch exhaust fan with a one horse power motor ventilates the room.

The above equipment is in Pearce's Tudor theatre, New Orleans, La., where Brothers E M. Buras and P. W. Kelly, member of Local 293, I. A. T. S. E. are projectionists.

Stero Kinks

J J. Keough, Williamsport, Pa.

Reading over some more of the News which I found laying in the office it got a grip on me. I think it very interesting especially for projectionists, therefore I would be delighted to write some letters for the section.

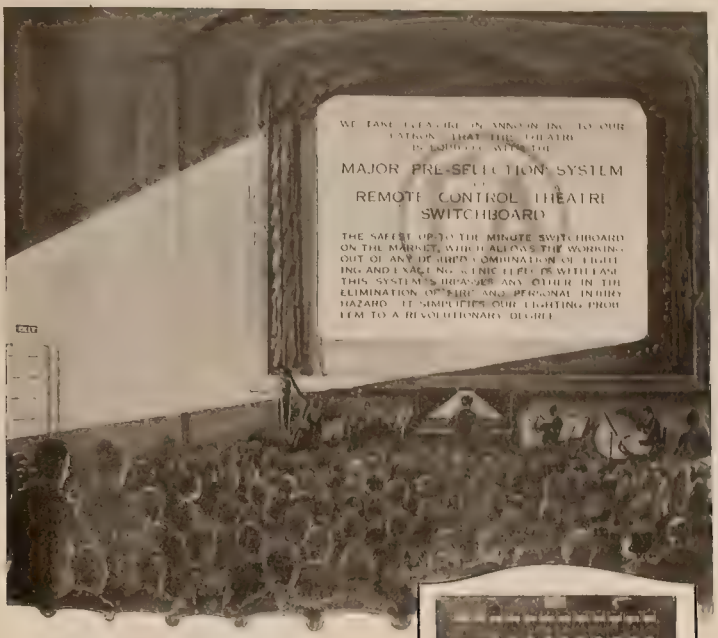
I promised to give out some good dope on the Simplex Machine in a short time, but I thought some projectionist might need this little stunt so I will let you have it for your news section if you think it worth printing.

For the spot light I needed some gelatine for different colors but I could not get them so I bought three pieces of common glass ¼" thick and used some globe coloring. Its the cheapest way of running a spot light and you can make any fancy colors or shapes you need with no danger of breaking for I have run it at high amperage.

You can always clean this off and make anything new you want. Just use a flat pan and hold glass edgewise, then pour the color on one side. It is best to get a soft cloth and keep a piece for each color.

Next an idea for a stereo lens in place of having the lens attached to machine. Get a piece of conduit pipe and fix it to wall in front of booth. People used to say they could not read the slides because they shake so much, but this stopped it.

A Discussion of the Speer Directo Carbon



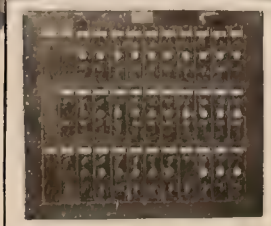
By Eugene H. Kaufman

During the earliest days of motion pictures, projection was very largely effected by the combination of a cored upper carbon together with a solid lower. In the past two years wonderful strides have been made in the improvement of the lower carbon the metal coating and hard core now being universally demanded by the projectionists.

The Speer Hold-Ark Negative Carbons relegated to the scrap heap, the antiquated solid lowers; and the Speer Directo Positives will have even greater effect on the so-called "cored uppers."

In the Speer Directo Carbons, let us first draw attention to the construction—a carbon with a compound core. The core is composed of a hard, specially constructed electrically conduction material, surrounded by the proper proportions of a heat insulating compound, imbedded within a star center, all of which are of the utmost importance in light producing qualities and in securing stability of the arc.

The core enables the arc to be centered almost the instant the current is applied and the old system of burning the carbons for five or ten minutes in order to get the proper crater, exists only as a recollection of former days.



In your New Theatre or the remodeling of the old good lighting effects are essential

For the large theatre, auditorium or small picture house, there is a Major Switchboard that will do the work more efficiently and with more saving of electrical current than any switchboard on the market.

With the Major Switchboard any individual switch unit or combination of units or even the entire board may be controlled from any part of the theatre—it is the only switchboard allowing the setting up of lighting changes ahead without interference with the lighting effects in operation at the time.

Ask for Bulletin Number 6S

No lighting change is so complicated that it cannot be made instantly on the Major Switchboard—BY THE OPERATION OF A SINGLE LEVER.

Investigations into the merits of the MAJOR Switchboard by leading architects and engineers specializing in theatre construction has proved so unanimously in its favor that the following new representative theatres are MAJOR equipped or have MAJOR Equipment specified:

Evolution and progress go hand in hand, but we doubt if our statement would have been accepted even a short time ago had we revealed the fact that Speer Directo Carbon not only embodies a maximum current carrying capacity thus increasing the illumination per unit of crater area, but also that the arc is positive and firm and can be maintained with very few adjustments, and that both a long and short arc gap can be employed.

The Speer Directo Carbon will run more reels per inch of length than any other carbon on the market and a perfect crater is maintained at all times regardless of the light distribution or other imperfection voltage.

There is no pitting or sputtering, as the core prevent any material from flaking off. This means that the light beam is not clouded at any time and that the condensers only require an occasional cleaning.

Naturally a negative must be used in connection with the Speer Directo Carbon and in order to secure the results described, a Speer Hold Ark lower should always be employed. The arc centers on the solid core of the Hold-Ark, and if any other lower is used to complete the combination, perfect projection cannot be guaranteed.

As the Speer Hold Ark Carbon is constructed with a metal coating, the combination of a 12-inch Directo with a 6-inch Hold Ark affords practically an equal carbon consumption; i. e. one inch of upper to one half inch of lower.

The proper Speer Directo Hold Ark combinations are as follows:

40-60 Amperes
- 5/8 x 12" Speer Directo (upper)
- 3/8 x 6" Speer Hold Ark (lower)

55-75 Amperes
- 1/2 x 12" Speer Directo (upper)
- 7/16 x 6" Speer Hold-Ark (lower)

70-90 Amperes
- 5/8 x 12" Speer Directo (upper)
- 7/16 x 6" Speer Hold Ark (lower)

85-110 Amperes
- 1 x 12" Speer Directo (upper)
- 1/2 x 6" Speer Hold Ark (lower)

In the recommendations made above it will be noted that on certain amperages two different combinations are shown. In this way we had hoped to accommodate all conditions, and where projectionists insist, this allows the continued use of the same combination that had been employed in the past. We, however, urge and direct projectionists to use (but not exceed) the highest amperage specified for each combination, thereby assuring the greatest efficiency possible, both in carrying capacity of the carbons and in intensity of illumination.

Wherever the Speer Directo Hold-Ark combination is used the carbons should always be placed on the angle setting. This, however, is the usual setting for direct current and one quite familiar to all projectionists.

As a word of caution, we again reiterate that carbons should be kept in a dry place where they will not absorb moisture, as any moisture that might be absorbed will be detrimental to intense illumination and may cause sputtering.

Traveling Motion Picture Outfits

A. M., Friday Harbor, Wash.:

I am trying to figure out a traveling picture show outfit and I wish to know something about these portable machines, that they have on the market. Take the Peerless, Pathescope and the Graphoscope, Jr., and several others, are these suited to run the ordinary film and make a 9 by 12 picture at 60 ft., and make it bright enough for an audience to look at without eye strain? I understand they get their light from about a 100 to a 400 watt bulb. I had in mind a Fair-bank-Morse outfit, of about 750 watts capacity. What do they usually use for light where electricity is not available? I mean from a central station. Would a gas outfit serve me just as well or better than what I have mentioned for light? I would like to hear from you and tell me all about a portable or traveling outfit.

Reply:

Peerless, Acme and the Graphoscope will take the standard film and will produce approximately a 9x12 picture with a 60 foot throw; light outfits in each case is an incandescent lamp which may be connected direct to the lighting circuit.

Gas and calcium lights have not proved satisfactory for motion picture work. Where electricity is not available from a central station, small isolated gasoline motor generating sets have been found most serviceable.

The following manufacturers put out such sets: Imsco Independent Movie Supply Co., 729 7th Avenue, New York City; Delco Light Co., Dayton, Ohio; Universal Motor Co., Oshkosh, Wis.; Fairbanks Morse, 30 Church Street, New York City.

His Manager Supplies Best Equipment

A letter recently received from Mr. Musser says:

This is the first time I have butted in since I joined the N A M L which has been several years ago. After seeing so much about the better card and button I came to the conclusion that I would drop you a few lines pertaining to this matter.

My N A M L. is 183 and I certainly am proud of it the same as my other brothers in the business. I am in favor of the better card and button question and sincerely hope that the head of this organization settles it quickly in favor of the affirmative side. I think that all the rest is also in favor of it, so why should'nt we have it.

I think the card should be the size of an identification card and button something like the I A T S E. Then we can identify other brothers on sight.

Am operating in this town of 1,200 population but the Mgr. is giving them the best that can be bought. Cannot say enough for Paramount and Arteraft. Some organization.

Correct Rewinding Speed

R. N., Massachusetts. To settle a wager we would like to have you answer these questions for us. A short time ago several of us were discussing the effect of high-speed rewinding on the film. We tried to figure out the speed of the film when wound on a 5" hub at the rate of a thousand feet in 4 minutes but we decided that we didn't know our mathematics well enough. Can this problem be solved in ordinary figures or does it require something more difficult? What is the speed of the film at the start and what at the finish. What speed do laboratories and exchanges use when rewinding films.

Reply. If too high a rewind speed is used it is impossible to detect any film imperfections, such as torn sprocket holes or stripped emulsion, also there is danger of the edge of the film catching on the reel and being bent over, thus ruining that section of the film.

To determine exactly the speed of the film at all times in the above instance would require the use of higher mathematics, but since the rate of rewind of 1000 feet in 4 minutes is more or less approximate we may use a simplified solution as follows:

1,000 feet in 4 minutes is 250 feet or 3,000 inches per minute. A reel with a 5 inch hub has an over all diameter of film of bout 10 inches when 1,000 feet of film has been wound on the reel. An average diameter between the first and last turn would be 7½ inches or the length of an average turn would be 7½ times or 23.6 inches. Figuring from this average length of turn to rewind 3,000 inches per minute would require a speed of 3000/23.6 or 127 revolutions per minute.

If this speed is taken as the revolutions of reel on rewind then the speed of the film at the beginning would be $5 \times \pi \times 127 \div 12$ or 166 feet per minute, and at the finish $10 \times \pi \times 127 \div 12$ or 332 feet per minute.

In ordinary practice laboratories and exchanges rewind film at a rate of from 5 to 8 minutes per thousand feet.

Power Rates Raised on Him

L. W. Mc., Tenn.:

The City Fathers (?) here have just advised me of an increase in my power rates to 15 cents per K. W., refusing to allow me a power rate of 9 cents as heretofore, and am writing you for some information relative to putting in my own power.

I use two machines, one a Power's carbon arc and the other a Simplex Mazda, prefer the Simplex as have only a short throw 71' and a picture 9 x 12.

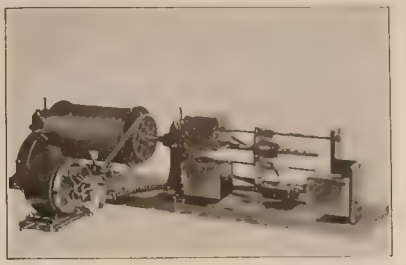
I have quotations from the Cushman power plant and also Delco, and would like your confidential opinion as to the merits of both; the Cushman is a good deal cheaper than the other one, but didn't know about fuel cost and up-keep.

If I should put in my own plant, would it be better to put the Mazda equipment on my Power's using D C instead of the A C Compensarc (I now have on the Simplex), or will either plant have sufficient power to carry the carbon arc?

I am in a small town and only run four and five nights a week, and my operating room has already cost me around $1,000, but don't mind the expense if I can get results, and that's all I am selling.

Reply:

We believe you would get much better results by installing a complete gas engine driven plant of sufficient capacity to handle both projectors when the latter are using a Mazda lamp source.



As to the respective merits of the two makes of generators mentioned in your letter we do not wish to commit ourselves. There is however another set which you will find advertised in the News, and which is designed especially for motion picture work. The latter is obtainable in any capacity up to 10 kw.

If you put in your own plant we would advise you to convert your Simplex equipment so as to use Mazda lamps, as the wattage consumed would be considerably less than in the case of carbon arc machines.

3-D Amount of Light in Relation to Current.

The flame arc shows a rapid increase in actinic light with increased current. In fact the flame arc with doubling of the current at the same arc voltage increases its photographic effect not twice but three or four times. This makes it profitable to use the flame arcs at high amperages of 15 25 to 35 amperes. In some cases much higher amperages have been used. The effect of amperage on amount of actinic light is shown in Fig. 6 which also shows the advantage in effect that the flame arc has over the enclosed ordinary arc. These sets of curves in Fig 6 were obtained with single arcs on 110 volt circuit, but with the new type of flame arc having two arcs in series on 100 volts the efficiency of the flame lamps is often increased from 40 to 60 per cent. over that of a converted lamp with a single flame arc on 110 volts. The enclosed arc lamp soon reaches a limit of current because of the dangers to globe melting down, or if a very large globe is used then the amount of air at the start decreases the initial efficiency, which is very important in motion picture work because the actual scenes are short and usually last from ten seconds to a minute or two. On a 220 volt circuit, it is now customary to use 2 or 4 flame arcs in series, and this compares favorably with the 220 volts enclosed arc lamps under average conditions.

From a series of tests of a direct current flame arc lamp, I have deduced the following approximate equation for photographic efficiency as regards effect on solio paper for a single direct current flame arc. C is current and V is arc voltage within moderate limits (40 to 80).

Photographic efficiency $= KC^{.4} (V-23)$

On alternating current efficiency increases as $C^{1.6}$

The flame arc also increases in candlepower more rapidly than the current, but this phase of the matter does not need to be enlarged upon here. The color of light increases toward the short wave lengths faster than the long wave lengths with increase in current. With increase in current the blue light increases more than the 3-E—Amount of Light in Relation to Arc Voltage.

We will very briefly consider the relation of photographic effect on solio paper to arc voltage (see Fig. 4), keeping the current constant. The following results were obtained by using a 330-volt direct current circuit with the trim of a 10 mm. x 305 mm. lower flame positive and a 12½ x 305 mm. upper (½ x 12') cored enclosed arc standard negative upper. The data shows the great advantage of using two flame arcs in series on 110 volts. The working equations of the data can be reduced to the following approximate, empirical formulas:

1st from 0 to 60 arc volts at 25 amperes.

Photographic power $= 5.1\ V - 78 - .044\ V^2$.

From 60 to 150 arc volts at 25A.

Photographic power $= 1.47\ V - .0045V^2$.

Analysis of the above table shows that the use of two flame arc in series is very efficient. This also has other advantages, namely, that the power factor can be raised on A. C. from about .90 with a single arc to even .95 for the twin arcs. Also the volt ampere characteristic is materially improved so that as much as nearly 90 per cent of the line power taken can be thrown into the flame arcs even to multiple circuits of 110 volts with satisfactory steadiness.

Relation to Number and Position of Arc.

With two flame arcs in series on 110 volts, steady operation can be secured with 45 volts at each arc or with 90 volts of the 110 line volts in the light producing arcs. With a single flame arc on 110 volts about 60 volts are used in the arc, so that the twin arcs have about 50 per cent. better power utilization over the single arc. Also the power factor and arc stability are improved by operating two or three flame arcs in series on 110 volts.

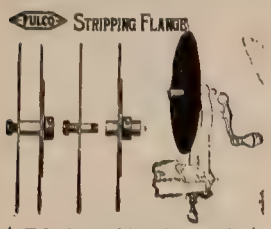
Here's a New Angle on the Government Tax



"Strange, as it may seem," says Mr. E. S. Bowman of the Automaticket System, 1780 Broadway, New York, "there is something in connection with the Government tax, which appears to have been entirely overlooked by everyone connected with the Amusement business."

The Automatic Ticket Selling & Cash Register Company print billions of tickets yearly, yet it was only a few days ago that they learned there can be no such thing as a one dollar admission ticket, including the tax.

It appears that one of their customers ordered tickets printed, Admission 90c, Tax 10c, Total $1.00, and he was very promptly advised by a Government Inspector that the public was being overcharged one cent, as the tax should be 9c, on a 90c ticket.

This Inspector said the Government would not accept the extra cent which was shown as part of the 10c tax. The proprietor could not keep his price at $1.00 by charging 91c, as the tax would then be 10c, and the total admission $1.01.

The final result was that he charged $1.00 and added the tax, so the Government has no kick coming, and neither has he.

What the Society of Motion Picture Engineers Is and What It Has Done

A. F. Victor, Secretary, Outlines the Aims and Work of the Society and Gives Summary of All Papers

STANDARDIZATION is the keystone of every large industry—the factor which causes the arch to cohere and stand splendidly balanced. In July, 1916, a group of earnest pioneers and creative workers in the motion picture industry, met in Washington and formed the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. These men were close to the heart of the Industry and they realized the many separate factions which were struggling to work successfuly together intelligent standardization was the magic key needed to perfect co-operation, and these men, accustomed as they were to give the best of themselves for the development of their industry, set modestly to work on their self-appointed task. Twice each year they have foregathered in some appointed city, giving generously of their time and money to the general advancement of the working conditions of the motion picture industry.

This group of men is made up of specialists in various branches of the industry and at each meeting some problem has been presented by the man whose knowledge of its requirements was expert.

An instance of the Society's work in standardization will serve to illustrate.

At the meeting in Chicago, July 16, 1917, a standard camera frame line was adopted. Prior to this there were as many varying frame lines as there were types of cameras. The confusion caused by variance was considerable. In productions where the work was done by several cameras, projected scenes shifted up and down in the most disturbing manner. Today every person actively connected with the industry knows that the standardization frame line lies midway between two perforations.

At each meeting of the Society a number of papers have been read on various problems and unusual achievements in the industry. These papers represent an incalculable wealth of detailed technical information of vital import to everyone connected with the motion picture field. Each paper represents the crystalized experience and research work of a master in his line. The Society has had printed duplicate copies in quantity of each of these papers and has already supplied hundreds of copies to interested inquirers.

Undoubtedly there are hundreds more interested persons in the industry, who would eagerly avail themselves of this splendid information if they knew of its existence. For their benefit the following list of subject material is submitted;

New Motiograph Booklet Out

The Enterprise Optical Company has recently sent us one of the first copies of its new folder on the Motiograph De Luxe. The booklet is somewhat out of the ordinary in that the selling arguments are given in the form of letters from satisfied users throughout the country. A cover design of high quality makes the pamphlet especially attractive.

The Organ in Motion Picture Theatres

THERE is no necessity to dwell upon the fact that the organ has attained a position of such importance in the motion picture theatre that it can justly be considered the nearest competitor in replacing orchestra organizations.

The above statement can be applied only to the instrument itself. Through legitimate competition organ manufacturers have been able to complete an instrument which can fully cover all the requirements necessary for appropriate musical accompaniment to pictures. It is useless to say that an organ player is necessary to utilize this wonderful instrument, the organ. We have in the past few years repeatedly said that playing the organ and playing for the movies are two entirely different things. By this, we mean that the best church organ players can prove failures in handling the best instrument when playing for pictures. The editors of this column recently received some literature on this subject, prepared and edited by Mr. Lacey Baker, Mus. B., which we consider the most perfect definition explaining the difference between church organ work and theatre work. For the benefit of all organ players, and in the interest of "Better Music For The Film," we herewith take the liberty of reproducing a few paragraphs from Mr. Baker's booklet which was issued in connection with a collection of music, published by the H. W. Gray Co., New York. Following is an extract from the above pamphlet:

"The accompaniment of a Film should be a musically sustaining undercurrent, always subsidiary. It should provide atmosphere and emotional color, but, under no circumstances, dominate. Cinema playing is not an organ recital, neither is it an occasion for the display of digital dexterity and pedal pyrotechnics. Opportunities for this occur in the unemotional Scenic Pictures, but, even then, the modest player will not egotistically shut off the view.

Just how much organ may be artistically used, must be left to the good taste of the executant, who, if he has a rational outlook, will realize that the Play's the thing, not the organ. A midway course must be steered between the Scylla of too much organ, which is an impertinence on the part of the player, and (which is worse) an annoyance to the audience, and the Charybdis of too little, which is apt to be dull and depressing. As music is the handmaid of the Picture, and not the mistress, the thoughtful player will be very conservative in his use of the power of the instrument, relying on a liberal use of its tonal varieties to avoid drabness. By frequent changes of touch, he will hold the interest of his audience, and not be guilty of the betise of commandeering their attention by force of arms.

If it be thought that I am too insistent in suggesting a conservative accompaniment, I ask such of my colleagues who disagree with me, to visit a neighboring Playhouse and get the audience's viewpoint. After registering on themselves the effect of an aggressively booming organ and mentally noting its irritation, I think they will agree with me that my note of warning is neither superfluous nor ill-timed.

It must not be forgotten that broad effects are called for in the theatre, and much latitude is allowed the performer. Melodies should stand out, frequently doubled (orchestra fashion) and the Pedal treated generally as is the Double Bass, and not glued to the heel of the player. Also it must be remembered that the ecclesiastical, ultra legato school of playing is uneffective for Motion Pictures.

Practically the "theatre touch" is as far removed from the churchly style as is the rectangle from the arabesque. The reasons for this are obvious, but the attainment of the requisite lightness and vivacity (a composite touch, between the legato of the organ and the staccato of the piano) has proved a stumbling block to many excellent organists, who have been unable to free themselves from the conventional shackles of their ingrained ecclesiastical upbringing.

The inherited traditions, and the "touch of linked sweetness, long drawn out," are not valuable assets, but, on the contrary, handicaps which must be ruthlessly eliminated if the church organist expects to make good in the elastic conditions necessarily prevailing in the theatre."

The above reveals facts which if taken into consideration by organ players will undoubtedly further and advance the art of organ playing in the motion picture theatre, and will convert many organists into indispensable factors. The editors respectfully suggest that readers write to the H. W. Gray Co. of New York City, requesting a copy of the complete Bulletin, edited by Mr. Lacey Baker, Mus. B. We are of the opinion that this booklet should be in the hands of every organ player who is striving to not only appropriately accompany pictures, but also establish a reputation for himself which is bound to result in a better financial remuneration.

The Test of a Pipe Organ

The true test of an Organ is not the opening night or the first week or the first month. It is at the end of a year.

Do your steady patrons—the man and his wife and kiddies—who have seen every feature you have shown, like the organ as well as they did the opening night? Has the music grown monotonous—is there a "sameness" to the tonal production? Does the music fit all the situations in pictures?

Have you had trouble finding an organist who knew the playing methods of the instrument?

The Barton Organ stands the Acid Test. The Divided Manual, an exclusive feature, multiplies the musical possibilities of the Organist a hundred fold and provides thousands of new and wondrously beautiful combinations of distinct tonal varieties. Beautiful tone quality, no blare. A great variety of soft melodious solo stops, combined with the grandeur of a Cathedral Organ and a Symphony Orchestra. Standard Playing methods familiar to every organ scholar; no special training necessary—thousands of organists to choose from.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Uneasy Feet"
(Special Pictures Corporation—1400 Feet)

A GENUINE novelty in short subjects is released by Special Pictures Corporation under the Comedyart brand. Bearing the title of "Uneasy Feet" it comes to the screen sans titles, sans any part of the players anatomies except their nether limbs. And being such a novelty it behooves every exhibitor to book it if for no other reason than it brings something brand new in comedy lines. The piece is such a little surprise party that it takes the observer some time to react to the comedy points. But once he does wake up—he becomes genuinely amused. The feet of the principals have "movements all their own" and so easily told is the merry plot that truly not a caption is needed. One doesn't realize how emotional a leg can be until one sees "Uneasy Feet." It shows it has other purposes than to fill a sock or stocking (Don't forget the well filled stocking).

Whoever is propelling her tootsies down the street sees a chance to start a flirtation. We would call her a teaser because she walks to make him catch up with her then speeds it up when she is in danger of being overtaken. A street car causes him to lose her temporarily and the play of his feet here is surely laughable. The wily flapper waits for him on the opposite side and when they are together a park bench is sought. And here is occasion for more fun. All kinds of people sit down between them judging from their feet. Then. . . . comes the emotional work. Closer and closer they draw (well they can't get any closer).

Judging from what is seen, the girl belongs to the "chicken" variety. What she displays would restore the sight of a blind man. Shimmering hose, a pretty pose and the beaux would be shouting "Ahs and Ohs!" The simplicity of the thing makes one wonder why it has never been thought of before. But because it is a clever novelty it should not be attempted too often. Here is something entirely different and by reason of this fact it will probably be copied to death. Charlie Chaplin doesn't need the idea because his feet attract the gaze anyway. Hats off to the Special people in supplying a brand new kind of slapstick comedy. Carrying no captions it presents direct action with a vengeance. The picture brings out a point not generally realized—that feet are really funny when viewed by themselves.

"A Lightweight Lover"
(Sunshine Comedy—Two Reels—Fox)

OF all the slapstick comedies which have come from the Sunshine lots the past few months, "A Lightweight Lover" takes the cake for presenting a volume of screamingly funny business. Hampton Del Ruth has used his imagination and several unique property effects, the result of which makes a slapstick de luxe Consider a train of sleeping cars (studio cars) and filled with grotesque characters and the girls (don't forget the girls) and tricks being played by the principal comedians. The big bully of a roughneck is locked in the men's retiring room and the actor who carries the brunt of the comedy turns on the hose. The former nearly drowns before he chases the curious freak off the train. And he picks up the grip belonging to the champion lightweight. A delegation of fight fans are waiting for him and there is no other course to follow but to keep up the identity.

Ridiculously funny scenes attend his training activities, but even these are eclipsed in comical values when the big fight is staged. Toughs, freaks, in fact all types of human beings are present. A monkey is even present in the capacity of bell-ringer and sponge-thrower. The gong sounds and the battle begins. And it is some burlesque with the laughs evenly distributed to the contestants and the onlookers. New tricks are revealed at every turn some of which are even funnier than what appear in Chaplin's fight in "The Champion." Unadulterated tomfoolery we would call it. This comedy shows careful rehearsal because the action develops spontaneously. This being the case the laughter is easily aroused.

"Jiggs in Society"
(Bringing Up Father Series—Christie—Pathe)

THE first of the "Bringing Up Father" series of cartoons as visualized from George McManus' famous cartoons is presented in "Jiggs in Society" starring Johnny Ray. Judging it from the reception given it by the Strand audience in New York, on a Sunday afternoon, the piece is neither a knockout nor a failure. It may be that the spectators are so familiar with Mr. McManus' work that it occasioned no surprise for them—and surprise is half the success of a comedy because it brings the unexpected. It is the children who cry for the funny pages on a Sunday morning (a fact which is brought out in this very picture) and the audience consisting mostly of grown-ups was unable to show juvenile joy.

Perhaps greater enthusiasm might have been shown had the comedy started off on a strictly slapstick basis instead of presenting it with a prologue and epilogue showing some kiddies asking their father for the funny sheet and turning to the McManus cartoon. This treatment naturally discounted the intermediate high jinks to some extent. The comedy proper is slapstick of the knockabout class, the kind that is seen in "bur-ley-q-u-e." Jiggs will smoke his clay pipe and blow the fumes all over the place.

The Strand remained in an attitude of watchful waiting until he started to show who is boss While his family holds a reception in the drawing room, father is up stairs playing cards with his old cronies. The police stage a raid and the roughhouse starts. One sees fistic battles, fights with clubs, trousers pulled off, ceilings coming down and a slap-bang everywhere. Most of which misses fire because the action is labored and the antics uninspired. Johnny Ray certainly looks like Father and is a capable low comedian, but his incidents should come to him—he shouldn't go after them. Such results don't make for spontaneity.—LAURENCE REID

"Hula Hula Town"
(Mutt and Jeff Comedy—One Reel—Fox)

OUR two young friends are met in darkest Africa in this latest comedy, which is not as humorous as many of their previous adventures. A black African king desires two white men to marry his two daughters and as Mutt and Jeff are touring in the neighboring vicinity, they are elected to be the victims. They finally escape the osculations of the dusky maidens as well as the cannabalistic cooking stove, through the valor of little Mutt, who disguises himself and punishes the entire tribe.

A great part of the reel is taken up with an exaggerated shimmy dance, perpetrated by a great many black figures to celebrate the goulash a la Jeff, which they are soon to enjoy. This continues too long and ceases to amuse after the first minute. Also the love making inflicted on Mutt has little comedy in it. It is not suggestive—it is merely vulgar, and there won't be a ripple of laughter when it is shown. The best thing in it is the dice rolling contortions of the blacks. This will get some real, genuine laughs.

"Squeaks and Squawks"
(Vitagraph—Slap Stick Comedy)

THIS looks to be much like a rewrite of "The Grocery Clerk" and "The Garage" with much business from both these comedies changed just enough to say it is different and with little that is new in evidence.

We saw it at the Rivoli and didn't notice any great amount of hilarity during it's projection. It rates as an average production of it's kind and will go over where slap stick is popular.—J. S. DICKERSON

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to December 6, 1919.

"THE WOMAN IN ROOM 13"
(Goldwyn)

Pauline Frederick Has Worthy Subject in Mystery Melodrama

IT is unfortunate that such a finished actress as Pauline Frederick has been allowed to bury her talents so long in mediocre material, most of which has carried little dramatic and entertainment value. It has taken one of those "straight-from-the-shoulder" mystery melodramas to reveal the star at her best, and so inspired is her performance that Goldwyn should continue to place her in subjects of the calibre of "The Woman in Room 13." Here is one case where a successful play makes a successful picture, because it is dependent upon physical action instead of dialogue. But it carries other elements that are adaptable for the screen.

Unfolding a murder mystery, it presents a deal of suspensive interest which accumulates from the opening flash and culminates in a climax of undeniable dramatic strength. While much of the action is arbitrary and certain coincidences of a theatrical nature occur, nevertheless one can put it down as a story which moves swiftly amid a panorama of highly-colored and well-composed scenes and provides all the thrills that are expected in a work of this kind. The picture is based upon the eternal triangle and the fact that it uncovers some new twists will overcome its obviousness.

The action in the courtroom scene is rather faulty, since a genuine jury would realize that the evidence doesn't hold water. They could ask for the dictagraph and discover that the woman's voice isn't that of the heroine's. Overlooking the logic here the fact remains that the picture is thoroughly absorbing. Mr. Barker's direction is entirely praiseworthy, allowing for two "slip-ups"—the theatrical courtroom scene and the heroic pose of the husband. John Bowers doesn't exact much sympathy in this part because it is overdrawn. Charles Clary gives his usual finished performance as the detective, while Robert McKim as the false friend again reveals why he is called the best villain on the screen.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A pictorial version of the successful melodrama, "The Woman in Room 13," by Max Marcin and Samuel Shipman, is Pauline Frederick's latest Goldwyn photoplay. The offering will come to the ———— theatre the week of ————. Described by the critics of the New York press as a baffling murder mystery, there is no question that it offers excellent screen material. It is the first time that the star has ever appeared in a work of this character and she takes the opportunity to present her emotional talents at their fullest development.

In "The Woman in Room 13" Miss Frederick portrays a disillusioned woman—a woman whose honor means everything and whose husband means more than her honor. She is confronted with powerful dramatic situations and only an actress of Miss Frederick's ability could cope with them. The question which concerns every patron who sees the picture is, Who was the woman in room 13? The dragnet is thrown out by the police. And the action grips as it builds to an electrifying climax. Miss Frederick is supported by a cast of exceptional talent—a cast that includes the leading villain of the screen, Robert McKim, Charles Clary and Marguerite Snow. Frank Lloyd has directed the picture with painstaking care, bringing out the incident in a manner which is thoroughly absorbing.

PROGRAM READER

A muffled shot rang out from Dick Turner's apartment! The report was heard by men at the dictaphone on the floor below. A rush was made to the rooms above where Paul Ramsey was found, smoking gun in hand. There lay the body of Turner, but where was the woman? The husband thought he knew and had taken his revenge. The former husband thought he knew—and uttered his suspicion. All were wrong. The question is who was the woman in room 13 when Turner was shot? This you must find out for yourself when you visit the ———— theatre next ———— and see Pauline Frederick in one of the most baffling mystery plays ever shown on the screen, "The Woman in Room 13." It offers the star a wide range for the display of her emotional talents. It teems with incident and you watch the action with anticipation and suspense

SUGGESTIONS

Treat this picture as a baffling murder mystery—one which simply defies solution Bill it as an adaptation of the successful stage play which kept New York completely fascinated. Bring out that it is the work of Max Marcin and Samuel Shipman, two of the most skilful playwrights of the day. Bring out that the star is presented for the first time in a stirring melodrama and that she rises to the occasion with all of her emotional skill Treat your copy so that the element of mystery is emphasized. You can work up quite a few novel stunts to get this picture across. Treasers and catch lines can be treated in a mystifying manner and play upon the title in all your copy. Play up the fact that a dictagraph is used to help solve the crime. Play up the big moments in the picture

"THE HEART OF A CHILD"
(Nazimova-Metro)

Nazimova's Art Will Carry This Picture By

NAZIMOVA'S art is of such an exceptionally high standard that she deserves and should have the best material available. This was given her in "Revelation," "Out of the Fog," and "The Red Lantern." Probably, because her managers are desirous of showing how versatile she is—how many moods she is capable of expressing, they have lately cast her in plays which are insufficient for her rare pantomime. "The Heart of a Child" is satisfactory from the standpoint of presenting her in a role entirely different. She takes care of herself alright. She could take care of herself in the weakest photoplay ever written and make it score through her histrionic gifts.

But that is not the question. Her following (an immense one, by the way) expects to see this wonderful actress in a wonderful photoplay something which is as vital and vivid as herself. "The Heart of a Child" gives her fine opportunities, but aside from the acting it is obvious and old-fashioned of theme and episodic and brittle in construction. In fact it presents a story which has grown considerably frayed around the edges so often has it been done on the screen. What is it? Nothing else but the innocent girl of the slums (London this time), who rises above her environment and who by her innate goodness maintains her honor, overcomes the obstacles in her path, and marries the wealthy nobleman. In the working out of this story the action is made quite choppy because of incidental by-play. And such treatment doesn't help to make it ring true There is humor enough in the subject without the director resorting to a slapstick scene concerning a freak character and an antiquated auto mobile. A little editing here and there would improve the continuity The atmosphere is well suggested and the other players are good selections, with the exception of Victor Potel, who doesn't fit as a cockney. Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Nazimova, who is considered by many the screen's greatest actress, comes to the ———— theatre beginning ———— in her latest triumph entitled "The Heart of a Child," which is an adaptation of Frank Danby's celebrated novel of the same name. If this picture showed no other purpose than to prove how versatile Nazimova is then its production has not been in vain. But, acting aside, the offering contains a theme and character drawing that are highly interesting The romance is a prominent factor and other elements which figure are pathos, sympathy and heart appeal.

The star appears as a cockney girl of the London slums who is forced to face the world with no other means of protection than her innate goodness, and her child's heart. Her life goes far from the tenement district—into the theatre, into the world of fashionable shops and smart houses—but her heart runs true to its original and irresistible simplicity. Love comes to her of course and because she has faith in herself and in mankind—it comes with all its blessing. Nazimova is utterly different again in this role, but at the same time she gives a highly artistic performance. Her support includes Charles Bryant, Claire Du Brey and Joseph Kilgour. Ray Smallwood's direction is entirely praiseworthy.

PROGRAM READER

Once more Nazimova justifies her right to be acclaimed the world's greatest actress by her remarkable performance in her latest picture, "The Heart of a Child." We have no fear that she will be able to carry the audience of the ———— fairly out of itself by the sheer power of her emotional depths and the finish of her portrayal. "The Heart of a Child," a screen version of Frank Danby's novel of the same name, will come to the ———— next ———— and our patrons will not only see some wonderful acting, but will be interested in the abundant moving moments of the story itself—a story which portrays a young girl's struggle to lift herself above her environment. Nazimova is assisted by players of recognized ability. The picture has been given an appropriate production.

SUGGESTIONS

The very name of Nazimova as the star of a picture is sufficient to draw patronage. But in this case the exhibitor must make known the fact that the star appears in an entirely different role. Build up your copy along this line—that Nazimova always does something different from her previous pictures. Bill the feature as a heart-interest story about a girl of the London slums. Use stills of the scenes and run teasers of the star. Exploit the offering as Nazimova' latest triumph, and mention the leading players of her support. Door-knob hangers carrying the brief announcement that Nazimova is coming will be sufficient to attract patronage Use a letter campaign. Use cards for store windows calling attention to the fact that "one way to reach the heart of a child is to go down the street to the ———— theatre and see Nazimova."

CATCH LINES

The story of a girl who triumphed above her environment. See the greatest star, Nazimova, in her finest play, "The Heart of a Child"

A stirring picture, with many a smile and a few tears thrown in for good measure See Nazimova in "The Heart of a Child." You will go away amazed at this actress' versatility.

"THE WOMAN AND THE PUPPET"
(Goldwyn)

Single Track Idea Overwhelmed with Romance

HERE is a single-track story which doesn't hit the bull's eye, because it is dominated by one line of action expressed by one outstanding character. The subject brings to mind the idea that it was selected for only one purpose—to serve as a vehicle for the star's personality. Miss Farrar's tempestuous methods are entirely suitable here because she is cast as one of those fiery cigarette girls of Spain. The weak action revolves around her efforts to ensnare the male of the species by teasing him.

Senor, the Capitan, is a conceited fellow, made so by the adulation of less desirous senoritas, and when he finds one who leads him a chase he becomes enraptured. So she toys with him—vamps him to speak plain English, but it takes her five reels to rouse the cave-man in him. When he gives her three healthy slaps on the face (one can almost hear them, they carry so much force) then she stops her teasing game and gives up her unkissed lips. Reginald Barker has eliminated the plot shortcomings to some extent by supplying exceptionally good details and atmosphere and has attempted to keep it moving. His efforts are fruitless here because they add a deal of unimportant action.

The "Puppet" of the title might just as well be plural because heroine keeps quite a number dangling at the end of her string. The main conflict, however, is between the aristocratic sweetheart and the cigarette girl and it is presented with considerable conversation. It isn't a healthy sight to see women fight for a man's affection. Lou Tellegen, as the masculine prize, is considerably heroic. A romantic actor, he seemed to think that a uniform must cover up his charm and naturalness. And why does he make love with his best friend continually dogging his footsteps? It's a lavish production and artistic in every way. The star and the atmosphere will doubtless carry it by.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Woman and the Puppet," adapted from the stage success by the celebrated French authors, Piere Louys and Pierre Frandaie, is Geraldine Farrar's latest Goldwyn picture. The offering will be shown at the ———— theatre beginning ———. Miss Farrar has a type of story here similar to "Carmen" since it portrays Spanish life. She plays the part of Concha, a beautiful cigarette girl. A rich man bribes her mother to use the girl as a toy for his whims, but she uses her own initiative and leaves her home to dance in a wharf cafe. When the wealthy suitor discovers her it is to find her dancing for some Englishmen. Consequently Don Mateo can no longer believe her to be a virtuous maiden who repulsed his advances.

She convinces him that his suspicion is wrong and unwarranted. Jealousies, quarrels and certain whimsicalities carry the lovers through a series of clashes until a real undertanding is reached. The picture presents a deal of absorbing incident which is colored to fit the locale and the characterization. The action moves with a power and swiftness and builds to dramatic climaxes. This picture was written by J. G. Hawks, an author of considerable experience in the picture world. Reginald Barker directed the picture in his customary skilful manner. Miss Farrar's vital and vibrant personality fits the story to a dot and she is supported by Lou Tellegen, Bertram Grassby, Marcey Harlam and others.

PROGRAM READER

No star is quite the equal of Geraldine Farrar in Spanish roles. Since she possesses a dynamic personality it is a delight to witness her in such a characterization. All of those who have had the pleasure of seeing her in the opera "Carmen," and the picture version of this colorful work will testify to the fact that Miss Farrar is supreme when it comes to enacting the passionate heroines of Spain. The star will appear at the ———— in the near future in "The Woman and the Puppet," a story similar to "Carmen." It is an absorbing picture—one full of color and life and offers Miss Farrar the opportunity to again display her vital personality. Her husband, Lou Tellegen, plays opposite and gives a finished performance. The fact that Reginald Barker is the director is sufficient proof of its excellence.

SUGGESTIONS

Since this picture is similar to "Carmen" it would be advisable to concentrate upon that angle. Be sure to tell your patrons that the star is in a class by herself in the delineation of Spanish roles. Announce that she is the best Carmen who ever appeared in this famous opera. Tell that the picture is a Reginald Barker production. The fact that he is one of the leading directors is well known to your patrons. So mention that "The Woman and the Puppet" is a Barker production. Dress your lobby with plenty of atmosphere and stage a prologue in typical Spanish style. Try to get some good singer who can sing in Spanish. Arrange your music to fit the story. Use a letter campaign here. Miss Farrar is a prime favorite everywhere and she has a following quite apart from picture audiences. So get in touch with patrons who are not among your regular picturegoers. Play up the fact that Pierre Louys, one of the authors, is responsible for the big stage production, "Aphrodite."

"THE MOTHER OF HIS CHILDREN"
(Fox)

Triangle Drama Well Produced and Well Acted

EVERYBODY in "The Mother of His Children" moves in the very highest society. It is a society drama of Paris and the star, Gladys Brockwell, is no less than the Princess Yve, an Oriental living in Paris.

The story is of the triangle variety. Richard Arnold is an American sculptor who finds himself in love with the princess, although he worships his wife in America, who has inspired his statue, "The Mother of His Children." Princess Yve reciprocates and we are looking for some rather unusual clearing up of the problem, when the wife dies on shipboard en route to Paris, possibly of seasickness. That is all there is to the story except that the hero is falsely accused of a murder and finally cleared.

The five reels are full of good exteriors, and a fight in the moonlight, when we see only silhouettes, is very well done. The change in the character of the princess, from that of a languid and selfish beauty, to an ideal inspired, womanly woman is logically worked out. Burning incense, long cigarettes and Turkish attendants help Gladys Brockwell to be languid and Oriental.

No fault need be found with any of the cast, and the star herself, given a part that seems to suit her better than her last picture, does some creditable work, and is not over emotional despite the temptation. The production details and the consistent good acting will make this conventional story a good average picture. It will shock no one and if your patrons like high society pictures, they will go away pleased. Length, 5 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Princes Yve ..... Gladys Brockwell
Richard Arnold ..... William Scott
Count Joachim Tolstoff ..... Frank Lehgh
Hadji ..... Nigel de Brulher
Beatrice Arnold ..... Golda Madden
Helen ..... Nancy Caswell
Bobbie ..... Jean Eaton

Story by Barbara Le Marr Decly. Scenario by Charles Wilson. Directed by Edward J. Le Saint.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

On ————, at the ———— theatre, William Fox will present "The Mother of His Children," a five part drama of society life in Paris. Gladys Brockwell, well remembered from her latest pictures, "The Flames of the Flesh," and "The Devil's Riddle," is the star of this thrilling production.

The story is laid in Paris, and Miss Brockwell plays the part of Princess Yve, an Oriental princess visiting Paris. Richard Arnold, played by William Scott, is an American sculptor, whose statue "The Mother of His Children" is awarded the first prize at the exhibition. Arnold meets the beautiful princess and becomes infatuated. Instinctively he seeks to protect himself against her wiles by sending for his wife in America. But his beautiful wife dies on shipboard, and the two motherless children are brought to Arnold's apartment in Paris by an agent of the steamship line. But Arnold is not home—he has been falsely imprisoned, charged with murder, and the princess takes charge of the little ones.

The gradual change of the character of the princess is well depicted by the star. She becomes at last a woman with ideals, unselfish, and womanly. Her languid, ambitionless, pleasure loving self disappears and when Arnold is released, he finds a different woman waiting for him.

The picture will remain at the ———— for ———— days.

PROGRAM READER

"The Mother of His Children," a five part drama, laid in Paris, that romantic city full of globe trotters from every corner of the earth, is the attraction at this theatre on ———. Two of the globe trotters meet. One is an Oriental princess, played by Gladys Brockwell, and the other is an American sculptor, in search of fame in the art center of the world. Their romance will interest you, and the truthful picturization of Parisian life, will more than thrill you. The princess loses some of her Oriental traits of selfishness, pleasure-loving, and impersonuess, and becomes an ideal-inspired, womanly woman. It is a production of careful character analysis, clothed in a romance of thrills and beauty.

SUGGESTIONS

Emphasize most of all the setting of this picture and the star. Paint a vivid picture of Parisian life in your copy to attract the attention of your patrons. Stills showing the Oriental costume of the star and decorations of the room are of more value than a mere close up. If you want a teaser campaign use the slogan—"Should he be true to the woman he loved, or the woman he worshiped?" Mention Gladys Brockwell's latest pictures, "Flames of the Flesh" and "The Devil's Riddle," and state that in this production she essays an entirely different role. Dress an attendant in the manner of the slave in the picture and have him march in front of your theatre. Use many catch lines.

CATCH LINES

CATCH LINES

A picture of the warm-blooded people of sunny Spain—a picture of the hot passions of a people who express life to the fullest. That is "The Woman and the Puppet," starring Geraldine Farrar.

See Geraldine Farrar, the magnetic star, in "The Woman and the Puppet," a romance of Spain. It is the star's best picture since "Carmen."

"THE DEVIL'S PASS KEY"
(Universal)

Stroheim Has Another Big Photoplay Here

ERICH VON STROHEIM had a reputation to uphold after his fine achievement, "Blind Husbands," and he has certainly maintained it with "The Devil's Pass Key." This picture which he adapted and directed from a story in which he collaborated with Baroness de Meyer, soars to the same big dimensions and shows that his art is no mere flash in the pan. One might say that it is "Blind Husbands" transferred to a Parisian setting because it carries the same idea, although worked out differently. While it doesn't present the same simplicity, the lofty spiritual note, still this version of the eternal triangle has a quality —a truthfulness which establish it as one of the finest contributions to the screen.

The picture is complicated because of its array of characters and the situations in which they move, yet the fundamental idea is clearly established. Once the introductory details are over, the play sweeps ahead with a spontaneity and power that will not be denied. The climax is a revelation in dramatic strength and is presented in a scene of intense action, Mr. Stroheim believes in novelty and he has given several surprising twists to the theme. But his direction is also a novelty because it is so painstaking from every angle. He believes that no story can be properly presented unless it is given the correct atmosphere. And this ingredient is also a revelation.

The most insignificant detail is brought out in a realistic manner. Nothing is forgotten. And he has seen to it that the story is perfectly interpreted by players who are adaptable to their roles. Even the extras are genuine types and they are guided in natural movements. Outstanding performances are presented by Maude George, Clyde Fillmore, who reflects Stroheim's coaching so identical are his mannerisms, Sam De Grasse and Una Trevelyn. The picture is sumptiously mounted and not one bit overdone. If shortened a reel it would make for a more compact continuity.—Length, 8 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Erich von Stroheim, who will be remembered for his fine achievement, "Blind Husbands," is responsible for a work of similar calibre in "The Devil's Pass Key," which comes to the ———— theatre beginning ————. There is no question that Mr. Stroheim is an artist. He paints on a big canvas with a brush that dips into life. As "Blind Husbands" was a tale of the eternal triangle enacted against an Alpine setting so "The Devil's Pass Key" is an identical story laid against a Parisian background. And it is every bit as dramatic, vital, vivid and truthful. The picture is peopled with characters which are genuine. The entangling threads of conflict bring them together in scenes which are intense with action and suspense. Mr. Stroheim, in collaboration with Baroness de Meyer has conceived a story which builds surely and vividly to its tremendous climax. The scenario and direction he has attended to himself. His art is displayed in his ability to arrange his scenes compactly, and his atmosphere entitles him to rank as one of the leading directors of motion pictures. A faithfulness to detail is apparent in every scene. The players are ideal selections for their various roles and all give outstanding performances.

PROGRAM READER

Erich von Stroheim's wonderful picture, "The Devil's Pass Key," will appear at the ———— theatre in the near future—a picture which the management considers one of the finest achievements of the screen. All those who saw "Blind Husbands" will remember its tremendous drama. "The Devil's Pass Key" is a photoplay that carries the same sweep and intensity. The story presents the eternal triangle with several new and surprising twists. One is truly transported so tense are the situations, so moving the play of incident. A cast has been chosen to interpret the drama that is ideal in every particular. Each player is a perfect type and each gives a finished performance. "The Devil's Pass Key" is the big dramatic treat of the season. Watch for further announcements

SUGGESTIONS

A Stroheim picture should be exploited with full value placed upon this director's name. You can bill this feature as another "Blind Husbands" and which is conceived on the same lavish scale. Feature the title. It is a winner and teasers and throwaways with proper catch lines incorporated will arouse interest. But play up Stroheim for all you are worth. You can't go wrong. His "Blind Husbands" is remembered. Tell that "The Devil's Pass Key" is written and directed by the man responsible for the other. Feature it as a powerful drama based upon the eternal triangle. Mention the players and use stills of them and the big scenes of the play. The picture is entitled to big exploitation in every way.

CATCH LINES

See Erich von Stroheim's wonder drama, "The Devil's Pass Key," a picture comparable to "Blind Husbands."

"ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE"
(Metro)

Old Time Crook Play as Thrilling as Ever

METRO has lost little of the gripping suspense or thrilling action of this dean of crook plays. The picture is carefully produced and good in detail. While Bert Lytell is the star, it is not a one-man production. His supports are well cast, and keep the acting up to the standard set by the star, who does good work throughout, but especially as the convict in the opening reels.

It was the original and tense climatic situation that helped to give this play a year's run on Broadway some years ago. A little girl is locked in a safe. There is no combination, and to open it with his sand-papered fingers, Lee Randall must reveal his identity as the long sought for criminal, Jimmy Valentine. While this scene in the picture is strong enough to make any audience lean forward in their seats, it seems as if the producer could have made even more of this high spot. The sudden change of character of the man-hounding detective, which is about the only thing in the story which doesn't quite satisfy, is skipped over very quickly in the picture.

The feature opens with some splendid examples of photography. Details of production are so perfect that they force themselves upon our attention. But in the prison scenes of eight or ten years ago, in the days of striped-clothes convicts and brutal wardens, the ladies wear rather modern fashions. But for the ladies' sake we forgive this little anachronism.

The picture has been produced and acted in such an excellent fashion, that you can be proud to bring back "Jimmy" once more to your patrons It ought to bring a better-than-average return anywhere. -Length 6 reels —Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the best known and most gripping "crook" plays, "Alias Jimmy Valentine," has been picturized by Maxwell Karger and will be seen at the ———— theatre on ————. Bert Lytell is the star of this well remembered stage play, which scored a great hit on Broadway when first produced.

Jimmy Valentine is a prisoner at Sing Sing, convicted of safebreaking. Although guilty he persists in claiming his innocence, and when his pardon is obtained, he actually does "go straight," influenced by the beautiful girl who has helped him obtain his freedom. He obtains a position in a bank, and for three years works diligently and is promoted. Then, when he is engaged to be married, Doyle, the detective, follows him, having obtained evidence that will convict Valentine. But Jimmy has changed his name, and has managed to establish a complete alibi Doyle is about to leave, almost convinced that he is wrong, when word comes that a little girl has been locked in the bank safe. No one knows the combination Then, although Doyle is standing near, and Jimmy knows that he is convicting himself, he sandpapers his fingers, and with his old time skill that made him the master safe cracksman of America, he opens the vault.

It ends happily, of course, but only after the same thrilling climax that made the stage play long remembered by all who saw it.

PROGRAM READER

One great effect of the movies is the picturization of good plays. With the screen a thrilling drama can never die. There are occasional stage revivals. "Alias Jimmy Valentine," the original "Crook" play, has found its way to the silver sheet as a Metro production, and will be presented at this theatre on ————. Bert Lytell is the star and plays the title role of Jimmy Valentine, a name which was on everyone's tongue when the play was running on Broadway. This picture has a climax that will make the most hardened thrill-proof spectator wonder when he has ever seen anything to equal it. It will have a run on ———— days at this theatre.

SUGGESTIONS

A play like this is a better thing to boost than the star, even one as popular as Bert Lytell. Don't neglect him of course, and together with stills from the high spots in the play, show a photograph of the star in your lobby. Mention also that Paul Armstrong built up this play from a short story of O. Henry. Tells of its year's run on Broadway. See what you can do to re-create the interest in the popular song "Alias Jimmy Valentine." A spotlight and a darkened stage, with a soloist dressed as a burglar, singing this song before you run the picture, would be very effective. If you are in a city where there is a safe manufacturing company, you can arrange a tie up. They might offer a prize for anyone who can open their safes. Try to awaken interest in the old question, "does birth or environment make criminals?" Try to get some prominent citizen to write to the local paper on past or prospective prison reform. In your copy boost the story as the first and best "crook" play ever written.

STRONGER THAN DEATH (SCREEN CLASSIC-METRO) NAZIMOVA (JAN. 18).....JAN. 24
"Nazimova's rare art capitalizes again."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A remarkable picture with a good star. Story really does not fit her in many ways, although the name of the star was enough to draw the business. Action dragged in many places. Nazimova should have a better background for her talent. Average business two days." "Played this one for one week to extra big business every day. It is a good picture."

STRONGEST, THE (FOX) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 21

Photography and settings extra good, and too much cannot be said in favor of direction. Business not up to standard due to name of production, although business increased throughout week." TREE OF KNOWLEDGE, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) ROBERT WARWICK (JAN. 11).....JAN. 24
"Kathryn Williams runs away with the show."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Played this picture for one week to better than average business. The cast, including Kathlyn Williams and Wonda Hawley, are strong factors in getting the picture over, even though Warwick's acting is above his usual picture standard. The story, while not unusual is carried along by the stars and satisfied my patrons. Photography, direction and settings are all that can be desired." "An average feature to average business three days."

"Sure fire winner with any audience."—M. P. News.

Fiction Works Suited To The Screen

Special Reviews Weekly

The Pagan
By Gordon Arthur Smith

Character of Story: Romance.
Theme: Liberty.
Characters: Maxime Taillandy; Marthe, his daughter; Frederick, his son; Peter Mason, his attorney and later his partner; Maitre Baresse, personal attorney of Taillandy, senor; Mademoiselle Germaine D'Arcy; an unnamed girl, the fiancee of Frederick.
The Plot: Maxime Taillandy has built up a big business in silks and has his heart and soul in this business. The only other interest of his life has been the career of his son, Frederick, who did not care for business and became a noted poet. This son, falling in love with a girl whose parents thought his family not of sufficient social standing, was disappointed in love. The girl, as is the custom in France, yielding to the desires of her parents and marrying a man whose family tree showed more branches, though Taillandy could show the larger bank account. With the end of this affair the son has disappeared and on his death bed the father sends for Peter Mason. Peter is the attorney for the firm and a suitor for the hand of Marthe, Taillandy's daughter. The old man tells Peter the story of his son's disappointment and disappearance and charges him to find him. He has made a will leaving ten million francs to the son and a competence to the daughter. He desires Peter to take charge of the business and if the son is not found within a year, then Peter is to inherit the money on condition that he marry Marthe. If the son is not found and Peter does not marry Marthe, then all of the money is to go to the daughter. Peter promises to undertake the search for the son. Peter is distressed with the terms of the will, for he feels that if he fails to find the son he cannot honorably marry the daughter, since everyone will assume that he is marrying her for her money. She points out to him that under the terms of the will she cannot refuse to marry him without incurring the suspicion that she does this in order that she may inherit the entire fortune herself. Peter sets out on his search for Frederick and many months pass without any sort of success. He finds many people who knew Frederick, but none who have any idea of his present whereabouts. Advertisements are inserted in the papers and detectives are employed. A number of persons claiming to be Frederick Taillandy appear but all of them are promptly proven frauds. At last the anniversary of the year in which the search is to be made is at hand. Peter, Marthe and Marthe's aunt are at Monte Carlo. Here Peter has come on the advice of Mademoiselle D'Arcy, a Parisian actress who occasionally has letters from Frederick on his wanderings afoot. In the garden Peter makes the acquaintance of an old young man who bears a striking resemblance to the descriptions of Frederick and whose conversation and philosophy — Pagan throughout—confirms him in the idea that this is the lost heir. When the man's name and the man admits that he is the missing Frederick but disclaims all knowledge of the search that has been made for him, and states that he prefers his freedom to the possession of a fortune, but consents to appear at the hotel that evening. Peter advances him one thousand francs to buy suitable clothing. That evening they wait in vain for the young man and Marthe tells Peter that this is only another fraud. Peter agrees reluctantly and also agrees that they may as well marry immediately. That night as the strange young man —who is really Taillandy—is leaving the city afoot, he meets Marthe's aunt lamenting her losses at the roulette table and gives her the thousand francs he had from Peter. And so he disappears once more in search of his freedom among the fields, forests and mountains.
Locale: Paris and Monte Carlo.
Picture High Lights: There is a strong poetic strain in this story and some subtle comedy.

Witness of the Sun
By Henry Smith Williams

Character of Story: Mystery.
Theme: Intrigue.
Characters: John Theobold, a lawyer; Jack Henley; Cynthia Collins; Frank Crosby, secretary to Theobold; Dr. Harris, an inventor; Captain De Lage; Emanuel Cortez; Niel McFalcon; David Webster; Robert Warren; Alexander Weaver; Lopez; Lenora Cortez; Mrs. Theobold; Sylvia Lawson; Officer Finnegan; Major Cambon; Captain Gardini; District Attorney, etc.
The Plot: John Theobold has financed an invention by Dr. Harris, his law client, and has made arrangements for the sale of this invention -an automatic range finder and silencer—to the French government, which is represented in the deal by Captain De Lage. The three men meet in Theobold's offices and sign the contracts, which are then placed in Theobold's safe. Theobold, white waiting for the men to arrive, calls to the attention of the office boy the fact that the office clock is fifteen minutes slow—a point which proves of considerable importance later in establishing an alibi for Cortez, who is accused of the murder of Theobold. Theobold is found dead immediately after the entire office force has gone out to watch an aviatrix, Sylvia Lawson, who is flying over New York in an exhibition flight. It is at first thought that Theobold may have met his death through some missile dropped from the air-ship, probably a hat pin, as one is seen lying on the roof of an adjoining building, but this theory is almost immediately proven wrong when it is established that Theobold was shot. Nobody has heard shots and the next assumption, naturally, is that the shooting was done with the silencer, probably by Cortez. The rest of the story deals entirely with the theories advanced as to how the murder was accomplished and the production of evidence in support of, or refutation of, these theories. Crosby, the secretary, and Cortez are placed under arrest but evidence cannot be produced to convict them. Later Dr. Harris is charged with the crime and a number of photographs, taken by Jack Henley, the office boy, are introduced in evidence in support of the case. Harris admits the crime and commits suicide before he can be put under restraint. Cortez and Crosby are acquitted of the charge and Crosby immediately leaves the country. After all of the various theories have been advanced and exploded and the acquittal of the arrested parties has been secured, one of the attorneys for the defense confides in the other one that Crosby was the real murderer and that the reason why Harris committed suicide when charged with the crime was because he was a foreign spy and knew that if he were to be investigated by the police he would be convicted as a spy even though he succeeded in proving himself innocent of the murder charge. The plot is too involved to be given in detail in a brief synopsis. The chief interest lies in the element of mystery which is well sustained and in the various theories advanced to account for the crime, each one of these apparently fitting in with the known and admitted facts of the case, but each one collapsing under thorough investigation of the details. The most effective manner of presenting this on the screen would be to put into the action the stories told by the various witnesses, thus giving the audience the same effect that the story has upon scientific works to his credit. The the reader The author of this story is an eminent scientist who has many book will be published by a New York publishing house in the near future It is released for newspaper syndication the first week in April.
Locale: New York.
Picture High Lights: The picture situations are the same as those in most mystery stories with the exception of the introduction of an airship and a machine gun.

This Side of a Paradise
By F. Scott Fitzgerald

Character of Story:
Theme: Ideals.
Characters: Armory Blaine; Kerry Holiday; Rosalind Connage; Alec Connage; Dawson Rider; Tom D'Invilliers; Monsignor Darcy, etc.
The Plot: This story deals with the career of a young Princeton man from the time he enters preparatory school until he has been some years out of college. It deals with contemporary life in almost every aspect and is particularly up-to-date, even touching upon the effects of prohibition. Young Blaine is the son of a comparatively rich man and has a good allowance when in college. He develops into the typical young college man with a fair amount of reading and education and a tendency toward scholarship, but also with a fairly keen interest in the opposite sex—not the type of young man who seeks the bright lights, but rather wealthy ladies in college parlance as "a fusser." One of his earlier love affairs is described in some detail, but no event in his career which could be considered in any way vital in this line occurs until after his return from the war when he becomes acquainted with the sister of his great friend, Alec Connage. This sister, Rosalind, has been an accomplished flirt and their affair starts with no very serious intentions upon the part of either one of them. Armory, by this time, finds his income very materially reduced, much of it being derived from railway stocks and other securities not paying very well. He takes a position with an advertising agency at a small salary but does not like the work His affair with Rosalind develops into something very serious and he is soon eager to marry her. She declares that she is deeply in love with him but it is soon apparent that she does not fancy the idea of struggling along on a small salary even for a year or two, and eventually she throws him over, telling him frankly that she still has the same regard for him and that she is marrying another man whom she does not love but who can provide her with the comforts and luxuries to which she has been accustomed. Armory is very much upset by this and proceeds to resign his position in the advertising agency and to go on a wonderful spree which terminates with the coming of prohibition. He does not, even then, recover from the shock and is wandering about disconsolately in Atlantic City when he encounters Alec with a rather gay party. Alec gets into trouble with the hotel management. Armory conceives the idea that it would be a splendid thing to sacrifice himself for the sake of the brother of the girl who jilted him, so he assumes responsibility for an obvious young woman friend of Alec's and while escaping any legal difficulties in the matter, is treated to some very undesirable publicity in the matter—the story of his disgrace appearing in the same issue which tells of the marriage of Rosalind to the rich young man, Dawson Rider. Armory B'laine drifts from this point to the end of the book working out a sort of socialistic philosophy of his own and finally determining to devote his life and his talents to doing something for the betterment of mankind, rather than to the accumulation of money. And so we leave him
Locale: New York
Picture High Lights: There is a little dramatic action in this story and it might be possible to compile it sufficiently to get a picture theme out of it. More than one Broadway play has been hung on a more slender thread than the single incident of Armory's sacrifice

The Secret of the Snow
By Mildred Van Inwegen

Character of Story: Mystery.
Theme: Detection of crime.
Characters: Mrs. Hampton; Madge Hampton; Camdon Carroll; Henry, a servant; Nora, a maid; Bob Tanner; Kate Kingsley, a guest; Charley Blunt, sheriff; Ezra Sperry, coroner.
The Plot: Kate Kingsley is invited to visit her friend, Madge Hampton. Madge is resting in the country with her mother, a widow, who has secured a position as housekeeper and general manager of a fashionable country club. This club provides her with a residence on the same premises and a retinue of servants. At the time of the visit, however, there are only three servants on the premises. A frequent visitor at the home is Camdon Carroll, a rich young man who has a country residence nearby. Carroll finally comes as a week-end guest at the same time that Bob Tanner arrives from New York. Tanner is a young man who has paid some attention to Kate Kingsley and she is deeply interested in him. She fears, however, that he is not in love with Madge. Carroll is openly a suitor for Madge's hand and his suit is favored by the mother, who sees a happy future for herself and Carroll as such a match. The guests have hardly settled in the house when one of the maids shrieks and faints and discloses that she has seen a ghost. Then Kate sees a stranger's face in the looking glass. Next she puts her hand into a dark closet in search of a wrap and her fingers become entangled in human hair, which so excites her that she faints. A felt slipper is found in the closet and Mrs Hampton claims it as her own one which she wore at a time when she had sprained her ankle. Kate finds a hidden closet in which it is apparent that someone has been living, but there is no one there at the time of her discovery of this knowledge secret. One night she sees Madge come in very late and throw herself upon her bed sobbing. Being nervous, Kate goes downstairs and there she sees a man in the garden. She recognizes him as Bob Tanner by his coat and cap, though she does not see his face. The next morning Carroll does not appear at breakfast and Tanner and Kate visit his country house and find one of the windows open. They enter and find the body of Carroll lying on the floor He has been shot and in his hand is clasped a part of an amber necklace which he had presented to Madge in the presence of both Tanner and Kate. They naturally assume that Madge has committed the crime and Tanner agrees to help Kate shield her friend They remove the necklace, but fail to get all of the beads out of the dead man's hand and the sheriff discovers these He also discovers a revolver in Tanner's coat pocket two of the chambers having been emptied. He places Tanner under arrest and Madge is under suspicion. Kate stumbles on another slipper in the snow, one which is the mate to the one found in the closet. Then she discovers that the snow near the country house of Carroll the body of a strange woman and recognizes her as the person she saw in the looking glass For fher investigation proves that she was formerly a servant at the country club and that she was dismissed because of a scandal which grew out of her relations with Carroll. She had been sent to the poor farm and had lost her mental balance Escaping from the farm, she had been sheltered by Mrs Hampton and cared for by Henry, the servant, who was in love with her. Henry disappears and a letter comes from him stating that he shot Carroll in revenge for the manner in which he had treated the dead woman. Thus Tanner and Madge are cleared of suspicion. Tanner then tells Kate that he loves her and all ends happily.
Locale: New York suburb.
Picture High Lights: Good material for a detective melodrama on the order of Vicky Van.

KESSEL KWALITY

QUALITY is the uppermost thought in the mind of every producer when making a production.

QUALITY is the platform upon which have been built all those productions that have attained the stamp of perfection. When an ideal or principle is not founded upon this basis of quality, it fails to find a position amongst the successes.

AND so it is with the Laboratory. Every workman in the Nicholas Kessel Developing and Printing Plant is instilled with enthusiasm to turn out for his employer the highest quality of work his long experience permits.

THE Kessel Plant is proud of its organization. It is proud of the fact that every employee works in harmony for the betterment of photography—his life's study.

IDEAL working conditions and contentment plus the human understanding between employer and employee encourage enthusiasm, integrity and thoroughness.

THE realization of these conditions has made this organization a happy working family, turning out quality prints—the 'Kwality Prints' that have made the plant modestly famous.

"'THE Toll Gate' is the greatest picture I've ever made. I'll stake my reputation on it. It's a story I've wanted to do for years. And I haven't spared time or money in making it a masterpiece."

Says Sid Grauman:

"I consider 'The Toll Gate' by far the greatest picture Hart has ever made. Scenically and dramatically it is a masterpiece. It opened strong here and has played to capacity houses all week."

And the critics said:

"It is the best picture Hart has ever made." "It is one of the most absorbing pictures of the year." "Bubbles and seethes with thrills and suspense."

So Hart was right. It is his best picture.

YOUR CALL TO BATTLE

A National Mass Meeting of Independent Exhibitors, Hotel Congress, Chicago, April 26

AS an Independent Exhibitor you have got to add your voice to the demand we will make from the floor of our national mass meeting of Independent Theatre Owners to learn the truth about the practices, intentions and tactics behind the competition we are getting from the producers who are buying, building or leasing theatres next door or across the street from our houses.

My desk is covered with telegrams from Independent Exhibitors who will be in Chicago on Monday, April 26, to mix in this straight-hitting, all-cards-on-the-table show-down with the Producer-Exhibitors. We're going there for action, and we're going to get it.

Producers are stampeding their way into the theatre field by organized activity. Their agents stick together and work together. And you're the victim.

Now—we'll fight fire with fire. We're going to take organized Independent Exhibitor action and find out just how hard they are going to bite the hands that are feeding them with advance deposits and rental money.

An organization of fifty or one hundred Independent Exhibitors doesn't mean anything to them. We've got to be there by the thousands.

Don't depend on us to do your fighting for you. Be there yourself, bare-knuckled and ready to do your part. Come to Chicago! You're an almighty important part in this show-down.

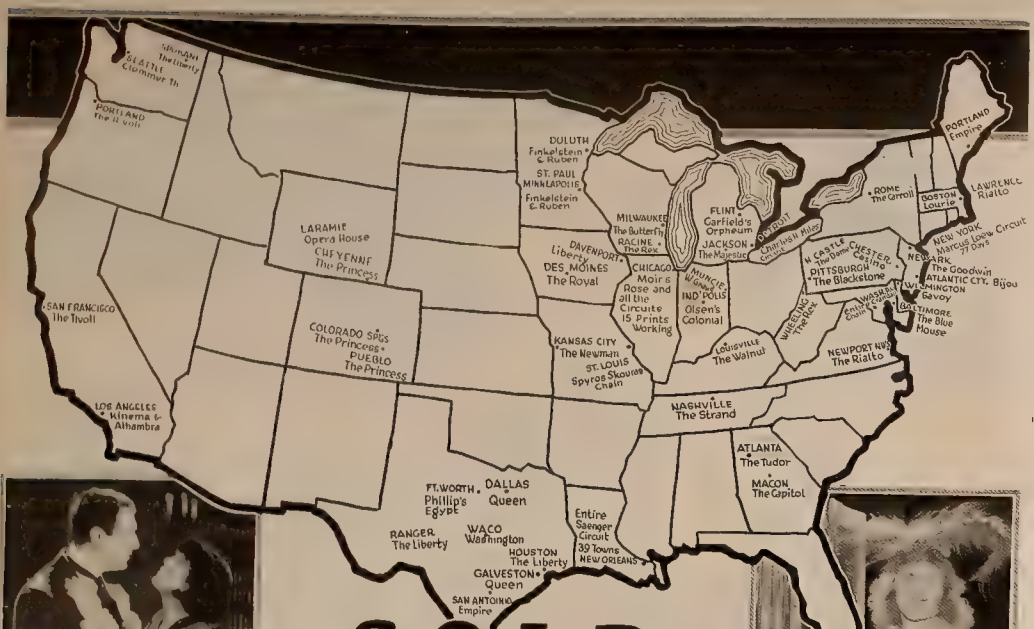
Vitagraph Company,
1600 Broadway,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

We are running the latest Larry Semon comedy "The Fly Cop," at the Capitol next week. Frankly I am worried.

In scoring the picture in our Review Room, the pianist laughed so heartily, that he could not play.



We have eighty men in our Orchestra. The stringed instruments and percussions will probably manage alright, but what about the men who are playing on the brasses and woodwinds?

Sincerely yours,

Edward Bowes

Managing Director.

Louise Glaum in "Sex" is J. Parker Read Jr.'s wonder-picture. This production has been sought more eagerly and given play dates on national release date more swiftly than any production we have ever known in the industry. Louise Glaum on April 11 achieves the unprecedented feat of playing fifty-five full week first runs simultaneously in the United States. In at least a dozen of these first run cities "Sex" will have two, three or four week runs.

When we tell you that we would be pleased to discover ten pictures made by independent producers with the power and quality of "King Spruce" you have a much better estimate of its strength than if we merely told you how big a picture we considered it to be. First run exhibitors have sensed this, too, and "King Spruce" is booking the big theatres.

Holman F. Day's biggest and best known novel is a story of real people—it throbs with life and vitality. It has the healthy, fresh scents of the great forests in its photography and it stars in Mitchell Lewis a mighty fine, sincere actor that many of you exhibitors have accidentally under-rated. Prints of "King Spruce" are in all branches for pre-release now.

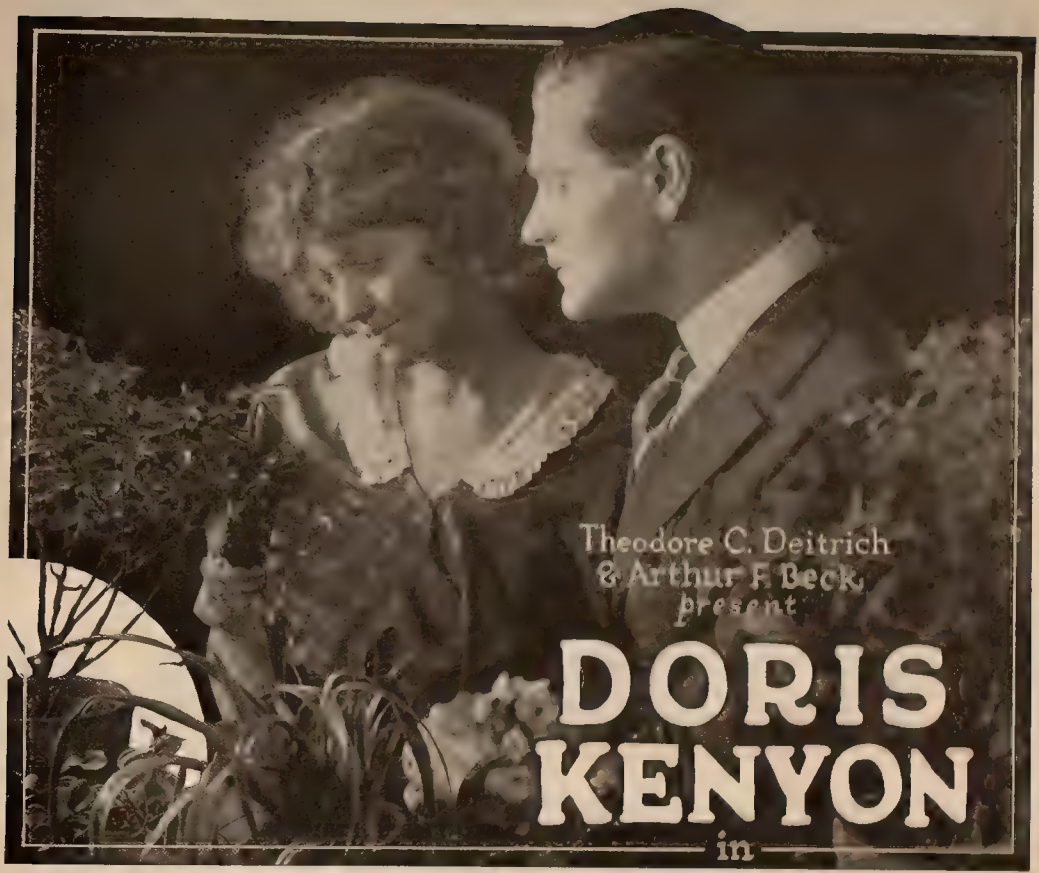
There are some things that we can see here before they are seen or recognized by the nation's exhibitors.



Exhibitors unquestionably know that in the past twelve months J. Warren Kerrigan has grown and increased greatly in favor with showmen and with the public.

We know through increased demand for his pictures; through the better prices paid; through the bigger first runs that are offering him to their patrons. "The Dream Cheater" is the kind of picture that has increased the Kerrigan popularity.

test Star's Popularity"

A THRILLING MELODRAMA

"Norma Talmadge is the bright particular star of the week's programme at the Strand, in the thrilling melodrama, 'The Woman Gives,' and capacity crowds from the moment of the opening of this popular motion picture house until the final curtain last night attested the star's popularity in no unmistakable manner. The story takes the heroine to all sorts of mystifying and creepy places, including a very realistic opium den where she and the man she went to save have a thrilling encounter with several Chinese. The many scenes and incidents of the story give the brilliant young star one of the best roles of her career." —New York Telegram.

CALLS HER ADORABLE

REALISTIC AND INTERESTING

"Interesting to watch. Opium den realistic."—New York Sun and Herald.

CHARMING PERSONALITY

"Norma Talmadge is seen in a vehicle which any screen star would wish for, one that gives her many opportunities to display her charming personality and talents. Not only does Norma Talmadge give an admirable performance throughout but the producers have surrounded her with a supporting cast they can well boast of. Ably produced."—New York Evening Mail.

A HUMAN STORY

"Norma Talmadge appears in an appealing role, the type of character we like to see reproduced on the screen. A human story. Norma Talmadge gives it a sympathetic portrayal." New York Morning Telegraph.

"Norma Talmadge is at her charming best in 'The Woman Gives.' Well suited to her. A good society picture. If she is one of your favorites you will like the picture."—New York News.

"Compelling—Natural—Human!" Unanimous Verdict of Critics

THRILLS OF MELODRAMA

"Manifesting again his peculiar talent for garlanding a theme with the rosemary of sentiment, King Vidor, in 'The Family Honor,' deals with a plot that has a greater plentitude of action than has hitherto been in evidence in his pictures. The main climax has all the ruddy thrills of melodrama. There is ample vigor. It is rich in atmosphere. You feel the life of the old South at every moment. Florence Vidor is a being of intense charm in this picture."—Los Angeles Times.

"'The Family Honor' is a fine play. There is a human element throughout the piece that is always pleasing. King Vidor is to be congratulated for his first effort for First National. Florence Vidor gives an excellent performance. The photographic qualities are excellent and the picture is artistic from every point of view. You will enjoy the play for it is HUMAN."—Los Angeles Evening Express.

CLEAN, WHOLESOME, APPEALING

"The public has come to expect new and daring things from this brilliant young director, King W. Vidor, and the crowds that packed the theatre to see "The Family Honor" were not disappointed. A beautiful picture, that flows as smoothly, as charmingly, as deliciously as the river pictures, which lend it a Southern atmosphere that has not been surpassed on the screen. And it contains a message. The story is a simple one—as all good stories must be. It is clean, wholesome, appealing. The cast is one of uniform merit."—Los Angeles Examiner.

REFRESHING—VITALIZING

"In this latest King Vidor film there is that something which made his "Turn of the Road" a compelling drama—wholesomeness and the sunshine of life. The human touches give the impression of the real—so natural, so simple that one is refreshed, revitalized."—Los Angeles Evening Herald.

Press Comments on James Oliver Curwood's Famous Story, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone"

The New York Tribune—

"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a northwest classic. Mr. Curwood has given us a great treat and a great book in this latest volume of his. . . . This is a triumph in fiction of the Canadian Northwest."

The Philadelphia Press—

"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a story that never flags, that abounds in unexpected incidents, that is rich in the deep colors of the glorious country in which its scenes are laid. If you want to read a story that travels straight on like a bird on the wing, with a swift series of unforeseen and thrilling episodes and all of it painted against the splendid hues of the wide, generous westland, read 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone.'"

Philadelphia Evening Telegraph—

"Those who like a story brimful of red-blooded adventure, who revel in the life of camp and trail, will enjoy 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone.'"

New York Times—

"There is plenty of incident, plenty of fighting, and some love-making in the book, with a heroine of that extraordinarily beautiful, courageous, innocent and trusting type."

Detroit Sunday News—

"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a complicated thriller of North Canada. Breathlessness seems to be the order of the hour. We crave it in all lines of activity, and markedly so in our reading. . . . Adventure toppling on adventure may be found in 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone.'"

Oakland (Cal.) Tribune—

"A fighting tale. If you like strong, vigorous, red-blooded fighting stories, where blows and blood, hatred and murder show themselves together with the great wild wastes of the frozen north, grizzly bears, fierce malemutes, primitive men, and tender and beautiful women, you will like 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone.' . . . It is a graphic tale, stirring, thrilling and unusual."

Minneapolis Herald—

"Mr. Curwood has caught the very spirit of the vigorous life of the north woods, and never has he made that fact clearer than in this romance. . . . It is on the whole a 'rattling good story.'"

Cincinnati Enquirer—

"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a stirring novel of the far Northwest. . . . It is a tale of mystery and of love, with a heroine unusual in fiction—young, brave, and very naive, as she has lived all her life away from civilization."

New York World—

"The romance is written with great spirit. Mr. Curwood obviously knows the forest, and his descriptions of it are very vivid. He is a dauntless fighter, too, and never fails to give some stirring scraps. . . . It is Mr. Curwood's best story . . . and hard to beat."

Daily Fresno Republican—
(California)

"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' fully justifies its name, for it would be hard to find a novel with more thrilling moments, hours, sacrifices and intensities."

The Times-Picayune—
(New Orleans)

"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a man's story full of fierce excitement and thrilling adventure."

Indianapolis Star—

"In 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone,' the author, James Oliver Curwood, presents to his readers a tale of romance and adventure depicting life on the Canadian frontier."

Salt Lake Telegram—

"'Tis a book in which James Oliver Curwood proves himself a born story teller."

Express Advertiser—
(Portland, Me.)

"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone,' by James Oliver Curwood, is a masterly story which takes the reader into the fascinating life of the northern forests. . . . Swift, exhilarating, the story sweeps along to a climax which is a masterpiece of dramatic skill."

The Post Express—
(Rochester, N. Y.)

"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a fine story of life near Hudson's bay, far from what we call civilization. . . . The book is breezily and charmingly written, and as far as style goes, Mr. Curwood is far superior to Jack London, a writer who loved to deal with the same primitive types of humanity."

The Bridgeport Post—
(Connecticut)

"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' opens in a snowbound train on an Arctic night, and ends with a night encampment and a strange meeting far from civilization. It is one of those gripping stories that holds one's attention from start to finish."

Los Angeles Tribune—

"Curwood has many stories of the north woods to his credit, but if he had never written anything except this latest of his novels, 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone,' his reputation would be assured."

Boston Herald and Journal

"When James Oliver Curwood flies fancifully northward a live story results. 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is one of his characteristic narratives, rapid in action and of vigorous pulse."

The San Francisco Chronicle

"In 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' there is a stirring love story and plenty of excitement and heroism and adventure."

The Boston Post—

"Lovers of novels solid with adventure in the wilds will turn naturally to 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone.'"

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone"

It opens on a train snowbound on an Arctic night.

It ends with a night encampment and a strange meeting far, far from civilization.

Between beginning and ending are crowded exciting incidents in a land where heroism and danger are part of the daily routine.

STAR: Winsome Madge Kennedy, who has a large and devoted following wherever motion pictures are shown and genuine comedy is appreciated.

AUTHOR: Octavus Roy Cohen, whose delightful stories in the Saturday Evening Post are marked by a unique and highly fascinating tang of originality.

CAST: Kenneth Harlan, Willard Louis, Florence Deshon, Richard Tucker and other well known performers.

STORY: Madge Kennedy is seen as Hazel Farron, a chorus girl whose experience back stage has not yet served to rub the silver off her dreams.

Out of a job and desperately hungry, Hazel sees a sign outside a bakery—"Stale Buns, Two for a Cent."

She has just two cents left, and buys some buns—"for her pet pom."

The baker, young and warm-hearted, sees through her subterfuge, and slips a silver dollar into each bun.

Then begins a business partnership. Hazel works in the bakery and learns at last why holes are put in doughnuts. After a series of deliciously funny adventures in the bakery, Hazel suddenly realizes that the young baker has stolen her heart.

She has to choose between poverty in the humble bakeshop and luxury under the protection of the wealthy Stanhope, a persistent admirer. The story works up to an indescribably tender climax, in which the young pair of lovers discover that honesty and a kind heart are still the most valuable assets in life.

The best of all Madge Kennedy pictures and a splendid attraction for any house.

LEE FRANCIS LYBARGER, PRESIDENT.
2826 DECATUR AVENUE, NEW YORK.

To The Exhibitors Of America:

AT the start of the present season, six months ago, I announced that the American Film Company was through making program pictures and that in the future nothing but big special productions based on big novels or plays by big authors, with big casts of competent players, capably directed, would be made in the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., and that these productions would be made individually—as SPECIALS.

THAT was my promise to the exhibitors of America. Today we can look back upon our achievements and say that that promise has been truly fulfilled. Under this new policy the first of the big specials to issue from the American studios was "Six Feet Four," from the novel by Jackson Gregory, featuring William Russell. This production went forth to exhibitors as a new type of picture—a big special production, specially made, specially directed, specially produced in every sense of the word. It is today one of the most popular productions being played. It is being run in the largest houses throughout the land and is making good in a big way for exhibitors.

"SIX Feet Four" was followed by such special productions as "The Hellion" by Daniel Whitcomb, featuring Margarita Fisher; "Eve in Exile," by Cosmo Hamilton, starring Charlotte Walker, Thomas Santschi and Wheeler Oakman; "The Valley of Tomorrow," by Stephen Fox, featuring William Russell; "The Dangerous Talent," with Margarita Fisher; Samuel Merwin's famous best seller, "The Honey Bee," featuring Margarita Sylva; and "Slam Bang Jim," starring William Russell.

ALL of these productions are now in the hands of exhibitors. They can best attest their value. Ask any exhibitor who has played these big specials what they have brought him in PROFITS!

UNQUESTIONABLY my promise to the exhibitors of America to provide nothing but big special productions has been fulfilled in the truest sense of the word.

NOW for the future: I again state to the exhibitors of America that the American Film Company will produce nothing but big special features—each produced as a separate entity without regard to cost, length of time, etc. Each production made by the American Film Company in the future will be a special, based on the biggest books, stories, novels and plays we can purchase.

WITHIN the next few months we shall offer special feature productions from the pens of such novelists as Albert Payson Terhune, Henry Russell Miller, Cosmo Hamilton, P. G. Wodehouse, David Anderson, Lois Zellner, and other prominent writers.

WE shall in the coming months produce such pictures as: "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver," "The House of Toys," "The Week-End," "The Gamesters," "Their Mutual Child" "Payment Guaranteed," "The Blue Moon" and "Peggy Rebels." Each of these productions will be SPECIALLY made, SPECIALLY directed, SPECIALLY cast with stars of the greatest competency. They will be BIG specials in every sense. We shall devote to their making every facility of our ten year old organization.

THE exhibitors of America have a right to demand SPECIAL productions. The discriminating public is insistent upon having THE BEST—and the best cannot be produced in grist-mill fashion. The best result can only be obtained by devoting to each subject INDIVIDUALLY that special ATTENTION, that special TIME, that special THOUGHT, which makes for perfection in special big productions.

THIS is my promise to the exhibitors of America for the months to come. I know that it will be welcomed by every enterprising, aggressive show man, who appreciates the box office possibilities of big things well done.

Jottings

By the Editor

THE "outlaw" railroad strike is having serious effects on the paper supply of New York publications. The dailies struggled through the week with editions that came as low as six and eight pages, a drop from an average of more than twenty and trade papers in all lines are making heroic transportation efforts.

The strike might easily prove the last straw, coming as it has at a time when the white paper situation, even without the complications of a freight tie-up, was a spectre robbing many a publisher of sleep. Few publications are fortified with more than a limited advance supply; and the least occurrence that hampers mill work or mill shipments has its immediate effect.

While we have not yet been forced to adopt drastic emergency methods, this present issue of Motion Picture News is curtailed to a slight extent. A little trimming here and there might be in evidence; but we can assure our readers that it is only done because our hand is forced—and only to the extent that we are so forced. We promise to get back to the old schedule just as soon as we find the silvery lining in the cloud; and meanwhile trust in the cooperation of our advertisers and readers.

Subscribers who may have received their copy of last week's issue a few days behind time will readily understand that the cause is to be found in the rail strike. Until conditions return to normal we must ask that you be prepared for such delays from week to week.

Facts and Factors

UNQUESTIONED facts are not open to dispute. The value of a film to an exhibitor depends upon the number of people who buy tickets to see it. That is a very positive fact. The number of paid admissions depends almost altogether upon the value of the posters which advertise it. That is also a positive fact.

The most attractive, appealing and convincing, and hence the most valuable poster produced is the RITCHEY poster. That is the most positive fact of all!

The factors that give this great advertising power to the RITCHEY poster are innumerable. One of them is a perfect organization. One of them is a splendid leadership. One of them is a long experience. Another is the painstaking study devoted to the real needs of the exhibitor, and the actual wants of the motion picture public.

There are other factors—but the one outstanding fact is this—that the RITCHEY poster is the greatest motion picture poster that it is humanly possible to design and execute! It therefore logically follows that their liberal display always results in the maximum amount of ticket sales.

Topics of the Moment

A New Rental System

WE cheerfully record again our belief that the big development of 1920 will be the evolution of a new and entirely different rental system.

The new system will NOT be the former flat rental system.

It will NOT be the present percentage system.

It will not demand a guarantee from the exhibitor nor ask for his "nut."

It will be a flat percentage system, asking for no guarantee and no "nut," but simply a percentage of the box-office receipts on a basis of about 25 per cent to the producer.

Again, it will not be the rental arrangement alone, but it will be JOINED to exploitation of the picture, able exploitation, cooperative exploitation, purely local exploitation, in which the producer and exhibitor will work together and share the expense.

The Man Behind Production

WE have spoken recently of the organization made picture as the better picture and the picture of the future. And we have defined our idea of an organization made picture; one shaped from beginning to end by a guiding and able hand, who doesn't simply hire but knows and works in harmony and sympathy with each capable member of a trained staff.

We have stated that such a producing unit will turn out uniformly good pictures; that pictures not so made are good largely by accident.

In this connection it is interesting to note the recent remarks of so able and experienced a producer as Cecil M. Hepworth of London. He says:

"There are three primary mistakes which are made in production. The first and worst is that if you have money enough you can make film pictures—for with money you can buy all the other ingredients. The next is that if you have the man, the producer, the real artist, you have all that is absolutely essential. The third and most widely spread idea is that, if you have the man and the money, you can certainly make good pictures. But film picture making is a much more far-reaching and complex thing than this. First, you need the team of players and team in this connection is a word which must never be lost sight of, for team work throughout is the essence of success. A good producer with a scratch crowd of good actors, and with plenty of money behind him, can make film pictures but he certainly cannot make the best pictures any more than a good conductor, with a scratch orchestra of people who have never worked together before, can make the best music. And team work goes much farther than this. You need a camera man who is in such absolute personal touch with the producer that their thoughts keep pace together all the time. You need a scenario-writer or author who is absolutely in accord with the producer and the rest of the team. There are scenery experts, lighting experts, and the man or woman who has the choosing of the costumes. It is wonderful how much character building there is even in the material of which a dress is made. Dresses must be chosen not merely to suit the character, but also to fit the emotion which has to be portrayed. Then following all of these come the photographic staff, who have the handling of the negative and the printing of it. And somewhere in the background is a man who gets all these people together, and holds them together, and is responsible for all the vast business organization which such a team as this demands."

No Politics

AGAIN let us call attention to the fact that the screen must play no politics.

The exhibitor will be approached he probably already has been by the political campaigners, who are well aware today that the screen can well nigh carry a national election. This is true. But a great responsibility goes with the great power.

The screen is not a newspaper. It is a news agency. As such it must be inviolate.

From every standpoint that of the motion picture and of the exhibitors' own local position—there is but one answer to any political organization which offers pictures and that is a flat "No."

Exhibitors and Producers War in New York Legislature

Bill to Amend Deposit System Causes A Big Fight Between Forces

ALBANY (Special).—The biggest kind of a fight is now being waged in the New York State Legislature between the producers and the exhibitors in an effort to stave off, on the one hand, further passage of the Cotillo bill, the provisions of which are of vital interest to the motion picture industry, and on the other hand, to promote action which will result in the enactment of the measure into a law. Each side began massing its forces in Albany on April 13th, in what will probably be the bitterest kind of a fight between now and April 24th, when the present session of the Legislature is scheduled for adjournment.

The Cotillo bill slipped quietly through the Senate last week, going to the rules committee in the ordinary course of procedure and attracting little or no attention. Since that time, however, many things have happened. Today senators and assemblymen were flooded with letters and telegrams of protest from the producers, who assert that the passage of the bill will work great harm with the industry.

The New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors League arrived on the ground today in the persons of Sydney S. Cohen, president; W. H. Linton, treasurer, of Utica, and W. A. Callihan of Rochester, one of the vice presidents. Royal K. Fuller, a former newspaperman, now with the National Association of the Moving Picture Industry, was on hand opposing the bill. The producers will be satisfied if the bill can remain in rules committee until the hour of adjournment, while Mr. Cohen and his lieutenants are bending every effort to release the bill from rules committee, confident of victory on the floor of the Legislature.

In outlining the attitude of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to the bill, President Cohen this afternoon said:

"The bill is a constructive measure to safeguard the vast amount of moneys exacted by producers and distributors of film by way of deposit or advance payments from the exhibitors doing business in New York State. The exhibitors in this state strenuously oppose the vicious deposit system at present in vogue, but so long as the producers and distributors of film insist on deposits and advance payments from responsible theatre owners, then we in turn ask only what is fair and just, that our money which they have in their possession be safeguarded and protected so that when we perform our contract this money will be available to be applied on the contract. We also want to make certain that our money will be available in the event of the producer or the distributor not performing his part of the contract or going out of business, or possibly into bankruptcy, as was the case with the General Film Company, at one time the giant of the industry, which was eventually put into bankruptcy and failed with almost $200,000 of exhibitors' deposit which it had in its possession. The most unfortunate part of this transaction was that most of these deposit moneys came from the smallest exhibitors who could the least afford the same.

"We also want to prevent the moneys exacted from us for deposits or advance payments being used by irresponsible promoters in either building new theatres in competition with us or in wild-cat speculation or to use the same to produce pictures which may take a year or two years before they are offered to us for showing in our theatres. Very often when these pictures, which they have made with our own money and which have turned out to be good ones, they do not permit us to play these selfsame pictures on the original plan, claiming that they are either a special or a super-production and then sell them to us on a different basis.

"This bill should not be opposed by any distributor or producer of film, who has the interest of the exhibitors at heart. The position of the producer and distributor in opposition to this measure, according to the statement of their own representative, has created considerable surprise to the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State, because not alone do these people have our money on deposit or by advance payments on account of our contracts, but they have a combination known as the F. I. L. M. Club, composed of all the distributors in this state, backed by their home offices, which organization prevents any exhibitor in New York State from securing film of any kind from any manufacturer or distributor of film, if he does not perform his contractual obligations. The exhibitors in this state, as well as in many other states, have suffered many injustices and abuses by representatives of film companies in their negotiations and their contractual relations.

"The Exhibitors' League of the State of New York formed a Credit Indemnity Association, composed of substantial exhibitors in this state, and has offered time and time again to put up a fund sufficiently large, $100,000 if necessary, to guarantee the contractual relations of every member of this organization, and made this offer for the purpose of doing away with the deposit system or advance payment, which we object to so much, but this offer has not been accepted.

"It is particularly unfortunate that in this big industry of ours the manufacturer and distributor members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry have not seen fit to treat with the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the United States in a spirit of even-handed justice and fair play. The exhibitors' interests have not been considered at any time by the members of this association and time and again the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has gone out of its way to antagonize and injure the motion picture exhibitors of the United States.

"It is also our idea that a continuation of the deposit and advance payment system has resulted in increasing the cost of our doing business, as it has been made very easy for some irresponsible promoters to secure large sums of money in advance for objects only in contemplation, and this has resulted in inflation of the worst kind, as these promoters have offered more money to stars and players than their present contracts have provided, enticing these stars and players to either break existing contracts or at the termination of their present contracts to ask and get two and three times what they were formerly paid and satisfied with.

"In our opinion the bill is constitutional. It is fair and just to both the exhibitor, the manufacturer and the producer, as all we ask for as exhibitors is that if our money is taken from us we shall at least be assured that the same is in safe keeping."

In opposition to the measure, Royal K. Fuller of the National Association of the Moving Picture Industry, said:

"The opposition to the measure is that it changes the entire method of doing business, built up over a period of years and satisfactory to 99 out of every 100 persons engaged. Even in its amended form limiting it solely to the motion picture business,

Late News from the Coast

THERE has been no Associated Producers' announcement as yet. J. D. Williams is in daily conference with the principals. It is locally expected that they will release through First National.

It is reported that Pauline Frederick will go to First National at the expiration of her Goldwyn contract.

Enid Bennett will leave the Thomas H. Ince Productions in July and is reported to be contracted with Associated Exhibitors, with Fred Niblo to direct her and C. Gardner Sullivan to write the stories.

Propaganda Opposes Chicago Meet Says Willard Patterson

Indications Point to Large Gathering of Theatre Owners

"THIS is the show down. It has been a long time coming, but it is here, and all the anticipated opposition propaganda against it, which, I am reliably informed, has sprung up in a dozen places within two days after publication of the announcement that I had taken the initiative as an independent exhibitor and asked every fellow independent in the country to join me in a huge mass meeting in Chicago, won't and can't stop it. The Chicago meeting means that the independent exhibitor is through being walked on."

With the foregoing as a prelude, Willard C. Patterson, manager of Sig Samuel's Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., and president of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association, charges that already several forces are at work in the exhibitor field in various sections of the country, attempting to forestall any concerted response to his call for a national meeting of independent theatre owners at the Hotel Congress, Chicago, on Monday, April 26, to demand what he terms "a show down with the producer-exhibitors who are trying to drive the independent fellows out of the business by buying, building or leasing theatres to compete with them."

"I knew, before I started this national call for a mass meeting," declared Mr. Patterson, "that immediately it became public property there would be a well organized attempt from the quarters where its forces will be felt the most to offset and discount it in the estimation of every independent exhibitor they can reach through personal meetings with their representatives. That is why I took the initial precaution of assuring myself, before making a definite decision to assume the initiative, that other independent exhibitors felt as I do about the necessity for knowing exactly where we are at with the producers who are invading the theatre branch of the industry. I had received answers from more than two hundred exhibitors before I felt certain that my attitude as an individual was a genuine reflection of the national exhibitor sentiment toward competing with theatres operated by the producers whose films they are renting. These studied attempts to discourage a national mass meeting are too late to be effective.

"Independent exhibitors by the hundreds not only are coming to the Chicago meeting, but they are coming there to talk out in meeting, to call facts, names and real identities, and get down to cases and work out a solution that will have a national independent exhibitor force behind it. They tell me, in their wired and written communications, that they are bringing facts and figures on producer aggression of the theatre field, prepared to show the damage and catastrophe that producer ownership of theatres has already done, and the dangers that it holds for their future security and independence as individual exhibitors.

"This mass meeting will be sensational. I do not mean that it will be full of politics and the sort of sensationalism that have made some of our previous national exhibitor meetings memorable within the industry and disgusting outside. There are going to be revelations of the methods of the producer invasion which will startle the trade. The subject is going to be handled without gloves.

"The independent exhibitor, fortunate enough to be in territories where the producer has not yet attempted to get a theatre foothold, where the hand of monopoly will strike as soon as it gets a firm clutch on its present objectives, is alive to the dangers but not so thoroughly as his brother exhibitor who has seen their tactics in operation, and who has felt the result in his box office receipts. The latter will be there, in force and mighty anxious to act, to tell the former straight-from-the-shoulder facts.

"There has always been more or less talk within the industry about the danger of this producer invasion and would be monopoly, but never was the danger so clearly evident as it is today, and never has it been so nationally recognized by independent exhibitors as an immediate menace to their individual theatre interests. It must be fought now, and the independent exhibitors must fight together.

"The big money effort to dominate the motion picture is not a bugbear. It is an actual danger, and I have facts and figures to reveal at the Chicago meeting to show that it is. Unless the independent exhibitor fights, fights hard, fights now and fights together, there won't be an independent exhibitor in another two years.

"There have been efforts before to monopolize the business. These efforts were directed chiefly at a monopoly of production, and because production is an art and cannot be 'cornered,' the attempt failed. It is possible to monopolize theatres, to effect an absolute motion picture theatre trust. With theatre ownership and control of the avenues of distribution, big capital will quickly accomplish what it has tried to do before.

"The exhibitor who doesn't fully appreciate the danger which confronts him, who says that the menace we see is 'bosh,' needs only to attend the Chicago meeting to convince himself. It is duty he owes to himself and his theatre. The independent exhibitors cannot be wiped out, forced to sell out, or frozen out, if they will stand up and fight together. There are enough of us to successfully protect our interests if we get into action.

"This meeting is not called for the purpose of forming an association, but to determine, in open conference and discussion, the facts and figures to reason from, the best method of combating the danger of producer monopoly in the theatre field, and it seems to me that the organization of a national, permanent association of the real independent exhibitor can accomplish this better than any other method.

"Whatever develops out of the Chicago meeting, you can be very sure that it will not be a passive organization, nor a social club, nor a political proposition. It will be, whatever form the meeting takes, an aggressive, hard hitting fighting unit.

"From the responses I have received to date, it is certain that many of the biggest and most important exhibitors in the country will be there, and for every one of them there will be two or more of the independent theatre owners from the smaller cities and towns, men who have had sufficient experience with producer-exhibitor theatres or producer-exhibitor agents, or who know exhibitors who have had this sort of opposition confronting them to realize the need for action."

Canadian Exhibitors Aroused by Prospective Measures

Sunday Closing and Increased Tax Cause Great Concern and Alarm

MOVING picture exhibitors of important Provinces in both Eastern and Western Canada have been greatly aroused over formidable developments affecting the operation of theatres and prospective results have been giving the moving picture interests great concern.

In the East, the exhibitors in the Province of Quebec have received intimation that they will be required to close their theatres on Sundays, while in the West, the Province of British Columbia, promises to impose an amusement tax of twenty per cent on the gross receipts of all theatres. The situation in both instances is considered serious and in each case the financial returns of the business may be greatly affected.

The Lord's Day Alliance, a self-appointed body of uplifters which has chosen for its task the enforcement of the Sunday Observance laws of the Dominion, is said to be behind the move to compel all theatres of Quebec cities to close on Sundays. About two years ago R. L. Vallee, proprietor of the Casino Theatre, Sherbrooke, Quebec, was convicted in Police Court of breaking the law by conducting Sunday performances. He carried the case to higher courts but the Supreme Court of Appeal recently confirmed the conviction. Mr. Vallee carried on the fight alone and has finally lost out. Soon after the decision of the court became known, the many exhibitors of Montreal received intimation from the Quebec Government that they would have to close on Sundays, it is reported. The theatre managers were advised that they were violating the Lord's Day Act, a Federal law, by Chief Tremblay of the Montreal Police Department, but he declares that he was not instructed to do more than issue this warning. Hon. L. A. Taschereau, acting Prime Minister of Quebec, also announced that the Quebec Government had no authority to enforce the law because it happened to be a Dominion statute. On the other hand, Hon. Mr. Doherty of Ottawa, the Federal Minister of Justice, has issued a statement in which he points out that the enforcement of the Lord's Day Act comes under the direction of the Provincial Attorney-General.

Further color has been added to the situation by a statement on the part of Mayor Cousineau of Hull, the third largest city in Quebec, to the effect that he does not hold any intention to enforce the Lord's Day Act in his city. He has also made the declaration that the abolition of Sunday shows is only desired by "a small section of the people who are members of the Lord's Day Alliance." The enforcement of the Sunday law, he considers, is a restriction upon the personal liberty of the community and an insult to the man who works hard all week.

Hull gets considerable patronage each Sunday from Ottawa, the Canadian capital, on the Ontario side of the Ottawa River, as the Ottawa theatres are closed on Sundays. Exhibitors throughout Quebec declare that Sunday is the big day of the week and that if they were compelled to close they will suffer greatly. In addition, the various municipalities will also suffer because of decreased revenue from the amusement tax. Incidentally, Quebec is the only Province in Canada where Sunday shows have been tolerated.

On the Pacific Coast there is also great consternation among exhibitors because of a proposal on the part of the British Columbia Legislature to impose a tax of twenty per cent on the gross receipts of all theatres. A strong deputation, representing the theatre interests of Vancouver and Victoria, waited upon the Provincial Cabinet at Victoria on March 26th, to raise objections to the proposed assessment. It was pointed out by these exhibitors that such a tax would be considerably in excess of amusement taxes in other Provinces and it was also asserted that if the measure were carried a number of the exhibitors of Vancouver would quit entirely. The statement was made that the three large Canadian companies which are now arranging to erect large new theatres in Vancouver representing an aggregate investment of upwards of $1,500,000 would undoubtedly call off their plans. Frank Patrick of Vancouver declared that a considerable number of the Vancouver theatres were not showing a real profit and if the huge tax were imposed they would be forced to suspend operations, in which case the object of the assessment would be defeated.

Mr. Patrick made the interesting point that the license fees of automobiles are used to improve the highways for the use of motorists but the amusement tax is not used in any way by the Province to improve or benefit the theatre business. Several speakers declared that the peak in amusement admission prices had been reached and if admissions were raised any more the public would stay away from the theatres.

In connection with the proposal by the B. C. Government to collect a tax equal to twenty per cent of the gross receipts of the theatres, it is pointed out that the Amusement Tax in Ontario averages seven and one-half per cent of the theatres' gross receipts. In Ontario, the patrons pay this tax when they buy admission tickets. In Quebec, the civic theatre ticket tax is slightly lower than that collected in Ontario.

Famous Players Control Missouri Theatres

THE fifteen moving picture theatres owned or controlled by the Consolidated Theatres Company in St. Louis, and known as the Koplar group, have been acquired by the Famous Players Missouri Corporation, which also has obtained control of the Del Monte Theatre, now being erected on Delmar boulevard west of Clara avenue. The purchasing corporation is capitalized at $2,000,000 and is the Missouri branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of New York.

The Consolidated Theatres, which have been taken over, are the Kings, Pershing, Shenandoah, Juniata, Grand-Florissant, Lindell, Royal, Arco, Cherokee, Gravois, Lafayette, Novelty, Maffit, Montgomery and Lowell. They will be under the new management beginning next Sunday.

Officers of the Missouri Famous Players Co. are Frederick L. Cornwell, a St. Louis lawyer, president, and Arthur S. Friend and John C. Flinn, both of New York, vice-presidents. Adolph Zukor, head of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is chairman of the board of directors of the Missouri company.

The terms and amount of the purchase price were not disclosed.

C. A. Taylor Quits Pathe Buffalo Exchange

C. A. Taylor, manager of the Buffalo, N. Y., Pathe exchange for several years, has resigned his position to take effect immediately. The announcement of his resignation came as a big surprise in Buffalo exchange and exhibitor circles.

J. E. Kimberley, former manager of the World branch, has been named to succeed Mr. Taylor at Pathe. The former Pathe exchange head states that he has as yet made no plans for the future. He will take a few weeks' vacation before considering several propositions offered him.

A.M.P.A. Elected to U.S. Chamber of Commerce

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., has been elected an organization member of the United States Chamber of Commerce. The Advertisers' Organization is grouped in Class A by the Chamber, its numerical membership strength entitling it to a delegate representing it in the Chamber, this delegate also to act as National Councillor. Paul Gulick was elected to serve as the first delegate and councillor.

Issues Vital to Exhibitors to Be Discussed at Convention

Independent Showmen Reported Interested in First National Meeting

STEPS significant to every independent exhibitor in the United States form the procedure for the general convention of First National Exhibitors' Circuit and Associated First National Pictures, Inc., to be held at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, beginning April 26th.

An examination of the issues compiled in the general outline of business to be brought before the convention, reveals a greater number of new and revolutionary matters. A close inspection of the subjects involved shows that in the brief under which the main topics are listed, are eleven vital issues, standing problems before independent exhibitors today. There are naturally several matters of policy concerning the organization exclusively; but the dominating subjects which theatre owners representing every section of American will consider, involve independent exhibitors to a far greater degree than they concern First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Expediting the work of the convention, a committee representing First National franchise holders, has for a period of weeks been in executive session gathering every bit of available data pertaining to the various subjects to be brought before the meeting. And as a result the members assembled will be provided with an exhaustive assortment of memoranda embracing every topic listed in the brief which in itself includes the eleven different subjects of independent exhibitor interest.

Exhibitor franchise holders of First National Exhibitors' Circuit in telegram of April 11th, cast a new light on the convention in view of the information that exhibitors from the North, South, East and West, representing independently-owned and operated theatres have made arrangements to be present at the convention. Upon the receipt of this news from men prominently identified with the exhibiting end of the motion picture business, officials of First National expressed the belief that the convention will represent one of the most impressive and representative gatherings in the history of the industry.

A check made on the queries sent to First National Exchange managers from the Home Office in New York City shows that every exchange manager will be in attendance at the convention. In only several instances is it doubtful that managers will be able to arrange their work in order to be represented by proxy. The fact stands as self-evident that the gathering in Chicago will overshadow First National's convention held at the Hotel Astor, New York, in 1919.

Simultaneous with the announcement that Whitman Bennett, production manager for Lionel Barrymore, the latest adjunct to First National Exhibitors' Circuit's constellation, has evidenced his intention to address the convention, comes the prediction that Mr. Bennett's "remarks" to the convention will be of especial interest to exhibitors in general. For the past few years Mr. Bennett was production manager for the Famous Players-Lasky Company.

Of interest to showmen throughout the nation is the fact that nineteen volumes of exhibitor information, amounting to more than 2,000 pages of statistical compilation in which every independent exhibitor in the United States, the size of his theatre, the population of the city in which he operates and his admission prices at matinee and evening performances are listed is now under lock and key and will have a special bearing on the convention. This complete set of statistics will be carried to Chicago for the opening sessions at the convention.

It is upon the subject of exhibitor and producer value as mentioned in the foregoing that an interesting revelation has been made. This is to the effect that producer value will decide exhibitor value. Producer profit will react toward exhibitor profit in the same ratio. On the other hand, producers' values will be determined by the value of given pictures to exhibitors; for, as it is stated: the logical and equitable arrangement must guarantee the independent exhibitor the latter's share of and in a producer's success.

This innovation in the matter of producer and exhibitor value is the more remarkable in view of the fact that the "value" is appraised on the grounds of special feature attractions on a program arrangement. Under the latter method the decision would still be decidedly revolutionary. But under the special feature attraction system, such a decision is a startling departure in view of the fact that on specials, with which producers reap the greatest proportion of their profits, the exhibitor's interest is safeguarded. He enjoys the fruits of a special feature attraction's success as well as the responsibility of making money out of a mediocre picture as is oftentimes the case.

The list of affiliated attraction and the producers thereof has been verified and authorized by First National Exhibitors' Circuit. It is also foreseen that the "last minute rush" of stars and producers to align themselves with First National in time for consideration by the convention will be felt. Within the past week a number of propositions have been made to the Circuit and official announcement indicates serious consideration is being given certain offers.

Mother of H. F. Rendall Buried This Week

THE sympathy of his fellow-workers and the industry is extended to Harold F. Rendall, of Motion Picture News on the death of his mother, Mrs. Maud M. Rendall, who was very well known in the musical and social circles of the Bronx and was actively engaged in real estate enterprises for many years in that section of the Metropolis. Mrs. Rendall is survived by her husband, George F. Rendall; her son, Harold F. Rendall, attached to the advertising staff of Motion Picture News, and by her daughter, Mrs. Geraldine M. Priest, who is the wife of Robert F. Priest, well-known in film circles. Mrs. Rendall died on Monday, April 12th, following a long illness, and was buried from St. Paul's Church, the Bronx, on Wednesday, April 14th.

Exhibitors Battle at Albany

the bill, in the opinion of the producers and distributors, is a pernicious one and the passage of which would work irremediable injury to the business, providing that it could be enforced.

"In its present amended form, the bill now reads that whenever money shall be deposited or advanced on a contract for the use or rental of personal property as security for performance of the contract or to be applied to payments on such contract when due, such money, with interest accruing thereon, if any, until repaid or so applied, shall continue to be the money of the person making such deposit or advance and shall be a trust fund in the possession of the person with whom such deposit or advance shall be made and shall be deposited in a bank or trust company and not mingled with other funds or become an asset of such trustee.

"It is doubtful if a bank could be found which would accept the so-called trust fund because of their very smallness. No exhibitor has lost any money by reason of the arrangement that are in force today and a number of lawyers have expressed the opinion that if the bill in its present form becomes a law it could not affect the industry in any way as it could not take away the right of parties to make a contract."

In telegrams and letters by the score, reaching the senators and assemblymen, producing companies voiced their opposition in no uncertain terms to the measure.

A.M.P.A. Seeking Closer Co-operation

John S. Spargo Made Field Secretary to Bring Press and Film Interests Together

THE most ambitious project of its three years of active existence was initiated by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., at its regular meeting recently when it unanimously voted to employ John S. Spargo, one of the best known newspapermen in the country as its field secretary in a campaign to secure closer co-operation between the daily newspapers of the country and the motion picture interests.

For years there has been a condition existing in the exploitation of motion picture productions which has made it difficult for the newspaper publisher and the motion picture advertiser to meet each other half way. Each felt that the other wanted it all; each felt the other was giving all and getting little back. Mr. Advertiser felt lost in facing any kind of a country-wide newspaper campaign for the exploitation of films while Mr. Publisher felt that his paper was just as much entitled to consideration as two thousand other similar publications. The result has been that neither has got anywhere. Co-operation there was none, with the exception of a very few brilliant instances. But these exceptions have proven the rule and have finally shown the way in which the two can be brought together, at a time when each needs the other more than ever before to achieve best results.

J. S. Spargo, field secretary of the A. M. P. A.

Mr. Spargo has for many years past held executive positions on many of the larger papers of the country and severed his direct newspaper connections to undertake the work of bringing the papers of the country and the motion picture people to a closer co-operation. He recently discovered the key to the situation and came to New York to put the proposition up to the A. M. P. A., the only body which could entertain and had the opportunity to put through such an ambitious project. A working plan was finally formulated by the A. M. P. A. and put before the body by President Gulick and enthusiastically adopted.

"We are fortunate," said Mr. Gulick, "in securing the services of Mr. Spargo whose acquaintance among newspaper men is of the widest and who has been connected with a score of the best papers in all parts of the country. One of his purposes is to make a careful and analytical survey of all the larger cities of the United States from the standpoint of motion picture exploitation, and the statistics he will compile will be of infinite value to every exploitation manager in the A. M. P. A. The wonder is that no such project has ever been attempted before. And the reason is that there has never before been an organization in the industry strong and unselfish enough to undertake it."

Federated President Issues Statement

Joseph L. Friedman Warns Exhibitors Not to Sell to Big Film Powers

"DO not, under any conditions, sell your theatre to film powers and do not let the big interests get even a finger hold on your business," is the gist of the first statement from President Joseph L. Friedman of the newly formed Federated Film Exchanges of America.

"There is a temptation, when big money talks," said Mr. Friedman, "for the individual to listen and let the governing powers of the big money interests do his thinking for him. For the last year or thereabouts, the film industry has been hearing rumors of such and such an organization investing in theatrical interests all over the country. And, as a consequence, the individual theatre owner does not know which way to turn. It was partly to combat this feeling of unrest, and to settle in the minds of the exhibitors that the business they have built belongs to them, and to them alone, that the Federated Film Exchanges of America was formed.

"In the past, the independent producer – and who can say that the greatest pictures of all time have not come from the independent producer? – has, as a business man should, sold his pictures where the profit was greatest, and where full distribution was practically guaranteed. It was impossible for the independent exchange man to compete, in buying power, with the big film circuits, for the simple reason that they were not organized. And, in spite of the fact that the united buying power of the leading state right exchange was and always has been a mighty buying power and on a par with the buying power of the leading exchange systems throughout the country, State Right men had to sit idly by and watch the greatest pictures pass into hands other than theirs because they were not organized.

"The Federated Film Corporation releases the exhibitor from dependence upon the product of any organization. He can laugh at threats to 'freeze him out.' He does not have to undertake any disagreeable contracts in order to save himself from bitter competition. With the Federated back of him, he can rest assured of a high grade product for his screen, without any joker. There is no 'nigger' in the Federated's woodpile. If the exhibitor grows, so does the Federated. It is simply a question of every man to his own job. Let the producer produce, the distributor distribute, and the exhibitor exhibit his pictures. If the picture is 'there' the money is there for all concerned.

"It stands to reason that an organization, such as the Federated Film Exchanges of America, cannot continue to live and do business unless the pictures handled by them live up to their advance notices. There is no tie-up—each individual picture published through Federated channels must make money, or all succeeding pictures will cost the Exchange system dearly. There can be no such system as 'a picture a week, some good, some fair, some bad.' Each Federated picture has a standard to live up to, and if it doesn't live up to it, the Federated Films Exchanges suffer.

"The independent exchanges, having organized, are a power to be reckoned with. That it is a benefit to the industry goes without saying. It benefits the producer, by giving him a powerful and financially sound organization through which to circulate his film. It benefits the exchange man, by securing for him the best film that money can buy. It benefits the exhibitor by bringing to him, in a businesslike manner, an opportunity to show his patrons the best of pictures."

Rail Strike Demoralizes Film Shipments

Parcel-Post Gets Brunt of Traffic; Deliver by Messengers in Metropolitan Area

ADVICES from the various exchanges in the Metropolitan district inform that shipment of picture-films by rail has been completely demoralized by the railroad strike, affecting the lines in New York and New Jersey. Parcel-post has been resorted to in the majority of instances for transportation of prints to more distant points, but exhibitors living in the immediate neighborhood of New York City are coming in person or dispatching messengers to the exchanges to convey the prints by hand.

The parcel-post system has been made to bear the brunt of the traffic, and according to latest returns, so great has become the mass of material assigned to the postoffice for delivery that all stations have become virtually swamped. In the face of these conditions, delivery of films by this medium has become very unreliable at the present time. Delays of three and four days in the arrival of prints at their destinations are being reported with increasing frequency. To overcome this handicap, most of the exchanges are dispatching their films several days in advance of the regular time.

The First National exchange for New Jersey reports that exhibitors within easy distance of New York are being notified by telegram three days in advance of a scheduled showing to visit the New York or Newark offices in person or to dispatch messengers for the purpose of conveying the films by hand. First National exchange for New York State declares that the more distant centers in upper New York are being accommodated by baggage checking two days in advance with varying success.

Vitagraph reports that exhibitors from the surrounding districts in New Jersey are coming in on autos for their prints. Theatre owners along the West Shore, Erie and Lackawanna lines have been particularly hard hit. The Central New Jersey service has been much more satisfactory. No great difficulty has been experienced in supplying exhibitors in the Connecticut territory, said Vitagraph. "Service in that direction is good. Since Friday last, we have practically suspended all shipment by rail. The parcel post system has been our usual medium of transportation."

Goldwyn headquarters states that it wired all its branches on Tuesday to as certain existing conditions. "No shipments have been going forward by express or freight," says Goldwyn. "The branches have been conducting their incoming and outgoing deliveries by parcel post, and while the parcel post service has been fairly good in the face of conditions, material is now stacking up enormously. A parcel may be buried under for three or four days, and it is just as likely as not that the last parcel in will be the first out. Reports from Boston show conditions there to be almost normal, but the local situation is giving us great difficulty."

Pathe announces that it is attempting to facilitate the parcel-post delivery of its films by conveying them in taxis to the terminal postoffice stations, thus eliminating the delay that would occur in first shipping them to one of the district stations. Taxicab delivery is also being utilized, it is stated, in shipping prints to exhibitors in the Metropolitan district.

New Chicago Theatre Opens

THE first of the projected De Luxe houses in Chicago's downtown district, Barbee's New Loop Theatre, opened on Saturday, April 10th. Eager crowds waited for hours before the doors were swung back, to enter and view the widely heralded beauties of the theatre and the excellent first program offered. Judging by the attendance of the first few days, this theatre will have a successful career.

No expense or effort had been spared as to decorations, hangings, lighting effects and appointments to make this thousand-seat house one of the handsomest in the country. Allegorical paintings in the circular lobby and the Italian renaissance mural paintings in the theatre itself being particularly effective.

Despite the fact that workmen had been busy up till the last minute putting on the final touches in the theatre, W. S. Barbee and Assistant Manager Joseph Koppel, who made a big reputation as a showman while manager of the Riviera, put on their first show as if the theatre had been in operation for months, and were the recipients of many compliments.

A more detailed account of the opening will be given in the New Theatre section of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Report Pantages Will Extend Circuit

According to a current rumor, Alexander Pantages intends to extend his vaudeville circuit to New Orleans at once, pending the erection of his proposed million dollar theatre in that city. The Dauphine theatre, a former burlesque house, it is said, will be reopened, and, with the completion of the Pantages theatre in Memphis, and the Pantages theatre in Kansas City, a strong circuit will have been formed in the Middle West.

The local deal is said to be only a part of the well developed plans to extend Pantages circuit and it is understood negotiations are under way in Atlanta, Birmingham and other Southern cities farther East for theatre sites.

"Enclosed please find check for two dollars for subscription to the Motion Picture News for the coming year.

"I find myself almost lost without the familiar sight of your valuable paper in the mail each week.

"I find your paper a valuable asset in my selection of films and in keeping posted on events in the trade. Wishing you continued success."

Blackton Pictures Have Private Showing

J. Stuart Blackston's two latest productions, "Passers By" and "Soul and Body" were given a private showing on Tuesday evening, April 13th, at Wurlitzer's Hall, New York City. The pictures will be released by Pathe in June and August and will not be reviewed for the trade until later.

Herbert Rawlinson is featured in both pictures. "Passers By" has an all star cast, which includes Tom Lewis, W. J. Ferguson, May McAvoy, a new comer to the screen, is seen in "Soul and Body."

Ferd Turner Made Loew Publicity Director

Ferd ("Terry") Turner leaves New York this week to assume the duties of publicity director of the Loew Southern and Southwestern circuit, with headquarters in Atlanta.

Mr. Turner, formerly a Baltimore newspaperman, became associated with the Loew interests as a press representative of Loew's Hippodrome at Baltimore six years ago. Since that time he has opened a number of new Loew theatre throughout the United States and Canada. The Loew southern and southwestern circuit now include more than twenty five theatres.

Adolph Zukor to Return from European Trip

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Player-Lasky Corporation, who has been in Europe for the past four weeks, will sail from Liverpool shortly on the S. S. Mauretania on his homeward journey.

On this and the opposite page is shown a parade which was arranged to advertise "Excuse My Dust" at the Rialto theatre, Denver. The Denver agency for the Reamer car knew this was the machine Wallace Reid used in the film and for that reason the automobile people were willing to assist in exploiting the picture. The whole parade so far as cars go did not cost the Rialto a cent. The amount of publicity accruing cannot be measured, but it is known to have been tremendous

The tie-up was arranged by A. G. Birch, the Denver F.-P. exploitation man and the details were worked out by the theatre publicity crew, Mr. Birch and the Reamer people

Making Exploitation Reach All Classes

Striking an exploitation note that commands instant exhibitor attention, John E. Koen, manager of the Federal theatre, Salem, Mass., has devised a promotion campaign in which a previously unused factor played a considerable part.

This element, which is adaptable to any community was brought into play when Mr. Koen discovered that exploitation did not reach its maximum limits unless it was literally in the language that could be understood by all. In previous campaigns only the English-speaking population of Salem was reached. Mr. Koen found there were 10,000 people who speak the French language and who can be appealed to only in that language.

"Why discriminate against ticket-buyers who are orderly and refined?" asks Mr. Koen. "A certain percentage of the 10,000 people who think and act in French despite the fact that they work in American mills and manufacturing plants are prospective theatregoers. At least, they were not disinterested until I had proved it. The opportunity came when I was playing "Daddy Long Legs."

To put the greatest possible appeal behind his exploitation, Mr. Koen inserted a display ad in the weekly French newspaper offering $50 as a prize to the girl who bore the greatest resemblance to Mary Pickford. This offer was also made through the English newspaper. And the greatest surprise in the campaign is the fact that one of the French girls reached by the exploitation in the French newspaper won the prize.

By cultivating the friendship of thousands of people whose presence in Salem theatres was not requested, Mr. Koen developed an idea that will not be overlooked in future exploitation campaigns that will be waged in his city either by himself or by other exhibitors.

Novelty Presentation Idea for "Uneasy Feet"

"UNEASY FEET" the "faceless, titleless" comedy was given an unique presentation at the California theatre, Los Angeles.

Taking advantage of the fact that the upper half of the screen must necessarily be dark, and that the film was devoid of subtitles the managing director, Robert Poole, arranged to flash upon the silver sheet continuously, titles of songs, marches and arias, while the orchestra was playing. This conveys the thought directly to the minds of the audience, supplementing the visual effect of the action of the lower half of the screen.

The song slide was flashed by means of triple exposure. First the film is exposed for the actual music notes, the full bar of the strain being shown; then it is exposed for the words, and when flashed upon the screen where a film is being projected, the effect is produced by triple exposure.

We take, for example, when a pretty pair of feminine feet start walking down the street and the huskier pair of masculine feet follows, as the orchestra starts playing "Alma, Sweet Alma, Where Do You Live?" the words and music are flashed upon the screen.

The dissolving titles were all controlled from the orchestra leader's seat, so that the music on the screen and that furnished by the orchestra synchronized.

The musical score was presented by special arrangement of Glenn Knight, synchronized by Rene Williams under the personal direction of R. H. Poole.

Maddox Overcomes Holy Week Jinx

HOLY WEEK hasn't any terrors for "Jim" Maddox, pilot of the destinies of the Southern theatre, Columbus, Ohio.

But instead of sitting back and resting up, waiting for a week of poor business, Maddox put on some extra steam, opened the throttle and blew the usual Holy Week lull.

Mr. Maddox had "April Folly" booked at the Southern for Holy Week. He began his exploitation campaign in an orthodox way by a bombardment of 24 sheets.

Then he got the Columbus Citizen to put on a contest apropos of April Fools' Day. He offered a box party and other ticket prizes for the best April First stories sent into the "April Folly" Editor of the Citizen. Announcements of the contest, the answers and the winners occupied daily space on the first page of the Citizen before and during the engagement.

Then Mr. Maddox lined up the leading dealers in women's wear in Columbus, for a fashion show with living models. Girls from the Ohio State College were secured. This provided a great deal of newspaper publicity and got the entire college talking about the Southern's show. The style show was presented at three performances daily during the week's run of "April Folly." To draw 'em into the theatre, Mr. Maddox did not announce the names of any of the girls acting as models. Curiosity led the women into the theatre to see who the girls were, if nothing else. Then "April Folly" and the style show sent them out boosting the programme.

Grauman's Prologue and Setting for "The Toll Gate"

Views of Sid Grauman's specialty number (top), "A Dream Garden," described in the Motion Picture News in a recent issue and which is said to be the most elaborate number ever staged at Grauman's Los Angeles theatre, famed for its specialties of this sort.

At the left is shown the protonic stage setting and the characters which took part in it for William S. Hart's "The Toll Gate," which was the feature picture on the bill for the week. The "bandits" behind the house and robbed have come to grief, as appears on the hand of one as in the photograph. The scene is an exact reproduction of one of the thrilling sequences in the Hart picture

"Nag" Camps in Theatre Lobby

IT is better to be born lucky than rich, says an old adage, to which might be added that if luck sends along something that can be made into a newspaper story which the editors will print free and without tacking that accursed "adv." on the tag line, it is an unwise showman who doesn't take advantage of it.

All of which has little to do with the fact that recently a decrepit old horse chose the Paramount-Empress theatre lobby, Salt Lake City, for a camping place, except that George C. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount-Empress, saw to it that every newspaper man in town had the facts of the case, and perhaps more than facts in order to make the story sound good and that in consequence the Salt Lake City papers carried stories in their issue of March 26th, which were good for considerable advertising for the theatre.

Here is one of the stories, the best one so far as style is concerned. We reprint it from the columns of the Salt Lake City News; the moral is never neglect an opportunity to get publicity, especially free publicity.

During the storm last evening the Paramount Empress theatre temporarily entertained an uninvited guest. A poor truck horse, which had evidently broken away from its owner, was in search of shelter and seeing the brilliantly lighted theatre entrance immediately went in.

The management, through sympathetic, could not receive such a guest, and so the animal was shown the door and departed through a side entrance.

After leaving the Paramount-Empress theatre, the old mare wandered over to the city jail yard where a brand new automobile was standing. Appearances indicated that she had leaned against the machine to rest when the springs of life gave out and she fell dead. In falling the animal broke the windshield and step of the machine and otherwise damaged it. When the officers went into the yard early this morning, the aged animal was rigid in death, her eyes closed forever to the hardships from which she suffered so cruelly.

While the owner of the animal is not known, the police believe she had been turned out to pasture and had broken through the fence, wandering to the business district of the city.

Newspaper Interests Itself in "Pollyanna"

The attention that "Pollyanna" is getting from newspapers and in other quarters outside the theatrical sphere is a fine tribute to the picture.

Among the papers to give the feature a boost which wasn't "paid for" is the Tyler (Texas) Courier Times which managed a private showing for the clergy, school faculties and other prominent personages of Tyler held at the Eclectic Palace theatre prior to the public showing of the film. The affair was a great success and much space was devoted to the film and the private screening by the Courier Times.

Lam Doesn't "Lam" the One-Sheet

Consider the one-sheet.

O. C. Lam, manager of the Rome Amusement Company, Rome, Ga., has.

One-sheets cost less than bigger sheets.

You can buy more of them for the same money.

"The more sheets you stick around the streets the more people you'll attract," says Mr. Lam.

Picture of Nazimova Featured in Seattle Exploitation

Lobby of the Clemmer theatre, Seattle, lobby, decorated for the engagement of Nazimova in "Stronger Than Death." Note the artistic picture of the star shown on the right hand side of the lobby. The head rested on a genuine silk pillow, a strand of pearls were placed around her neck and real peacock feathers were used. The display was the talk of the city and brought many compliments for the Clemmer and James O. Clemmer, who originated the display.

(Right)

Mr. Clemmer was able to arrange a window display in one of the most exclusive jewelry stores in the city, the feature of which was a cut out of Nazimova draped with jewels. A genuine lavalliere was placed about her neck. Diamonds, rubies and other precious stones were held by her hands. A three carat diamond rested in her "cap." A diamond bracelet was placed on her wrist. On each side of the frame a beautiful pearl necklace was draped.

Charles Perry Takes Advantage of Star's Visit

Violet Heming Reviews "Everywoman" for the Minneapolis Papers

WHEN "Everywoman" was shown at the New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, it had the distinction of being the first feature ever exhibited for which the advance newspaper criticism came from the star of the production. Violet Heming was playing an engagement in "Three Faces East" in Minneapolis, a few days prior to the opening of "Everywoman" at the New Lyric, so manager Charles C. Perry saw an opportunity to obtain some new and unique publicity for his coming engagement of Miss Heming's feature by having the star "review" the production. A showing was arranged for Miss Heming in a local projection. Miss Heming came to the show and then wrote all about it just like a "hard boiled" critic.

Miss Heming's review was a novel one for Minneapolis. She told of the vicissitudes of the company, working under difficult conditions in the wind and snowstorm of powdered asbestos, and gave some light as to the various localities where on the location films were made. Details of her make-up before the film camera proved to be of great interest to theatre-goers, for Miss Heming is now regarded as a popular star in this city and during the showing of the film there was much comment as to her appearance and demeanor in the picture as compared to her acting on the stage.

No other feature film shown in Minneapolis was given so much attention as "Everywoman," by Mr. Perry and his assistants, particularly in the scenic effects which accompanied it. "Nobody," in person, appeared before the curtain and spoke the prologue with the theatre darkened, and as he spoke the names of six of the characters Everywoman, Vice, Modesty, Vanity, Youth and Beauty prototypes of the characters in person appeared in illuminated panels especially in the boxes on either side of the theatre. These models, gorgeously powned, were posed behind painted screens, about six by eight feet in dimension, with backgrounds of tapestry paintings and other settings particularly fitting to the various characters.

Minneapolis people became acquainted with "Nobody" many days before the film was first shown, for "Nobody," mysteriously robed, walked the downtown streets each day. On his garments was the legend, "I am 'Nobody.' I know 'Everybody.'"

The famous symbolic play furnished a basis for a number of unusually attractive advertising captions. Newspaper advertising was elaborate. Layouts with groups of the cast were used profusely. Street car advertising was resorted to and hundreds of street car signs were used in the interiors of the cars. Several thousand lapes were posted conspicuously throughout the city.

Capitol Staging Prologue for Nazimova Picture

THE Capitol theatre, New York, is presenting an atmospheric prologue with its showing of Nazimova in "The Heart of a Child" which merits commendation.

A scene identical with the London slum location in which Sally Snape is first shown in the picture has been produced by artist John Wenger. In front of this set characters made up as are those in the opening scenes of the film dance with an actress impersonating Nazimova in the foreground. The prologue and setting is presented with a net between the audience and the performers.

The whole scene is artistically lighted and at the close of the action the title of the picture is immediately screened on the proscenium drapes with the first scene of the film striking the screen in exact duplication of that which the audience has just viewed in the flesh. It is especially effective since "The Heart of a Child" opens with plenty of action and without the loss of time usually taken up by the introduction of the characters.

Something New in Trade Presentations

Cleveland Trade Showing of "Virgin of Stamboul" Artistic

"PRESENTATION" and "exploitation" those great words in the vocabulary of the picture theatre manager these days have taken on a new meaning through an innovation recently executed by E. J. Smith Universal's exchange manager at Cleveland. It has been the custom since the birth of the industry to "screen" a picture to prospective purchasers in dingy, cold, dismal projection rooms with no music or atmosphere attempted.

Smith has thrown overboard all the traditions of trade showings. He has noticed the results attendant on good exploitation with exhibitors and has concluded that there was a lesson for him in the results achieved. So when he screens a picture now he puts on a regular show and for two reasons.

"In the first place," he says, "I believe that a picture put on with the accompanying trimmings makes a better impression than a picture without trimmings.

"In the second place it greases the road for the salesman and the expense justifies itself in quick returns on bookings and advance advertising."

Smith recently staged a showing for "The Virgin of Stamboul" which is worthy of any first class theatre anywhere. Six hundred exhibitors from all part of Ohio came in to see the picture. At the entrance of the ballroom where the picture was displayed, stood two big burly fellows in Indian costume. They stood there with arms folded just like statues. You knew it was going to be an atmospheric picture before even entering the room. If there was any doubt in your mind about the kind of picture you were to see, this was instantly dispelled when you got well within the portals, for incense was strong. "We burned a couple of hundred pounds of the stuff," said Palmer Slocum, the local Universal publicity man. After getting a nose full of the incense, and being comfortably seated by more costumed Indian ushers, you were further transported into the land of the Orient by Phil Spitalny. Spitalny wields the baton of one of the most popular orchestra in the city. He play regularly at the Metropolitan theatre. His chief part time is to write special symphonic accompaniment to new photo drama.

The result of Smith's efforts was a thoroughly satisfied audience who had seen a picture with all of the "trimmings" and were able to judge just what the feature would look like when it came into their theatres instead of having to imagine what the addition of the "trimmings" would do to make the offering better entertainment.

How the New Lyric of Minneapolis Staged 'Everywoman'

Scenes from the prologue staged by the New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, for the engagement of "Everywoman." For full details see opposite page

One of the most artistic stage settings ever presented in Milwaukee was that which the Alhambra arranged for its showing of "The River's End." A view of this setting is shown on this page

Here is shown Richard's and Nace's youthful "battlers" who created a lot of talk and interest when they toured Phoenix, Arizona in the interests of "The Egg Crate Wallop" showing at one of R and N's local theatres.

Providence Joins Ranks of "Circusers"

THEATRE managers in Providence have held aloof from the so called "circus methods" of exploitation. Each manager of a theatre has waited for the other fellow. They have felt that stunts killed business rather than increased it. They have imagined that the public felt that exploitation of anything but the conservative type meant that a theatre had nothing to show and was adopting methods to get business that the merits of his attraction would not.

However, the ice has been broken. Manager William J. Mahoney has started the ball rolling with his campaign for "In Old Kentucky," and all the old ideas have now been placed in the discard for the feature drew business that broke all records and Manager Mahoney for one is converted to the kind of exploitation that other cities have been using for some time.

Mr. Mahoney's campaign began with the usual newspaper advertising, extra large, however, with plenty of window cards and billboard displays next. Then the "circus" stuff began. The "horse" stuff as related so many times in exploitation stories concerning this picture and a negro band came next.

The band was obtained after quite a search of Providence's residency. After much effort an aggregation of ten of the best horn blowers in the city was assembled and dressed up in some real band uniforms. At their head a colored chap was placed who swung his baton in true circus style.

The "ceremonies" started in front of the theatre at noon with a banquet concert, lasting for 15 minutes. Then came the street parade which wended its way through the several principal downtown streets, and back to the theatre. This scheme was carried on for three days.

Exhibitor Prints Extra To Exploit "Clouds"

"Extra," "Extra" "Xtra" "Xtra."

That was the cry that was heard from the voices of more than twenty-five news boys in Colorado Springs, Colo., one evening last week, and hundreds upon hundreds of people in the community became interested in what the boys had to offer.

The "extra" was a gigantic stunt that Mr. Argust, of the Princess theatre of Colorado Springs was putting over, in connection with the opening of Douglas Fairbanks' latest production "When the Clouds Roll By."

And it went over with a bang.

The "extra" was this. The management had printed in regular newspaper size, a regulation section of the local newspaper, and had it inserted with the regular edition of the paper, calling the "Extra," however, "The Princess Gazette."

The extra contained but two advertisements on the picture and six columns of each page was filled with wonderful stories, written in regular newspaper style, all about the coming of the production, Fairbanks himself, the members of his cast and a number of personality stories. The paper was particularly interesting and created a lot of interest among the townsfolk, and caused the theatre to do record business.

Boy "Pugs" Exploitation Act

LOTS of things have happened to and in Phoenix, Arizona, since the days when Augustus Thomas mentioned it in his play, "Arizona." Among these happenings is the advent of motion pictures and from that a growth in picture exploitation which ranks with the best in any city of its size.

Among the exponents of publicity extraordinary is Richards & Nace, who own and operate five theatres in Phoenix. This firm recently put over "The Egg Crate Wallop" in a new and novel way.

The picture was booked for the Strand. Looking about for something out of the ordinary as an exploitation stunt, A. G. Pickett, upon whom the devising of ways and means of advertising devolves, hit on the idea of having a prize fight staged. A couple of youthful battlers, promising kiddies of the town, were secured. A ring was fixed up on a truck, as will be noticed in the accompanying illustration. The boys were particularly clever with the glove and being of equal weight and liking to "crap" they staged round which were a delight to the average individual.

The float was moved around from corner to corner of the city, where a bout would be staged. The "pug" would work a minute or so in a fast round and then retire to their respective corners for rest while the float moved to a new location.

In addition to the exploitation described above the Strand used diamond shaped string cards. These were used in great quantities on automobiles parked throughout the city and the night before the opening the city was covered with cards by tieing them to door knobs.

From Jacksonville to Portland Oregon and Vice Versa

When "The Luck of the Irish" played Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., Manager Frank Lacey dressed his real Irish usherettes in characteristic Irish costumes, decorated the theatre and lobby in green and otherwise gave over the week to a proper observance of St. Patrick's Day. This cut shows the house staff in their Irish clothes. The photograph was taken in front of a 24 sheet stand on the side wall of the theatre.

Phil Gerson, director of publicity and advertising for the S. A. Lynch houses at Jacksonville, Florida, made arrangements with a local automobile dealer for the display of this hobby car in the lobby of the Arcade theatre during the run of "Double Speed."

California, Los Angeles Presenting Abbreviated Opera

The California's rendition of the favorite operas while condensed are otherwise staged with all the detail and magnificence of the original productions.

Makes Salesmen of Students by Using Tact

A SUGGESTION that will likely open a new line of thought to exhibitors in cities where high schools and colleges stand in local favor and this means everywhere— has been brought about as the result of a recent experience on the part of Julius K. Johnson, manager of the New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis. The most interesting part of Mr. Johnson's plan is the fact that it enables exhibitors to find for their theatres a place in the hearts of the hundred or thousand pupils attending local educational institutions.

For a long time the idea of distributing blotters bearing an advertisement of the theatre or offering reduced admission prices for school children has been tried without sensation or success. Mr. Johnson's idea is a sure-fire winner and especially in towns where exhibitors are provided with a film service that secures the pictures of local events. Mr. Johnson's exploitation occurred only recently when during the showing of "The Fighting Shepherdess" he had 35 press agents among university students telling of the entertainment power of his star and his picture.

The 35 boys represented the basketball squad of the University of Minnesota. Several weeks before Mr. Johnson had 350 feet of film taken of this squad. He held up the showing of this picture until the annual banquet of the basketball boys and immediately following the dinner invited them to see themselves in motion pictures. The invitation was immediately accepted. Anxious to do something to reciprocate for Mr. Johnson's courtesy, the boys each asked for Anita Stewart's photograph. The request was complied with promptly and during the entire week these 35 press agents spread the news of the picture throughout every class room and study hall in the university.

"And the best part of it is that any exhibitor can do it," said Mr. Johnson.

Capitol Opera This Week Is "Le Villi"

"LE VILLI" an opera in two acts by Giacomo Puccini is being presented as the musical portion of the bill at the Capitol theatre, this week.

The Capitol version runs about an hour and is tuneful and well adapted for stock use, giving opportunity for elaborate and colorful costuming.

Artist Wenger has prepared a very pretty set, an exterior with a practical bridge over which the principals make their entrance. Especially effective is the scenery in the second act when the lightings are dimmed to suggest twilight.

The cast of principals for "Le Villi" is a small one containing only three voices, soprano, tenor and baritone. The chorus is used to a considerable extent in both voice and interpretive entrances. The offering for this reason has a considerable appeal as a spectacle.

Latest Walsh Picture Praiseworthy

FOR audiences who enjoy good melodrama, which includes the clientele of most theatres, this latest George Walsh picture can be recommended as a sure fire attraction. For sustained action the production is seldom equalled. The story is a recital of the happenings of a single night and concerns numerous robberies of jewels which pass through many hands before being returned to the safe. Walsh serves as the knight who aids the girl to recover the stolen property in order to keep the name of her suicide brother clear. The star is at his best and Virginia Hammond as the girl gives a good performance. Louis Wolheim is an ideal underworld boss in appearance, but overacts and thereby detracts somewhat from an otherwise flawless interpretation of the role.

The picture has numerous fights, in which Walsh mixes with characteristic vigor as the hero. The direction by George Beranger is far above the average for stories of this class and a careful attention to lightings and detail aid in giving the film distinction. The fact that all the action of the story transpires within a few hours makes possible a practically perfect continuity.

The production gets a running start and keeps going to the very last bit of film. An unusual picture from many angles and an especially good vehicle for the star. To be released on the William Fox program.

Fake Auto Smash-up Gets Attention

A LITTLE thing like an automobile smashup gets the crowds into the theatre, according to Harry Pomeroy, manager of the Strand theatre, Ottawa, Ontario. To arouse excitement over the presentation of the "Speed Maniac," starring Tom Mix, during the last half of the week of March 29, Pomeroy arranged with a local automobile dealer to spill an old automobile in front of the Strand. The car was dumped on its side and left there to be the object of gaze by the passing crowd. Large cards referring to the feature were attached to the wreck. A few weeks previously, Pomeroy had a brand new model shown in the lobby of the Strand as a stunt for an "Automobile Week" and also to boost a picture in which an automobile figured prominently.

In connection with the presentation of the "Speed Maniac," Pomeroy ran special advertisements on the sporting page of the Ottawa Journal which referred to the prize fight episode and the automobile race in the feature. Of further interest to local sport fans, Pomeroy arranged for bulletins on the Stanley Cup series between the Ottawa and Seattle Hockey Clubs, this being for the world's professional hockey championship. These bulletins were announced at interval to the crowded theatre.

Headwork and Coincidence Great Team at Hamilton, O.

Headwork, combined with coincidence, tells the story of how "Goldwyn Week" was "put over" at the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, by the combined efforts of Harry Martin, Director of Publicity for Goldwyn's Cincinnati office, and Fred S. Myers, manager of the Palace.

It so happens that "Goldwyn Week" was also "Holy Week," and by a curious coincidence each of the three Goldwyn features booked for showing at the Palace during the week had a moral twist to it which made it particularly appropriate. The first feature, "The Street Called Straight," which was booked for the first three days, is of a semi-religious nature, and was written by Basil King, a former clergyman. This fact was immediately taken advantage of, and every clergyman in Hamilton was invited to see the picture as the guest of the management of the theatre. As a result of this, one minister used the picture as the basis of his sermon.

The next feature, "The Loves of Letty," has a moral lesson to it. A variation of the "essay contest" was used for exploitation purposes, and a prize of $5 and $3 was offered to the high school boy and grammar school boy, respectively, who sent in the best criticism of the picture. The only restriction on the contest was that the boys had to see the picture in the afternoon. "This was done for two purposes: To keep the boys at home in the evening, and to interest the parents of the boys in the contest," said Harry Martin.

The Friday and Saturday attraction was Will Rogers in "Jubilo," which was advertised as the story of the "Hobo Evangelist." As an exploitation feature "Saxy" Gibson, one of the best saxophone players in the State, was hired and fitted out as a tramp, and paraded the streets playing the song "Jubilo" on his instrument.

Rivoli Presenting Elaborate Musical Number

FOR the presentation of "Treasure Island" at the Rivoli theatre, New York, managing director Reisenfeld has prepared a musical number which is a very appropriate prologue for the feature.

The drapes part showing a scene representing the interior of a tavern with the Rivoli chorus in costume suggestive of the time of the picture, sitting about at tables with steins of beer.

Emanuel List, basso profundo, frequently on the Rivoli bills, sings a solo and the chorus join him at various intervals. The number is titled "Evening in a Tavern."

It was well received by the audience at the performance which the writer attended. The musical selections used were not announced.

How the Middle West Is Putting Over "Kentucky"

A lot has been said and written about the exploitation which "In Old Kentucky" is receiving over the Middle West. On this page we tell a story by photographs which fully illustrates just what this "show" with its "wangdoodle" band is accomplishing. The gentleman with the wide sombrero is E. Johnson, manager of the outfit. C. E. Holah, manager of the First National exchange at Omaha, is the originator of the exploitation idea as applied in this territory

Small Houses Also Get Results With 'Pollyanna' Display

The Ohio theatre of Alliance reports that the exploitation which it gave "Pollyanna" is estimated to have increased the attendance for the week's run of the picture fully thirty per cent. The advertising campaign was begun early and nothing was left undone to inform Alliance people of the engagement. The best bit of publicity was a free matinee for the youngsters of the Alliance Children's Home. On this page is shown the lobby display arranged for the showing and some of the crowd which attended the children's matinee.

Informing Portland Concerning 'The Great Air Robbery'

When Marshall Taylor, manager of the Rivoli theatre, Portland, played "The Great Air Robbery," a truck on which was placed a huge Curtiss seaplane, "The Sea Gull" was one of the exploitation stunts employed. The plane was hauled through the business section of the city the day before the opening of the picture at the Rivoli. The engine of the plane was running. In the plane were seated two pretty Portland girls. Portland streets are rather narrow and the parade of the Sea Gull with its wings extending out each side of the car was a complex problem in automobile driving. It however added to the general interest the public took in the display as the spectators momentarily expected a wreck. The plane and others, brightly illuminated for the event, flew over Portland at night and dropped cards advertising the picture. Manager Taylor's photograph is shown in the left hand upper corner of the layout.

Covered By L. H. MASON

Sig. Schlager, personal representative of J. Parker Read, was in Chicago for a few days last week.

Frank Zambruno is recovering from an operation on his jaw which he underwent last week and it is expected he will be back at his desk within a few days.

Ralph Thomas Kettering, the widely known and popular publicity director of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer Enterprises, is a lucky looking individual and sometimes wear a mustache as we thought he was grown up, but reports are that he is confined to his home with the chicken pox.

It is expected that Robertson-Cole soon will have an exchange building of their own in Chicago to be occupied exclusively by their Chicago exchange. It is reported that the decision to build was arrived at last week when A. S. Kirkpatrick stopped off in Chicago on his way to the coast for a conference with Manager Max Levy. The determination to have a Robertson-Cole exchange building comes after months of futile attempts to line up all the exchanges in Chicago for one building and it is reported that a site at 8th and So. State Streets has been selected and a well known firm of architects already are drawing plans for the proposed building.

Phil H. Solomon, one of the veterans of the picture business in Chicago, has been appointed manager of the Masterpiece Film Distributing Corporation's Chicago office and has already taken charge. Probably no film man in Chicago has a wider acquaintance than Mr. Solomon or is more popular. He recently was connected for two years with Metro and for three and a half years with George Kleine's offices.

Manager Carl Harthill, of the Reelcraft Chicago Exchange, is proudly displaying a letter from I. A. Bunnstine, manager of the Capital theatre, Springfield, Illinois. Part of the letter follows: "Of all the Chaplins that I have booked in the past, and I have bought them all, the 'Champion' did more business than anyone that I have ever had in my house."

Joe Friedman, of the Celebrated Players, has arranged with "film doctor" A. Teitel, to conserve the films of "The Lost City" in order to assure exhibitors that the picture will be in the finest condition.

Messrs. Calloway and Elliot of Greater Stars are back in Chicago again, following a booking trip covering Illinois and Indiana. They ran a neck and neck race and Mr. Calloway reports that exhibitors throughout Illinois are jumping at the chance to book "The Forbidden Woman," and Mr. Elliott has the same report as to Indiana. The two-reel picture of the Stecher-Caddock wrestling match for the world's championship, also is going strong in Greater Stars territory. "The Forbidden Woman" opened in the Ohio theatre in Indianapolis on April 10th and Greater Stars had an exploitation man on the ground for the ten days preceding to put the picture over big.

The Amusement Supply Company is preparing to move from its present quarters in the Mallers Building to the new offices it has taken which comprise one fourth of the second floor of the Consumers Building. The new place of business will give them more space to meet the demands of their rapidly growing trade.

Harry Spanuth of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, has returned from New York where he attended a meeting of independent producers and also gave some private showings of the first of his new "Billy Whiskers" Comedies. The reception given to the first picture was very favorable and Mr. Spanuth expects to complete the second picture this week, after which, he will return to New York to make further plans for the sale and exploitation of the "Billy Whiskers" series.

W. S. Barbee, the opening of whose new De Lux house, Barber's Loop theatre, occurred Saturday night, was host to representatives of the Chicago daily press and trade papers at a luncheon at the Hamilton Club the day preceding the opening. The luncheon was voted by those who attended, as one of the most delightful affairs of the year. Judge Robinson, who is interested in the new house, and J. B. Koppel, assistant manager, helped Mr. Barbee entertain his guests.

April 5th to 30th, inclusive, is S. S. Hutchinson's "tribute month" and the "Flying A" salesman, headed by C. A. Stinson, general sales manager at the Chicago headquarters, are "humping" themselves to win one of the prizes offered by the president of the American Film Company. Substantial prizes will be awarded, first for the most contracts secured on eight big specials, second for the largest amount of business and third for the greatest amount of cash collection business placed for the month.

Marshall Neilan may not know it yet, but he is to be the recipient of a very delightful gift from Miss Blanche Sweet, who has arranged to have a Motiograph shipped from the Enterprise Optical Company, Chicago, to the coast and set up for Mr. Neilan's use in reviewing his pictures. She is taking care to keep the matter secret until the Universal Film Exchange of Chicago contributed liberally to the benefit given at the Circle Theatre, Forest Park, in aid of the tornado sufferers of Melrose Park, Maywood and Forest Park, donating the feature picture entitled "Destiny" and a Century comedy. Walter Hyland, head booker, who has a splendid baritone voice, added to the enjoyment of the affair with a couple of ballads.

A. Teitel at present is engaged in conserving the prints of Clara Kimball Young's feature, "The Forbidden Woman," so that first run exhibitors may be assured that the films will be in same splendid condition in which they found those of "The Eyes Of Youth" which were also treated by Teitel.

Sales Manager Eichenlaub of First National is reorganizing and enlarging his sales staff, the latest additions being H. A. Washburn and T. H. Gibbs, both of whom come from the staff of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and who will cover two of the Illinois districts, and Charles McDaniels who is now Southside city salesman for First National and who also formerly was connected with Famous Players. Mr. Eichenlaub held a conference with all the salesmen under his jurisdiction at the Chicago office this week to plan for an active selling campaign.

"The Idol Dancer" was screened at the Playhouse on Tuesday morning for exhibitors who turned out in goodly numbers and judging by the applause which marked the close of the big feature, approved it. The Riviera orchestra was engaged for the occasion and rendered special music throughout the showing.

Harry Weiss, who recently resigned as manager of First National Exchange, Chicago, has opened an independent exchange to be known as The Superior Screen Service, Inc., and will operate in the states of Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan and Iowa. Superior Screen Service, Inc., will have two departments, a feature department and a commercial department. It is Mr. Weiss's plan to release 26 features a year through the former.

Ray Buys Four Poems Of Hoosier Poet

From the Arthur S. Kane offices comes the news that Charles Ray has just completed purchase in Los Angeles, of four of James Whitcomb Riley's best known poems of American country life. The Riley poems which have been purchased by the First National star are: "The Old Swimming Hole," "The Girl I Loved," "Home Again" and "Out To Old Aunt Mary's."

In a statement issued from his Los Angeles studios, announcing the purchase of the Riley poems, Charles Ray declares that the acquisition of these American classics represents the culmination of a long time ambition [illegible] works of the beloved Hoosier bard on the screen.

Pathe Names Release Date of Features

Release dates on two big forthcoming Pathe features, are announced for the first time this week by Pathe Exchange, Inc. Frank Keenan's next attraction, "Dollar for Dollar," will be released on May 2. The following week Hobart Henley's production, "The Miracle of Money," will make its first appearance.

"Dollar for Dollar" was adapted by Mr. Keenan from a well-known story, by Ethel Watts Mumford, noted playwright and magazine writer. "The Miracle of Money" is distinctly American, and Hobart Henley adapted the play from a short story by Beulah Poynter, "The Marrying of Emily."

"Romance" Almost Ready

Doris Keane Is Working on Last Scenes of United Artists' Film

WITH plans to leave for Europe in a few weeks, Miss Doris Keane is finishing the last scenes of her stage success, "Romance," by Edward Sheldon, in which she will make her screen debut, her first picture to be released in May by United Artists Corporation. The final scenes are being "shot" by Chet Whitney, her director, and it is predicted that this love story will be one of the year's screen sensations.

The United Artists has submitted the following description of the story's theme and setting:

"'Romance' is indeed worthy of its title. From the outset to the end, the story diffuses a rich and mellow charm. Mr. Sheldon has written a story that makes you look upon old passions through a mist of reminiscence and to that end he enclosed his picture within a prologue and an epilogue. By this expedient he has set his story at a distance that lends enchantment to the view.

"In the beginning of the story a young man of today, who has made up his mind to marry an actress, comes to ask the consent of his grandfather, who is the Bishop of New York. When the old man endeavors to dissuade him from his purpose, the youth accuses him of having forgotten what it is to be young and eagerly in love. Thereupon the Bishop leans back in his armchair by the fire and tells the story of his own love, over forty years before, for the famous opera singer, Cavalini. At the conclusion of the recital of the old romance, the young man insists that he is more than ever determined to marry the young woman he has chosen, and the Bishop, awakened to sympathy by his own pathetic recollection, finally consents and gives the youth his blessings.

"It is the Bishop's love-story that constitutes the picture. It happens during the most romantic period of New York; and in evoking the atmosphere of that time, the author has employed his inimitable talent for accuracy and detail so well that he makes one regret the comfortable homeliness that our hasty cities have discarded.

Picture Camera Is To Invade White House

President Wilson has given permission for the Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to film the portraits of the presidents of the United States in the rooms and galleries of the White House, these pictures to be used in "Our Presidents," a motion picture being made for use in the public and private schools of the country.

"Doug" Fairbanks will be seen in a real old-fashioned romantic melodrama soon. The title is "The Mollycoddle." The picture will be released by United Artists

Screenkrafters Receive Many New Contracts

The Screenkrafters, comprised of Carl Coolidge, William Pigott and Dorothy Rockfort, who recently opened offices in Hollywood and announced their intention to specialize in the preparation of stories for the screen, and collaborate with directors and producers in the making, editing and titling of film plays, have made a number of contracts which will keep their organization busy for the immediate future.

In addition to the work now before the Screenkrafters, they recently prepared the adaptation for the Benny Leonard serial for Asher Enterprises, Inc., having written two other serials, five feature stories, nine comedies, and continuities and stories for the Texas Guinan organization.

New Series Announced to State Righters

Blazed Trail Productions, Inc., releasing through the Arrow Film Corporation has announced its plan to produce a series of five-reel productions at its Canada Lake studio in the Adirondacks. This company has completed a series of twelve two-reel subjects, which were based upon the adventures of a particularly daring and courageous member of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police.

John Lowell and Miss Dakota Lawrence, the featured players in the short subjects, have been placed under contract for the special five-reelers, and actual production will have been started, it is believed, within a month. A new studio is being erected on the shores of Canada Lake.

Exhibitors Eager for the Second "Edgar"

The triumph of the first Booth Tarkington Edgar Comedy, "Edgar and Teacher's Pet" that has been welcomed at first run theatres in all parts of the country as a fresh and entertaining photoplay, has led to a big demand for "Edgar's Hamlet," the second in the series of two-reel pictures produced by Goldwyn.

"American Film Makes Good"

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Company, Inc., has issued a statement, reviewing the past performances of the "Flying A" and indicating some of the things the American Film expects to accomplish in the future. Regarding the past achievements of the company, Mr. Hutchinson says he feels that the organization has "made good" all the promises previously reported. The statement follows:

"At the beginning of the present season, six months ago, I made the statement that American Film Company would in the future make only big special features, had ceased entirely the making of program pictures. I promised the exhibitors of America that America intended to handle each picture as a separate entity, working as though that production were the only one we expected to make and that our whole future depended upon its making good 1,000%, with the exhibitors that was my promise to the exhibitors of the country. Now we have progressed to the point where we can look back over the past and record the fulfillment of my promises.

"Our first release under the new policy was 'Six Feet Four,' made from Jackson Gregory's novel of the same title, a story that had been read by millions. William Russell was the star in it and seldom if ever appeared to better advantage. It has played in the foremost theatres in America. It was instantly acclaimed by the public. Every exhibitor who has shown it has made big money with it. It is still an attraction extraordinary one which is playing to capacity business wherever it is being shown.

"The same sort of report can be made on the American specials which followed. We invite anyone to look up the records of the success scored by such 'Flying A' pictures as 'The Hellion,' 'Eve in Exile,' 'The Valley of Tomorrow,' 'The Dangerous Talent,' 'The Honey Bee' and 'Slam Bang Jim.' You'll find that every last one of them has been a big money maker. We are proud of them. The exhibitor has been pleased at the way they made good for him. The theatre patrons enjoyed them. They stand as a record of promises fulfilled. Reports from exhibitors everywhere prove we have made good not only for ourselves but for them.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc.

"Now with reference to American's policy for the future," went on President Hutchinson, "I am happy to declare without reservation that our offerings for the next six months of the season will surpass in every respect those already issued. Our forthcoming attractions are based on the works of noted writers, stories which have been tremendous successes in fiction form, stories which are in every way suitable for presentation in film.

"In a few moments a few names we shall within the next few months offer big special features based on stories by such writers as Albert Payson Terhune, Henry Russell Miller, David Anderson, Cosmo Hamilton, P. G. Wodehouse, and some attractions specially written for the screen by Lois Zellner.

"Capable directors and competent players have arranged and enacted these vehicles in such a manner that they will have an even more powerful appeal in their celluloid form than they had as fiction stories. One of our early releases is 'The Thirtieth Piece of Silver,' from Albert Payson Terhune's novel of the same title. It is a highly dramatic offering showing what happened to the last of the thirty pieces of silver said to have been given Judas for betraying Christ. It is a modern story in every respect and will keep any audience guessing as to its outcome. Included in the cast interpreting it are Margarita Fisher, King Baggot, Forrest Stanley, Lillian Leighton and many other favorites.

"Seena Owen and Pell Trenton are the featured leads in The House of Toys' adapted from Henry Russell Miler's popular novel and in their support will be found such players as Helen Jerome Eddy, George Hernandez, Henry Barrows, Marian Skinner, Nanine Wright, Perry Banks and Stanhope Wheatcroft. Milton Sills and Margarita Fisher appear in Cosmo Hamilton's 'The Week-End,' aided by Bertram Grasby, Harvey Clark, Alice Wilson and Mayme Kelso. In David Anderson's novel 'The Blue Moon,' one of Bobbs-Merrill Company's best selling books, are Pell Trenton, Eleanor Field, Harry Northrup, Herbert Standing, Margaret McWade, James Gordon and Sidney Franklin. The same sort of competent casts appear in Lois Zellner's 'The Gamesters' and 'Payment Guaranteed,' in P. G. Wodehouse's 'Their Mutual Child' and in 'Peggy Rebels' adapted from 'The Mate of the Sally Ann.'"

Expert Hired To [illegible] Wm. Farnum Settings

William Fox has engaged Thomas Warrilow, one of the finest technical men in the business, to design and execute architectural and decorative plans for William Farnum's forthcoming production, "The Joyous Trouble Maker," work upon which has started under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards at the Fox West Coast Studios, Hollywood.

On the day following Mr. Warrilow's arrival at the Coast work was started upon the interior set for "The Joyous Trouble Maker," which is the largest and finest that has ever been put up in the Fox studios. It occupies all of one stage, the dimensions of which are 100 by 250 feet. A firm believer that a thing half done is but a makeshift, thus detracting from the value of the picture, Mr. Warrilow had the Farnum set constructed and decorated just as though the star expected to live there for the next ten years, says Fox.

"The Woman He Chose' A Swedish Product

The Ziegfeld theatre, Chicago, was the scene on April 10th of the American debut of the Swedish six-reel production, "The Woman He Chose." This picture is based on "The Girl from the Marsch-croft," a story written by Dr. Selma Lagerlof, who has received the Nobel prize for literature. The cast is said to be an ensemble of artists excellently fitted to their respective roles, and the scenery is described as possessing a touch of newness. The Mickey Film Corporation of Chicago controls the world rights to the Swedish picture.

Authors Engaged by Universal

C. DE VIDAL HUNDT, a literary agent, who the past seven months has been scouring the continent of Europe for good screen stories for Universal has returned to Universal City with the information that some of the greatest men of European letters now are writing stories for Universal pictures.

Vidal Hundt went on his quest because it was believed that American film producers are better able to do justice to the high-class literature of foreign writers than the war ridden film industry in either France, England or Germany. Foreign authors have been quick to realize this fact and to serve eagerly upon the chance to write for Universal, Vidal Hundt reports.

Among those from whom Hundt is to obtain extraordinary stories are Henri Bordeaux of the French Academy, Anatole France, one of France's "forty immortals," Marcel Prevost, Jean Richepin, Henri Bataille, George de Porto Riche, Andre Antoine, Henry Duvernois, known as the French Mark Twain; Andre de Gorde, Paul Reboux, Henri Barbusse, author of "The Fire", Rene Benjamin, author of "Gaspard"; Duchanel, great romanticist and author of "Civilization", Max Maurey, dramatist and stage director of the "Varietes"; George Ricou, secretary general of the Comedie Francaise, and the immortal Sarah Bernhardt.

"None of these have ever written for the films before," Mr. Hundt decares, "but they all realize the tremendous possibilities of their latent genius to evolve great screen situations which, they think will surpass those of the more prosaic Anglo-Saxon minds.

"Without exception these great men regard the cinema as the greatest interpreter of human emotions and missionary for good, just as it might be the greatest agency for evil. They believe it not impossible that the screen may even replace the influence of newspapers. Their decision to write stories for Universal marks the beginning of tremendous competition among the great intellects of Europe for supremacy on the screen."

With Jean Jose Frappa, publisher of the Monde Illustre and author of a number of dramas, the Fabien Sollar, author of "Phi Phi" and other successes, Hundt, while in Paris formed what will be known internationally as "The Constellation of Film Stories Ltd.," and which will operate under the auspices of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Through this organization Universal expects to acquire screen material from all the great writers of Europe.

"Henri Bataille, author of 'L'Animateur,' one of the greatest Parisian stage successes, expects to spend the coming summer in his chateau on the coast of Normandy to develop big film ideas that he has in mind for some time," Mr. Hundt stated on his arrival at Universal City. "Bataille said the limitations of the stage have always hampered, to some extent, the development of the drama, but that with a great organization like Universal willing to work on a gigantic scale he hopes to do things in pictures that will attract world attention.

"The famous French author referred to the naivete of American plots, saying writers in the United States had done beautiful things but had failed in reaching the great heights of the silent drama.

"Sarah Bernhardt is now writing for Universal the scenario of 'My Little Idol,'" Mr. Hundt continued. "This story is now appearing serially in one of the big French dailies."

IN PLANNING YOUR BOOKINGS KEEP IN MIND THESE GREAT SPECIALS BY GREAT AUTHORS

METRO has always believed that the STORY was a vital element in the success of any great picture. METRO'S big stars, therefore, are invariably presented in plays that possess, in addition to skillful construction and powerful themes, the prestige of world-famous authorship.

METRO pictures, already known throughout the world as the "FEWER and BETTER" kind, are all made either from famous stage successes, or novels that have achieved world renown, from the pens of novelists whose names are household words.

There is no exception to this rule. METRO has cornered the literary market. METRO stars, like precious jewels, are always framed in a setting of highest artistic merit, from the standpoint of the story of the photodrama.

When you glance over the titles of METRO'S current and past productions, you will note that EVERY AUTHOR IS FAMOUS. Read and understand why Metro's BIG ONES should be tabbed in your note-book for future reference and-all-the-year-round profits.

Double Release Date Is Named by Hodkinson

April 25th is announced by the Hodkinson organization as the release date of Augustus Thomas "The Harvest Moon," the Deitrich-Beck production starring Doris Kenyon, which, along with "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," the Gibraltar-Louis Joseph Vance production, starring Leah Baird, will be the subject of a double trade showing at all Hodkinson exchanges the coming week.

"The Harvest Moon," conceded to be one of Doris Kenyon's fine screen achievements, has been booked for pre-release engagements at the Kenyon, Pittsburgh, Pa.; the Rex, Ottumwa, Ia.; the Grand, Reading, Pa., and at the Casino, Chester, Pa.

Miss Baird's cast in "Cynthia-of-the-Minute" includes Burr McIntosh, famous for his work in "Trilby" and "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" series; Hugh Thompson, Alexander Gaden, Mathilda Brundage and Billy Welch. The production was directed by Perry Vekroff.

McCutcheon Novel is Picturized by Edgar Lewis

Edgar Lewis' second production for Pathe will be a picturization of a story by George Barr McCutcheon. It is none other than "Sherry," one of the most popular of the author's works.

"Sherry" has been filmed by Mr. Lewis in seven parts, the adaptation of the novel being made by Frances Guihan, well-known continuity writer. Heading the cast is Pat O'Malley, who will play the part of Sheridan Redpath. James Burton is played by Harry Spingler. The cast also includes Alfred Fisher and Gertrude Norman. Lillian Hall, one of the most beautiful leading women on the screen, is The Girl. "Sherry" is a small town story—the plot being laid in the Middle West.

Winchell Smith Began As Property Man

Winchell Smith, who is supervising the production of his play "The New Henrietta," for Metro, under the title of "The Saphead," has been in the theatrical business since he was eighteen years old. At that time Mr. Smith joined a company in New York City as assistant property man. After various promotions he was made the stage director. But Mr. Smith wanted to be an actor, and after three years he got his chance in a small part in "The Prodigal Daughter." Next, play-writing engaged his attention. Mr. Smith is on every set for the picture and takes an active part in the work connected with it at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Carpentier Makes Good Actor

Reports from Studio Say Fighter Has Screen Talent

GEORGES CARPENTIER, the French sportsman, gentleman, athlete and soldier, now at work at the Solax Studio, New Jersey, on the super-special production which is to be presented by Robertson-Cole, would be a great success on the screen even without his many-sided fame, according to men who have watched his work in the past few days.

"It can never be said that Carpentier is a freak of the studio," said John G. Adolfi, who is directing the picture in which the noted Frenchman will appear, "This man stands head and shoulders over any other person who has been put into a motion picture for the purpose of capitalizing his publicity. By this I mean that Carpentier is a real actor. He doesn't have to rely on what the world knows about him to be a success."

Work on the Carpentier picture is going steadily on in the Solax Studios day and night. Director John G. Adolfi is the busiest man about the place. He is giving the picture his individed attention upwards of twelve hours every day and putting into this production all the artistry of which he is capable.

Twice recently the entire studio has been made over into elaborate setting which will be used in the Carpentier picture. Recently the studio took on the appearance of a gentleman's country club. It was sumptuously furnished after the manner of most exclusive club houses which are found in regions of great scenic beauty near the largest American cities. After the taking of these scenes, the complete character of the studio was changed and it was made into a large gymnasium, wherein will be shown the scenes introducing Carpentier as a boxer and athlete. This necessitated the transfer from the city of a great deal of gymnastic apparatus. Once again the character of the studio was changed and great ball room scene shown. So large was this setting, that an extra stage had to be built outside the studio. It was while making this scene, recently, that 500 extra people were used all one night, on one occasion, when the scenes showing the height of a great ball were taken. A picturesque part of this scene is a large fountain with the water playing.

Mr. Carpentier is very much interested in the work, and is giving it his undivided time. He is still living at the Biltmore with his family and makes the trip to New Jersey daily by motor. He is at the studio at least ten hours every day.

While neither the name nor the synopsis of the Carpentier picture are at present being given out, it is understood that the production will be an American society drama which will give the noted French athlete and soldier a romantic role. Of course provision is being made for his appearance in a sparring match. This will be the first appearance in real fighting which Carpentier makes in America.

South Has Big Possibilities

New Industries Bring Prosperity to "Solid South," Says W. T. Yoder

WITH oil, cotton, and agricultural products reaching new high marks and with millions of dollars in new capital going into Southern States for the financing of new factories a great era of prosperity is at hand for the Solid South, according to William Thomas Yoder, known throughout Texas as "Colonel Bill," who has just been placed in charge of the Southern Division for Pathe. After a brief survey of the territory, Mr. Yoder has reported his observations to the Pathe Home Office.

"Most important from the viewpoint of the man in the show business is the continuous growth of the towns and cities," said Mr. Yoder "Of course, new factories are responsible for much of this increase in population. Manufacturing cities were rare in the South until quite recently. Now, however, factories are going up rapidly, and New England will find an industrial rival in the great Southern mills in a short time.

"The men who have been giving the South its motion picture entertainment, the exhibitors, are meeting the change of standards and the demand for better pictures with every possible effort. But they must have the support of all producers. Help them in their effort to capture and hold the interest of the growing public with real good pictures.

Pathe Screens "Little Cafe"

Stage Play Picturized with Max Linder As Its Star

WITH Max Linder, the French comedian, in the stellar role the stage success, "The Little Cafe," is to be released by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., as a Pathe Special production. The picture is said to bring out some of the finest work of Linder's career and those who witnessed the first showing of the completed film were of the opinion that it will be hailed by the public as a great screen comedy.

Although the original stage part was played by John E. Young, at the New Amsterdam theatre in New York City, and the story was not primarily intended for Mr. Linder in screen work, it is said that the star character fits the talents of the French comedian to perfection. His deft touches of humor throughout, his mannerisms, and eccentricities are all given full play in the part of a millionaire waiter who is compelled to remain at work in a restaurant by the terms of his contract, although he has been left two million francs.

With the release of the production a new female star peeps above the horizon in the person of Wanda Lyon, who plays the leading role opposite Linder. Miss Lyon will be remembered for her striking success at the Winter Garden in New York City, where she appeared in a few of the Passing Shows. She also played an important part in Al Jolson's show, "Robinson Crusoe, Jr." Her stage comedy training makes itself evident in the manner in which her delightful personality gets into the Linder picture.

The success of the stage comedy augurs well for the screen version, for it played in many cities of importance in the country and was a financial success. The play also gained great popularity in London and other leading cities. The many odd situations, necessarily confined to the limits of the stage settings, are expanded in the screen production so that they can be appreciated at their true value.

As has been indicated, Linder plays the part of a waiter in "The Little Cafe." The proprietor of the cafe and an accomplice have tricked him into signing a contract agreeing to pay them a forfeit of 500,000 francs if he quits his job as a waiter. He signs for twenty years and when the contract is in effect they tell him that he is heir to 2,000,000 francs. The conspirators of course expected the waiter to pay 500,000 francs and quit immediately.

The millionaire waiter, however, decides not to be blackmailed and he stays right on his job from eight a. m. to ten p. m. Between those hours he is a gay lothario of the restaurants and a figure in the night life of Paris. The picture is full of color and life, showing the adventures of the hero in the cabarets and among the Parisian actresses who are never seen on the stage.

The revelation of the night life in Paris and the adventures of the waiter brings into the production some of the finest sets ever prepared for the American theatre. The gay Cascade Pavillion where the waiter hurries to be waited upon after his duties at "The Little Cafe" is constructed after the design of one of the most famous amusement resorts in the French Capital. It is a massive set with scores of dancing couples, orchestras, and hurrying waiters, and in point of splendor cannot be surpassed.

Neilan Wants Cleaner Pictures

Will Silence Censors and in End Prove More Profitable

THERE are a few remaining producers who still think that motion pictures bordering on the sensuous are in public demand, says a statement from the Marshall Neilan Production offices. Among those who have most recently attacked this practice as applied not only to motion pictures themselves but to the advertising matter prepared for these pictures, is Marshall Neilan, the young director-producer responsible for "The River's End," "Daddy Long Legs," "In Old Kentucky," and similar pictures.

In this connection, Mr. Neilan says: "There has always been good and bad in everything and perhaps always will be. The motion picture industry is no exception, and there seems to be keen competition among a few directors to see who can make the most suggestive photoplay and still keep within the law. The days of these producers are numbered professionally unless they change their type of work.

"The future will bring cleaner, more wholesome pictures than we have had in the past. Most producers have already realized the fact from a commercial standpoint, pictures that are entirely free from suggestiveness, are by far the most successful and the same motives which prompted unclean pictures in the past will ultimately cause the great majority of directors to eliminate filth from their productions in the future.

"It is a matter of record that the greatest successes from a financial standpoint in the history of the screen have been absolutely free from any taint of suggestiveness. 'The Birth of a Nation,' 'The Miracle Man,' 'Civilization,' 'Daddy Long Legs'; these are only a few of the great screen triumphs I can name which were fit for any man, woman or child to see.

"Recently Thomas H. Ince, Maurice Tourneur, Allan Dwan, Mack Sennett, George Loane Tucker and myself combined to make pictures independent of outside affiliations, and one of the principal points agreed upon was that every one of our productions shall stand for cleanliness if nothing else.

"The day has arrived when exhibitors have given their support to keep the screen clean, by refusing to permit the exhibition of films that might tend to encourage censorship fanatics. No exhibitor who expects to maintain a steady patronage from family audiences can afford to show any picture that he would not show his own children. The public has been educated to the point where it selects its entertainment first by those who are responsible for it, just as it buys its books by past achievements of the author, and second by the theatre that shows it. If they are in doubt about the type of pictures made by a certain producer, their selection of an evening's entertainment will be governed largely by the theatre that offers it. If they know that a certain theatre shows nothing but clean pictures, they patronize that theatre.

"Through natural evolution the screen is being cleansed. Looking at it from a purely mercenary viewpoint, it does not pay to produce anything but clean pictures.

"No established producer will jeopardize his reputation and those who have none to jeopardize will soon realize that they will never attain success via any but the clean route.

"Then again there are certain distributors that do the industry harm by the type of advertising material they use. Even if the picture is harmless, some seem to think by preparing paper that will appeal to the morbid element in human nature, a great box office attraction is created. Sometimes this is done under the guise of 'art' and other times it is a bold illustration or a suggestive caption.

"Nothing can be gained not even for those who perpetrate this kind of advertising while on the other hand, a direct blow to the entire industry is registered.

"A movement, such as that started by the National Association, some time ago, to take steps to prevent the showing of unclean pictures should be encouraged and enlarged. Let us clean house from within, and there will be less energy necessary to fight outside opposition."

Picture with Moral Appeal

Madlaine Traverse Given Strong Role; Paul Cazeneuve Is Director

"A PICTURE with a great moral lesson" is a description given of "The Spirit of Good," the latest starring vehicle of Madlaine Traverse, Fox star, which will introduce to the screen a new director in the person of Paul Cazeneuve.

The story is of a brave fight for right against seemingly overpowering odds, it is stated. From the bright lights of Broadway to the dance halls and gambling dens of the last frontier, the heroine passes. Her reformation why and how she changed her way of life and with it the life of a community is said to be exceptionally well presented in this production.

Madlaine Traverse is stated to be at her very best as the shimmy-loving, daring woman who feels that the world owes her a living and is collecting it in the easiest way. Then comes the spark that lights the fire of love, and Miss Traverse vividly depicts the transition of the woman from dance hall queen to leader of the forces of right in the community.

"It is a powerful role," declares the report from the Fox Film headquarters, "and required a powerful emotional actress to bring to it the finish that would raise it from the level of cheap melodrama to the heights of real art. Miss Traverse has done this—done it with rare refinement and with extraordinary force. It is in many ways her best role to date, and to its enactment she brings the full measure of her great ability.

"Paul Cazeneuve, who in the handling of the megaphone in "The Spirit of Good" brings to the screen forty years of experience on the dramatic stage, has put into the production every expedient that is known to the stage. His story is a big one, but he has not forgotten those little human touches, those bits of comedy, those flashes of heart interest which add materially to the drawing-value and to the sustained interest of a picture."

Vitagraph Has Bookings All Along Broadway

Ragland Made Vice-President

Former Sales Manager Has Executive Post in Kane Pictures

At a meeting of the directors of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation on Thursday, April 8th, John C. Ragland was elected vice-president. Mr. Ragland resigned as general sales manager of Realart Pictures Corporation several weeks ago to become general manager and director in the Kane corporation.

The elevation of Mr. Ragland to a high post in the young producing company follows only a few weeks after his resignation from Realart Pictures and represents the confidence of the directors of the organization in the qualifications of Mr. Ragland to consummate with President Kane the contemporaneous projects of the corporation.

The meeting of the directors of the Kane corporation, which was held in the new offices of the concern at 25 West 43rd street, New York, was called especially to inaugurate Mr. Ragland into his new post in conjunction with the formal occupation of the permanent home of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation.

In announcing the election of Mr. Ragland to the vice presidency of the company, President Arthur S. Kane issued the following statement:

"It is a distinct pleasure for me to give out the news of the election on Thursday, April 8th, of John C. Ragland to be vice president of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation. The election of Mr. Ragland took place at a meeting of directors called especially at the new and permanent offices of the company.

"Although Mr. Ragland has only recently become a member of our corporation, we have lost no time in acknowledging our confidence and faith in his ability to judiciously carry on the early work of organization. The past record of Mr. Ragland is well known to officials of this company, not alone his splendid achievements as general sales manager for Realart Pictures, but his long dealings with exhibitors in various territories and his experience in many branches of the theatrical business.

"We are now in a position to proceed with a program for the future which will require the cooperation of a man of Mr. Ragland's definite acquaintance with conditions in the field. In the sales organization of the entire industry there is perhaps no individual better posted on the technical financial problems of picture selling and exhibiting than Mr. Ragland, and his election to vice-president of this company represents our faith in his ability to accurately assess the possibilities of producing units equitably from the point of view of both distributor and exhibitor."

Mr. Ragland, prior to his connection with Realart as general sales manager, was manager of the St. Louis office of that concern. He has had a long career in the theatrical and motion picture businesses and possesses a wide background of experience gained during a service which began in theatre management and progressed through sales activity to executive positions with Select and Realart Pictures.

The new vice-president of Kane Pictures issued the following statement after he was informed by the directors of his election to the new position:

"The honor that has been conferred upon me by President Kane and our fellow directors in the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation comes as a total surprise to me. It is gratifying beyond words to find that I enjoy the entire confidence of officials of this concern in the activties which are now in process of negotiation.

"We have in view at the present writing several large projects of considerable interest to exhibitors which we trust we will be able to announce in the near future. As vice-president of the Kane corporation it will be my especial honor and privilege to uphold those high standards of honesty and plain dealing which have become so closely associated in the past with the name and activities of Arthur S. Kane."

U. S. Films Win On Merit

American Screen Never Ruled Off Foreign Photoplays Says Howells

"THE American screen has never barred the foreign film, and never will. World progress and the advance of civilization forbid it. The development of the industry makes it impossible."

David P. Howells, international distributor connected with First National, gave this answer today to a misinterpretation of his recent interview in which he charged that American exporters, discouraged by unfavorable rates of exchange, were "deserting under fire."

Mr. Howells made clear, in no uncertain terms, his opinion of international film conditions, and expressed his sincere belief that the foreign film, recovering from the handicaps of production during the war and early reconstruction, would find its place on the American screen.

"The war interrupted picture making in Europe," stated Mr. Howells. "The best brains of all Europe turned to the business of making war. Art stood still.

"The more liberal minded men in the industry in Europe admit that the reason that foreign films have not been accepted by the American public during the last several years is because the standard of foreign production has fallen so far short of the standard of American production.

Robertson-Cole to Handle "So Long Letty"

Robertson-Cole has signed a contract with the Christie Film Company for "So Long Letty," the celebrated Morosco stage success, which was one of the most powerful box office attractions during the four years in which it was seen.

"So Long Letty" won wide fame for Miss Charlotte Greenwood, who played the leading role in it. It was produced on the Pacific Coast, in Los Angeles, in 1916, and only finished its long stage career a few months ago. After a sensational success on the Coast it was moved to New York, where it began its long run at the Shubert theatre. Here it ran for many months, following this engagement with a tour of the country, which lasted for three seasons.

"So Long Letty" will be the first Christie-Robertson-Cole picture, and both the distributing corporation and the producer are doing everything which will tend to make the initial production one which will win handsomely when tested by the public, it is stated.

Professor Helps Title Educational Picture

Dr. Robert F. Griggs, of Ohio State University and director of the various expeditions of the National Geographic Society sent to investigate the effects of the Mount Katmai, Alaska, eruption, returned to Columbus this week after spending several days assisting Educational Films Corporation in editing and titling the expedition's pictures which it will distribute.

While the technical has been avoided in these productions, they are absolutely correct from the scientific viewpoint and the assistance of Dr. Griggs in supplying the illuminative titles has been very valuable. Release of these pictures will mark the first relations of the National Geographical Society with a motion picture organization.

Universal's Special Is Winning

Heavy Booking Among First-Run Houses of Big Cities

UNIVERSAL is said to be scoring heavily with "The Virgin of Stamboul," Priscilla Dean's big Oriental picture. Already first run houses in almost all of the principal cities have booked the production. In almost every city elaborate exploitation "stunts" are being arranged to put it across, announces Universal.

Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal, says the sales campaign for the new picture is the biggest and fastest thing ever handled by that company.

"We did not get thie prints into the hands of our branch exchanges until March 20," he said. "In three weeks, leading theatres in ninety per cent of the big cities had contracted to run the picture, with play dates early in May.

"The seventy-seven day booking over the Loew Circuit in and around New York, has been followed by a forty-seven-day booking over the Fox Circuit in the same territory. These two contracts alone, with the four weeks' run at B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre will make one of the most complete New York City showings a Universal picture ever had. The showing at the Broadway theatre has been a great surprise. Instead of dropping off during the third and fourth weeks, the attendance actually increased. The picture is a money maker, even on Broadway.

"It has been shown already in several other theatres. In the Rialto theatre, Washington, D. C., it crowded the house for the week of April 5. Tom Moore, of the Rialto, gave it the most expensive staging and the biggest exploitation ever undertaken by him for any picture.

"Another early showing of the picture, in the Ansonia theatre, Butte, Mont., it broke all house records despite adverse conditions in that city—restaurants strikes, strikes in all building crafts, and the most severe Easter weather on record in that locality. In addition, all opposition houses were offering the best productions obtainable for Easter.

"After several days of clever exploitation along the lines utilized in New York City, William Cutts, of the Kinema theatre, Salt Lake City, packed his doors during the week of April 5.

"Among the other houses in which 'The Virgin of Stamboul' is booked for a six or seven day run at early dates, are the Lubiner and Trinz and the Asher Brothers' Circuits in Chicago, the playhouse, Chicago; the Columbia, Pittsburgh, the Washington, Detroit; the Liberty, Denver; Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo; the Stillman, Cleveland; the Park, Boston; the Alhambra, Milwaukee; the Southern, Columbus; the Columbus, Dayton, the Walnut, Louisville; the Rivoli, Portland, Oregon; the Superba, Los Angeles; the Fox Terminal, Newark, the Clemmer, Spokane; the Pickwick, San Diego, Cal., the Victor, McKeesport, Pa.; the Lamb, Ranger, Tex.; and also in Fort Worth.

"We thought we established a lasting record in handling the sale and exploitation of 'The Heart of Humanity,' but it does not compare with the speeding up that has been necessary for 'The Virgin of Stamboul.' The picture was ready sooner than had been expected. It was so big it could not be held. The advertising, publicity and exploitation departments have been working at top speed to prepare the way, with the picture already booked country advertising, publicity and exploitation campaign has many more weeks to run. It is just getting well under way.

"It looks as if Miss Dean's big picture is going to smash all Universal records by a wide margin. A lot of other records, too, I believe."

"Forbidden Woman" a Hit

Box Office Receipts in New York Quoted to Prove Its Popularity

MANY reports have been received by Sam Zierler, president of the Commonwealth Film Corporation which distributes the Equity Clara Kimball Young pictures in New York State, recently, telling of the success with which "The Forbidden Woman," Miss Young's second Equity production, is meeting on its bookings throughout the Fox houses and Loew circuit. The Ridgewood, Audubon, Academy of Music and Crotona theatres have played to capacity houses. On the Loew circuit, more than sixty theatres situated between Fourteenth street and 181st street are showing, or will show, "The Forbidden Woman" during the weeks of April 12th and 19th.

"All the exhibitors tell me they are making money," said Mr Zierler, "and my own observation confirms this. According to letters, telegrams and newspaper clippings received this week at Equity's New York offices, "The Forbidden Woman" is breaking records throughout the country and has, in

"For the next few weeks thirty-nine prints of 'The Forbidden Woman' will be occupied on first runs in New York State alone," stated the Commonwealth head.

Larger Construction Plans

Robertson-Cole Acquires Corner Plot on Seventh Avenue, 48th St.

ROBERTSON-COLE has made a quick shift in its building plans to include the addition of the northwest corner of Forty-eighth Street and Seventh Avenue, permitting the building of a much larger and more commodious structure than was intended in the original plans, announced two weeks ago. With the addition of the corner lot the building will now include everything from the corner of Forty-eighth Street along Seventh Avenue to No. 725, affording a great deal more space on the ground floor and those above.

The original intention of Robertson-Cole was to erect a ten-story building. But with the purchase of the additional space it has abandoned this plan, and the building will now be made twelve stories in height, and of such construction that additional stories may be later added if they are needed.

The entire transaction was negotiated for Robertson-Cole by Wm. A. White & Sons, of 46 Cedar Street, New York City. Revised plans for the office building on Seventh Avenue are now being drawn by architects F. H. Dewey and Company, and Howard Greenley of the Flatiron Building. Plans for the building, as it will now be, are being rushed and construction work will be started by Wharton Green & Co. of 37 West Thirty-ninth Street, at the earliest possible time.

The plans for the building show that it will be entirely fire proof with cement arches and cement floors. Steel window frames will be used throughout and no wood will enter into the construction whatever.

Dwan Picture is Finished

Print of "Splendid Hazard" Now in New York Mayflower Office

ALLAN DWAN'S film adaptation of Harold MacGrath's novel, "A Splendid Hazard," has arrived at the New York offices of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. It had a special preliminary presentation at the Brunton Studios at Los Angeles. According to telegraphic advices the artistic merit of its photography and the cast, from the standpoint of acting and characterization, should make it an unusual production. Those who witnessed the presentation united in describing it as a "motion picture grand opera."

Mr. Dwan took special pains to secure absolute fidelity of detail. Much of the action is centered in Corsica, the quaintly picturesque island on which Napoleon, the inspiration of the novel, was born, therefore, there is fine opportunity for the exploitation of the haunting beauties of that historic isle.

In the work of convincingly reproducing those scenic effects, Mr. Dwan was assisted by Mrs. Harold MacGrath, who had gone over the locations figuring in her husband's novel. She made many photographs of the scenic features, supplemented by a wealth of pictures of people. costumes and local customs, all of which were placed at the disposal of Mr. Dwan.

It is also announced that to the secret picture upon which Director Emile Chautard has been hard at work for several months has been completed. A competition among the personnel of the Mayflower Corporation is now in progress, the object of which is to select an appropriate title.

Prisoners See "Alias Jimmy Valentine"

Three hundred convicts, including forty-six who are serving life sentences, applauded a special projection of "Alias Jimmy Valentine" in the Chapel of Arizona State Prison on Good Friday, when the Metro special production starring Bert Lytell was given its first showing in the United States.

The Arizona penitentiary, situated in the town of Florence, served as the background for the prison scenes filmed by the Metro company for the production, with Bert Lytell as Lee Randall, alias Jimmy Valentine. It was in return for the courtesy of the prison authorities in permitting the picture to be taken there that B. F. Rosenberg, manager of the Metro Exchange at Los Angeles, arranged for its first presentation before the prisoners.

It is a model prison, with its own screen in the Chapel, where pictures are regularly shown. Most of these pictures are old. "Alias Jimmy Valentine" was the first "first night" that the prison had known.

"TheSaphead"Co-Stars Crane and Keaton

"The Saphead" has been selected as the release title for Loew-Metro's forthcoming production of Winchell Smith's and Victor Mape's play, "The New Henrietta." Winchell Smith, producer and playwright, who recently joined the staff of authors at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, Cal., is personally supervising the picturization of "The Saphead," in which William H. Crane and Buster Keaton will be co-starred at the head of a strong ensemble, it is stated.

"The Saphead" was chosen as the new title of the picture because June Mathis's scenarioization of the play brings into greater prominence than it enjoyed in the stage version, the role of Bertie, played by Mr. Keaton. This comedian is making his first venture in high class comedy drama after gaining fame as a slapstick artist with Fatty Arbuckle.

Company Will Feature Robert Gordon

Announcement is made that a producing company is now being organized which is to present as its star Robert Gordon. The pictures made with Mr. Gordon in the stellar role will be known as the Robert Gordon Photoplays. It is stated that plays will be selected with a view of supplying suitable material for Gordon's boy-characterizations. In view of Mr. Gordon's advance from the status of an "extra" to a star within five years, it is asserted that the young actor's rapid rise is indication of both his ability and favor with the public.

Samples of advertising for "April Folly," the Cosmopolitan production starring Marion Davies

"Campaign Proving Effective"

Cosmopolitan Reports Success of "April Folly's" Drive

COSMOPOLITAN PRODUCTIONS' advertising, publicity, and exploitation campaign on "April Folly," Marion Davies' latest starring picture, is said to have elicited praise from exhibitors everywhere, because of its effectiveness. Thorough as were Cosmopolitan's campaigns on "The Miracle of Love" and "The Cinema Murder," the "April Folly" campaign is declared to be even greater, and according to the producers, it might well be called "the greatest send-off ever given a motion-picture."

In describing the campaign launched in behalf of "April Folly," an announcement from the offices of Cosmopolitan Productions states:

"Prior to the release of 'April Folly,' Cosmopolitan announced that it would be given such an impetus as no other picture had ever received, and judging by what has been done so far Cosmopolitan has kept full faith with its exhibitors.

"The campaign embraced every known legitimate means of bringing to the attention of the public the merits of 'April Folly,' and its star, Marion Davies. Eleven newspapers in eight key cities were used in the preliminary broadside with full pages, half pages, and quarter pages of advertising copy. Famous artists and writers gave their genius towards the exploitation of 'April Folly' and such well known people as Penrhyn Stanlaws, C. D. Batchelor, Nell Brinkley, Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, Mrs. Van de Water, Fay King, Ada Patterson, Allan Dale, Nellie Bly, Harry Herschfield, creator of 'Abie, the Agent,' Beatrice Fairfax, etc., were among the contributors.

"The newspapers used in the beginning were the New York American, the New York Evening Journal, the Los Angeles Examiner, the Boston Advertiser, the Washington Times, the Wisconsin News, the Chicago Herald and Examiner, the Chicago American, the Boston American, the Atlanta Georgian, and the San Francisco Examiner. The combined circulation of these newspapers is approximately two and a half million, and it is estimated that they are read by over twelve million people.

"In addition to the newspaper campaign the whole country was blanketed with lithographs in one-sheet, six-sheet, three-sheet, and twenty-four-sheet sizes in several styles. The twenty-four-sheet and the flat one-sheets were done by Penrhyn Stanlaws, featuring a head of Marion Davies, and all the lithographs were done in five colors.

"Also, every one of the special local exploitation experts attached to the various Famous Players-Lasky exchanges through which 'April Folly' is released, gave his efforts towards the making of 'April Folly' a success."

Blackton Films in Demand

Pathe Says Blackton's Features Have Realized a Steady Increase

THE real test of a producer's success is to create a demand for his productions. J. Stuart Blackton has accomplished this, declares Pathe, and the proof lies in the solid, steady increase of business Pathe Exchange, Inc., has enjoyed on all Blackton features from "The Moonshine Trail" to "The Blood Barrier," the current release.

Five special features have been marketed through Pathe, "The "Moonshine Trail," "Dawn," "My Husband's Other Wife," "Respectable By Proxy," and "The Blood Barrier." Business on each has shown an increase of twenty-five per cent. over the preceding release, according to the Pathe statement.

The greatest volume of sales as indicated by Pathe reports was on "Respectable By Proxy," but figures already in the general offices of Pathe show that "The Blood Barrier" business will exceed those sales. Commodore Blackton has come nearer to his public with each successive picture. "Dawn," Eleanor H. Porter's novel, created a demand which was better than that of "Moonshine Trail," for in it the true Blackton charm of production was revealed in the simple heart story of the blind boy who came to see through the eyes of his sweetheart.

In "The Blood Barrier," written by the late Cyrus Townsend Brady, Commodore Blackton has a story different from any of the other four. It is a tale of mystery, set in a patriotic atmosphere that appeals to every true American. The tempo of the picture is swift, the mystery holds to the end, and the cast and settings are in keeping with the producer's best efforts.

The increase in business each succeeding picture has enjoyed is proof that J. Stuart Blackton continues to find his public with his independent productions.

Art of Parlor Spooks and Sharps Shown in Universal's One-Reeler

UNIVERSAL'S weekly novelty-reel being prepared for early release by Hal Hodes, editor of the Universal New Screen Magazine, will contain a series of interesting subjects photographed during spiritualistic seances, it has just been announced.

The novelty reel will show the "inside" workings of well-known parlor spooks. It will include pictures showing how "fake" mediums produce "supernatural" effects and fool credulous believers. The mechanics of phoney spirit visitations is shown in detail, from ordinary rapping and table tipping to the visualization of spirit images and voice manifestations.

This remarkable series of moving picture subjects has been obtained through an arrangement with Waldemar Kaempfert, editor of the Popular Science Monthly, a publication of wide circulation. There will be a section in the novelty reel every week devoted to curious scientific subjects, supplied through the Popular Science Monthly. Another series of unusual interest will be an expose of the various devices and dexterity used by professional gamblers and sleight of hand artists.

In connection with the Popular Science Monthly series to be used in Universal's novelty reel that publication will devote two pages in each issue to the novelty reel. The two-page section in the Popular Science Monthly will bear the same name as the novelty reel. That name has not yet been chosen but will be determined by a trio of judges from suggestions now being submitted by exhibitors in all parts of the country.

Universal has offered a prize of $250 to the exhibitor whose suggestion or one of whose suggestions is decided to be the best. The contest opened March 26, and will close April 30. If the lucky name is submitted by two or more exhibitors, each will get $250.

Mayflower Releases Soon

Charles Miller and R. A. Walsh Pictures Available Next Month

UNUSUAL interest attaches to the announcement that Realart Pictures Corporation has two important Mayflower features which will be available to exhibitors in May.

Departing from the usual custom in the trade of holding the best spring special productions over for presentation at the opening of the new fall season, Realart has responded to the call of exhibitors for noteworthy attractions to carry the year's prosperous business through the warm months.

The two features are: "The Law of the Yukon," a Charles Miller Production, which was inspired by Robert W. Service's famous poem, and "The Deep Purple," an R. A. Walsh Production, founded on the famous stage success by Paul Armstrong and Wilson Misner.

Director Walsh has enlarged the original story of "The Deep Purple" to emphasize its spectacular phases. One of the largest casts ever assembled for a production was engaged by him to carry out these original ideas. There are seventeen players in all in the production.

One of the big features of the Mayflower picture is a spectacular cabaret scene in which Bird Millman, the aerial performer who has been a featured attraction at the Midnight Follies, and now performing for Barnum and Bailey's Circus, is featured. The production is said to abound in spectacular and dramatic incidents developed in the manner for which Mr. Walsh has become famous.

"The Law of the Yukon" is a heart interest story of life in the Canadian Northwest. Almost three months were required to make the picture. Charles Miller had a company of sixty-five at Port Henry, N. Y., taking advantage of the most severe winter in years to obtain his Yukon effects.

Contestants on Their Toes

"Flying A" Representatives Have Variety of Matter to Work With

A "FLYING A" contest as a tribute to the President, S. S. Hutchinson, instituted by C. A. Stimson, general sales manager of the organization will close April 30. Never before in the history of the American Film was there such a list of super-specials on which to try their mettle, says American Film. The representatives of the "Flying A" organization are said to be engaging in the competition with greatest enthusiasm.

Prizes will be awarded for the highest records in three classes: First, to salesmen who have the largest number of contracts on the following recent specials, viz., "Six Feet Four," starring William Russell in the story by Jackson Gregory; "The Hellion," a story of love, mystery, hypnotism and intrigue; "Eve in Exile," picturizing Cosmo Hamilton's novel, with an all star cast; "The Valley of Tomorrow," a Russell picture of rapid action and virile acting filmed in Lake Tahoe; "The Dangerous Talent," a typical "Jim the Penman" type of story, said to be full of surprising twists and turns, with a girl as the central character; "The Honey Bee" in which Mme. Marguerite Sylva carries the leading role in the picturization of Samuel Merwin's best seller; "Slam-Bang Jim" a comedy-drama which opens in highbrow New York Society and slam-bangs through exciting situations to the Western mountains; and "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver," an excellent story by Albert Payson Terhune.

The second prize will be awarded to those doing the largest amount of business, and the third prize to those placing the largest amount for cash collections during the month. Each man has his own territory. The contest started on April 5th. There is everything from "jazz to highbrow literature picturized," according to the general sales manager. Everything in the way of cooperation and assistance is being done in the home office in Chicago, the whole office sales department standing at "tenshun" to cooperate, says American.

Will Write Stories For Fox Actors

Major A. Hamilton Gibbs has been engaged by William Fox to write special screen stories for the men stars of the Fox aggregation. This will be no little task as the screen actors, now listed under this banner, include such popular artists as William Farnum, William Russell, Tom Mix, Buck Jones and George Walsh. Some time before the great war he established himself as a writer of much promise by a couple of novels for Munsey's Magazine, subsequently published in book form, under the titles "The Hour of Conflict" and "Persistent Lover."

Cosmopolitan Engages Albert Capellani

Albert Capellani has signed a contract to do five special screen productions for Cosmopolitan Productions. The first of the series will be Winston Churchill's famous novel, "The Inside of the Cup." Production preparations are now being made, and the scenario is being put into shape by Capellani and George Dubois Proctor. There will be no individual star or featured player, but the cast will be an all-star cast and will consist of some of the best known screen players, it is announced. Settings will be done by Joseph Urban, and because of the opportunities afforded by the story, magnificence and lavishness will characterize the production, it is stated.

In addition to Albert Capellani, Cosmopolitan Productions' directorial staff consists of Robert G. Vignola, Frank Borzage, and George D. Baker. Several famous directors are now being negotiated with, and announcements regarding their acquisition will be made shortly, it is expected.

Three Weeks Run for Lloyd in Frisco

One of the highest tributes yet paid to Harold Lloyd was accorded him by the Imperial theatre, San Francisco, when his "Haunted Spooks" opened at that house on Sunday, April 11th, for a run of three weeks.

No other comedian in the annals of the Imperial has possessed sufficient popularity with San Francisco audiences as to warrant retention for more than a week.

When Jack Partington, who manages the Portola theatre of San Francisco, and supervises the direction of the Imperial, looked at "Haunted Spooks," he immediately decided to move it to the Imperial. He felt the Portola would be insufficient to accommodate the audiences.

Release Date is Named for "Locked Lips"

"Locked Lips," a five-reel Universal special attraction, featuring Tsuru Aoki, heads the list of releases for the week of April 28. The picture is based on "Blossom," written by Clifford Howard. Other releases during the week will be: the closing climax of "The Lion Man"; the first episode of a new serial, "The Moon Riders," the twelfth episode of "Elmo the Fearless," and Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran comedy and a Century comedy, and the News reels.

Branch Manager Dies in Washington, D. C.

News of the death of David Mitchell, branch manager of the Special Pictures Corporation, at Washington, D. C., on March 18th, has been received. Mr. Mitchell was very well known to the trade throughout the eastern and northern territory. For years Mitchell travelled for the United Theatres and the Lynch Enterprises, and the exhibitors will remember him in the Minneapolis, New York and Washington territory.

New Contract for Opera Star

Associated Exhibitors Acquire Geraldine Farrar

GERALDINE FARRAR, opera and screen star, has signed a contract with Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Production of the first picture will begin in New York as soon as important arrangements connected with the making of the attraction have been completed.

The signing of Miss Farrar is the opening gun in the Associated Exhibitors' announced campaign to furnish exhibitors who are affiliated in the organization, motion picture entertainment of such calibre as to assure the greatest possible patronage.

Every possible effort will be made by Associated Exhibitors to make Miss Farrar's initial Associated picture one of the biggest attractions of the year—and to make it an indication of the quality of the pictures to follow.

The steps leading up to actual production are being taken with extreme care, according to General Manager F. C. Quimby. One of the strongest stories written in years—and one particularly suited to the star—is being considered at present, Mr. Quimby says. He adds that nothing will be decided positively, however, until those most vitally concerned have agreed on the worth of story, director, support and other important elements.

In signing the contract Miss Farrar expressed herself as delighted to know that she was to work with such an organization as Associated Exhibitors, Inc. She stated that she had signed up with Associated only after she had become convinced of the unlimited advantageous possibilities of such a connection.

Geraldine Farrar, who has been signed to star in feature pictures produced by Associated Exhibitors

The connection of Miss Farrar with Associated Exhibitors means that her productions immediately are assured first-run presentation in the finest theatres in every city and town in the country. This is true because the owners of the theatres are themselves affiliated in Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

Geraldine Farrar productions, as well as every other picture of the Associated Exhibitors will be distributed through Pathe Exchanges.

Goldwyn Begins Two More

Work Starts on Mrs. Rinehart Novel and "Officer 666"

WORK on two elaborate productions was started last week at the Goldwyn Studios in Culver City, California. They are a Mary Roberts Rinehart Eminent Authors picture based on her story "Empire Builders," and an adaptation of the famous stage play, "Officer 666," by Augustin McHugh. With the beginning of the filming of these two pictures, all of the stages at Culver City were occupied by the Goldwyn producing units.

Under the title of "Empire Builders," Mrs. Rinehart wrote a two-part Saturday Evening Post story dealing with life at a boys' preparatory school. The characters and atmosphere in the novelist's study of youthful impulses, soon to be published in book form by George Doran, suggest Booth Tarkington's "Seventeen," although Mrs. Rinehart's handling of the subject is marked by individuality.

The first contribution of the distinguished novelist to the Eminent Authors series, "Dangerous Days," is said to have been received by exhibitors, the public and the press as one of the greatest productions in the annals of the screen.

E. Mason Hopper has been assigned to the direction of Mrs. Rinehart's newest story, with a cast that includes Cullen Landis, Molly Malone and Ralph Bushman, son of Francis X. Bushman, who is known to all motion picture fans. This is Bushman, Jr.'s first appearance in a Goldwyn production and he has given a prominent role. Others in the company are Otto Hoffman, Howard Ralston, Tom Perrse and John Lynch.

Again working with Harry Beaumont, who has directed all but a few of Tom Moore's pictures since that popular young actor was made a star, Moore is now engaged in the filming of "Officer 666," the rapid-action farce that in play form scored a record-breaking run on Broadway under the management of Cohan & Harris. The supporting company is not yet complete, but thus far it includes Kate Lester, Jerome Patrick, Harry Dunkinson and George Kuwa.

Ray Keeps Business Up During Holy Week

Harold C. Franklin, the Buffalo showman, and William Mason of the Grand theatre, Pittsburg, were visitors in New York City this week, and both of these exhibitors paid their respects to the drawing power of Charles Ray through Arthur S. Kane, who is handling Eastern interests of the First National star.

Mr Franklin reported to President Kane that he was in a position to refute the general impression that Holy Week was an off week, at any rate as long as Charles Ray was booked for his screen. Mr. Franklin had just completed a run of "Alarm Clock Andy," the latest film offering of the star. Similar sentiments were expressed by Mr. Mason.

Interest compelling scenes from J. Parker Read, Jr.'s production, "Sex," in which Louise Glaum is starred and which is distributed by W. W Hodkinson

"Sex" Bookings Continue

Hodkinson Reports More First-Run Houses to Play Louise Glaum Film

A STATEMENT from the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation informs of additional first-run houses that have booked J. Parker Read's third Louise Glaum production, "Sex." The Hodkinson statement follows:

"Harry M. Crandall's big Washington circuit has booked 'Sex' for all the Crandall houses with an immediate opening at his Metropolitan; the entire Saenger circuit in Louisiana, Mississippi and Florida, embracing thirty-nine towns, has booked it through W. H. Gueringer, assistant general manager. In Spokane the big Liberty has contracted for 'Sex' as has the Rivoli in Portland, Ore. Andrew J. Cobe's successful Rialto in Lawrance, Mass.; the Alhambra in Pittsburg; the Capitol in Macon, Ga.; Barton & Olsen's Colonial and Regent, Indianapolis.

"Charles H. Miles' trio of big Detroit first-runs have all booked 'Sex' with full week engagements scheduled for the Majestic, Orpheum and Regent theatres. In San Francisco contracts are being closed with Turner and Dahnken's powerful Tivoli.

"Among other important theatres in their respective regions where 'Sex' has found immediate booking are these: The Alhambra, East End, Pittsburg; the Grand, Marshall, Tex.; the Queen, Tyler, Tex.; and the Opera House, Laramie, Wyo.

"One of the biggest contracts of the week on 'Sex' was closed by H. H. Hurn, Hodkinson Cincinnati manager, with Joseph L. Steurle, managing director of the Walnut theatre, Louisville, for a seven-day run at a rental higher than any previously paid for a week's engagement in the Kentucky metropolis."

Williams Leaves the Coast

First National Officer En Route for East; Tells Company's Plans

AFTER a stay of four weeks in Los Angeles where he has been in almost a continuous conference with the producers for the First National, J. D. Williams has left for Chicago and the East.

"We have made some very pretentious plans and two contracts during my stay here, but nothing definite can be said concerning these other than that Sol Lesser will supervise First National matters in Los Angeles," Mr. Williams told a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative. Concerning the many rumors prevalent concerning the Chaplin six-reel picture, Mr. Williams stated emphatically that Mr. Chaplin had a contract to deliver six more pictures to First National, and he had every reason to believe the pictures would be delivered. "I have seen the big Chaplin picture, and it is a very wonderful production."

At a luncheon given on April 6th at the Charles Ray Productions studio, Mr. Williams stated that in the future one of the requirements of First National would be that six months be spent for the making of each subject.

In addition to Mr. Williams' statement respecting improving productions, he made other remarks of more or less prophetic nature. "One of the provisions made in the by-laws of the First National," he said, "is that we shall not become producers. From the first we have maintained that the unit system of producing is the best, for by following this policy all the attention of a given organization is centered on one star, and better results can be obtained. Every unit must, by this method, stand on its own merits, and the fifteen units now producing we believe are turning out better productions than any other fifteen units. We do not believe that the demand of the public will ever permit big machine made subjects."

Double-Director Experiment Interests

Los Angeles professional circles are watching with particular interest the results of the striking departure in recent picture production which is now taking place at the Bessie Love Studios where a star, for the first time in the history of the industry is having the benefits of two directors, male and female, in the supervision of her work. The directors of Miss Love are Ida May Park and Joseph de Grasse.

Organize to Aid Producer

Company Formed to Supply Matter Suitable for Screen Production

THE newly organized Authors' Stage and Screen Plays, Inc., announces that its purpose is to supply producers with adequate material for screen production. The following statement, issued by this organization, is of greatest interest to producers, confronted by the problem of securing suitable material:

"The dearth of suitable material constitutes today the chief worry of the average motion picture executive's existence. That the demand far exceeds the supply, is proven by the fact that every available story or play, irrespective of its adaptability for the purposes of screen visualization has been snapped up by producers in their efforts to keep up the business of presenting to the public productions of a high standard.

"Even this questionable field of nearly successful plays, and ordinary magazine stories, are now practically exhausted, and the producer is faced with the alternative of doing over some of the plays and stories which have been done several years ago. This condition is unfortunate, and if permitted to exist, will work great havoc to the industry in general.

"This organization has been formed for the express purpose of assisting the producer in this present situation. We have secured an organization of men who know every angle of the motion picture business. They can differentiate between a poor stage play or magazine story of questionable value, for which an enormous price is asked, as against the story possessing all the elements necessary for perfect picturization and real box office value. Authors of international reputation will write these stories, always keeping in mind the fact that they are intended for filming. This point has been sadly overlooked by authors in a great deal of material now being used.

"A special direct to the public publicity campaign will be inaugurated with every story the author writes, as well as a campaign publicizing the author to the public. The value of this can be appreciated as against the hap-hazard publicity attached to a play which has a Broadway run for several weeks, probably never sees the road, is taken off and then done in pictures as a big special production. Whereas, in our publicity campaign, the stories of the authors will be published in magazine or book form, or both, in conjunction with the production and release of the picture.

"All plays or stories will be handled by us only under exclusive arrangements. Producers will readily appreciate this, as it will eliminate the competitive bidding and prohibitive prices which are now being paid for an average story or play."

Comedies Please Europe

So States Exporter, Telling of Success of Christie Productions

REGINALD WARDE, exporter of Christie Comedies, who has just left the Coast to return to his New York office after an extensive observation of film production in Los Angeles, has taken exception to the remarks published by John Hohenvest, declaring that Europe likes our American drama but frowns on our comedies.

According to an interview with Mr. Hohenvest, who is a European director, published in the Screen News Service, Los Angeles, American comedy is not up to the standard of foreign. He says "We have come to regard American comedy as consisting of a series of slapstick and unconnected incidents with no idea of plot. That kind of comedy is not liked in Europe. There, the plot is the big thing. It comes first, with comic and unexpected incidents worked into it logically. As a rule American comedies are seldom seen in Europe—at least on the continent."

Mr. Warde says that the answer to this assertion is that in England alone the Gaumont Company, a house of high reputation for quality, has issued every one of the Christie Comedies produced since 1916, when the first one was made, and that all Christie Comedies have been sold for the entire European territory up to the end of 1920 and that dealers for the individual countries are making offers for the series of 1921. The house of Gaumont is now ready to renew the contract for two-reelers and secure an option for 1921.

Bobby Vernon featured in Christie comedies

Warner Oland, Pathe's premier "heavy man," who is costarred with Eileen Percy in the new Pathe serial, "The Third Eye"

New Pathe Serial Coming

PATHE will release "The Third Eye," a fifteen episode serial produced by Louis J. Gasnier in which Warner Oland and Eileen Percy are co-starred, on May 23d, it was announced this week.

The Gasnier production, therefore, will follow the "Daredevil Jack" picture on Pathe's serial schedule which will follow the customary plan of offering the first episode of a new production on the day marking the release of the final episode of its predecessor.

"The Third Eye" is the picturization of an orignal script by H. H. Van Loan, produced under the direction of James W. Horne at the Astra studio in Los Angeles.

The picture was completed some time ago and has been viewed in its final form by the department heads of the Pathe organization. The expectancy held out for this new serial by the officials of the company is especially high, due, they state, to the notably strong starring combination of such well-known players as Eileen Percy and Warner Oland, the unique character of the plot and the excellent quality of the production.

The advertising campaign planned is to be perhaps more extensive than any previously attempted with a serial by that company, announcements concerning which are to be made shortly, and the exhibitor helps such as campaign books, posters, etc., now in preparation are said to be very elaborate.

"The Woman He Chose" Wins Much Favor

"The Woman He Chose," which has opened at the Ziegfeld, Chicago, for an indefinite run, has the most favorable comments from critics of the daily and trade press.

A specially high-class musical program has been arranged in connection with the presentation of "The Woman He Chose" at the Ziegfeld, Mabelle Boyer, well-known soprano, being featured in vocal solos. Hans Hanke is rendering some high-class piano classics and the music incidental to the picture, is played by an orchestra.

The Mickey Film Company, Inc., which controls film for the United States, is putting the picture on the State rights market.

"Invasion Protests Continue"

Additional Exhibitors Endorse Views of J. D. Williams

MANAGER J. D. Williams of First National Exhibitors' Circuit certainly "started something", when he expressed himself a few weeks ago on the subject of the alleged invasion of the exhibiting field by producer-distributor interests. Since Mr. Williams voiced his views on that topic, communications from exhibitors have been pouring in to lend approval and support to the stand of First National's manager. Following are excerpts taken from exhibitor's letters just received.

Edgar M. Linck, manager of the Hippodrome Theatre, Williamsport, Pa., warns:

"Once he is supreme in all three of the fields, the producer-distributor will hold the great future of the motion picture industry in his grasp. Competition, that great factor in the life of any business or industry, will have been destroyed. The producer will be able then to give the public just what he wishes them to have. There will be no incentive to create photoplays of real worth. The motion picture will lose the great future which, we are all convinced, is in store for it. The invader will thus ruin himself utterly, and in addition, set back the progress of the photoplay. For the good of the industry, I, and I am sure I am not alone when I take this stand, hope the producer-distributor will see the light before he leaps blindfolded to his destruction.

"Yet, he has a perfect right to invade this other field, if he wishes. There is no one on the face of the earth who hasn't. 'It is not a question of right, but of policy.' To attempt this new step, is certainly not the best policy on the part of the producer."

John T. Belger, manager of Gaiety Theatre, Bluffton, Ind., calls for concerted action against all the factors that go to make up the opposition forces. He says:

"In this great imposition many of the stars, so made by we little fellows, are as bad as the greedy producer-distributor. So often, and many have been the unjust dictatorial attempts by producer, distributor and star, that in this day and age, the exhibitor is hardly able to call his life his own. Never before has the time been so ripe, the opportunity so great, as at the present moment, for every independent exhibitor in the country to join forces against this unjust invasion, cancel all contracts with greedy magnates, boycott the grabbing stars, and sign up with the respective independent producers who are warning us against the coming evil and are affording us ways and means to easily baffle the cowardly invasion."

Ralph B. Kretzer, president and manager of the Public Amusement Company of Springfield, Ohio, which controls the Liberty and the Colonial Theatre, writes:

"The principal reason I am against the invasion of producer-distributor, is because such a syndicate uses the money of the various exhibitors with which to build its theatres. Such a combination is, as I understand it, fostered mostly by one of the largest producing distributing concerns. Now even before we get the picture from this concern which we are booking, we must pay 25 per cent. Of course, this is the same rule followed by all of the producers, practically. I should judge therefore out of Springfield alone there comes something like $15,000, which this concern continually has in its hands. With larger cities it is of course, much more. So you can readily see how with such vast sums of money, the producer distributors can build their own theatres. Naturally this money applies on the payment of the rental of the film, and if we should stop using their films altogether it would be refunded."

Jacob Conn, manager of the Gaiety Theatre, Providence, R. I., asserts each theatre at the present time uses methods adaptable to local conditions. As a result of this, says Mr. Conn, "each house has a different plan of its own, and each has a different soul."

"This individuality, this soul, Mr. Conn continues, "which makes big business prosper, would be lost if the theatres were controlled from main centres far removed from the places of business. It has been proven in many instances that chains of theatres are not as profitable as those operated by individual owners. This is true in cities of any size, but the effects are more striking in cities with population under 100,000. Rhode Island, Massachusetts and New Hampshire have experienced numerous cases where the chain theatre plan has been tried, but it invariably has been abandoned quickly, or continued until it met with complete failure."

Maeterlinck Finishes Story For Goldwyn

Maurice Maeterlinck, the Belgian poet and playwright, who has been at the Goldwyn studios at Culver City since the middle of February, has completed his first story for Goldwyn and left for New York this week from where he will sail for France. The title of the picture has not yet been decided upon.

Curwood Pleased With Story

Author Says "Courage of Marge O'Doone" Is Among His Best

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD, the famous author, issued a statement this week pronouncing "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," one of the best stories he ever wrote. Vitagraph has made this story into a special production.

Mr. Curwood sent a telegram to Albert E. Smith, president of that company, who has been in California during the past few weeks personally supervising the production of this picture, which said in part: "'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is one of my best books. I hope you make a million with it. All best wishes."

This statement is interesting in view of the high prominence now enjoyed by Mr. Curwood as a result of the tremendous success of "Back to God's Country," "Baree, Son of Kazan," "God's Country and the Woman" and "The River's End" which have already been released. "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" is now on the eve of its release with a big exploitation campaign behind it. This production has been advertised extensively. The leading newspapers and magazines throughout the country have declared "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" to be one of the literary triumphs of the decade. It is a story of the typical Curwood style, dealing with the wild country of the Northwest bordering on the Arctic. Its characters are rugged creatures who pit their courage and strength against ferocious animals and the terrible rigors of blizzard and cold.

In order to reproduce in visual form the fascinating scenes of the story, Vitagraph sent its company into territory previously unscanned by the eye of the camera. David Smith, the director, who has built up a name for himself by successful direction, induced his players to camp among the ridges of the Sierras in the very dead of winter, and live for weeks the lives of Mr. Curwood's rugged characters. Pauline Starks, who has a splendid reputation as a picture player, has the title role, and co-starring with her is Niles Welch, one of the best known young leading men of the country.

The other notable characters are huge grizzly bears, and a third is an outlaw dog, these animals enacting clashes of tusk and claw against bone and flesh. It is a matter of comment throughout the film trade that a human life very nearly went into the price of this picture. This was on the occasion of the near escape of a grizzly bear. A score of film players and attaches of the company pursued the animal for miles, in an effort to effect its recapture if possible, but properly armed to kill the brute if necessary.

John M. Quinn, general manager of Vitagraph, Inc., stated yesterday that the film had arrived at the Brooklyn Studio and that prints would be distributed to all Vitagraph Exchanges throughout the United States and Canada within a week.

James Oliver Curwood has been invited to be one of the first to see in finished form the film version of this story.

Margarita Fisher as she appears in her latest American Film Company, Inc. production, "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver," distributed through Pathe

"A Good Story, Well Told"

This, Says President of American Film, Will Win Favor of Public

"THE THIRTIETH PIECE OF SILVER" will prove one of the most popular photonovels ever presented, a picture which will make a strong appeal to all classes," is the prediction of S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company.

"To begin with, the public wants a good story, well told. This is an exact description of 'The Thirtieth Piece of Silver.' Every detail of environment and action is so suggestive of the points to be put across, every step in the development of the plot so clear and convincing, the continuity so excellent, and the actors' performance is in such perfect accord with the concept of both director and author, that the result is a masterpiece Mystery, humor and suspense are well interlarded with the unfolding of romance.

"The spectator whether girl of sixteen, a factory hand or a college professor, lives in the drama for an hour with a sense of exultant intellectual dominion; it is his own. And the keen minded, while admiring the cleverness of the plot, believe they can anticipate and foresee the climax; yet they find themselves mistaken at every turn until the last few feet of film unroll one of the prettiest and most unexpected climaxes imaginable.

"The grisly memento of Judas' betrayal of the Master, its uncanny history and the belief that misfortune exuded from it, is the pivot around which the action circles. Visits to a crystal gazer add an element in line with the present furore for the mysterious and occult. The absurdity of the claims of the mystic crystal is exposed in a humorous way which lightens and brings sparkle into the scenes."

Baremore Handles Big Firm's Publicity

R. W. Baremore, who for the past several months has been in charge of advertising and publicity for the United Picture Theatres of America, has resigned to accept several offers which have come to him recently.

Recently he began handling the advertising, publicity and exploitation for the Haring and Blumenthal Enterprises, for the time being, concentrating his efforts on the New Jersey theatres of the firm. Two well known stars, a prominent director and a new producing company will also avail themselves of Baremore's services within the next few weeks, it is stated. Baremore will be temporarily located at 1600 Broadway, at United's headquarters.

Educational Drive Soon

Record Breaking Product on Hand Is Claim; to Be Offered Shortly

EDUCATIONAL Films Corporation is preparing to open its new drive with what is claimed to be the largest amount of new product ever accumulated by a motion picture organization. This material will be offered to exhibitors just as soon as the final details of the exchange system to be controlled directly by Educational can be completed.

None of the Educational product is more than two reels in length, but it is claimed by the company that its product on hand surpasses the record not only in the number of subjects embraced, but in actual footage. In addition there is a large amount being added to the library each week and the titling and cutting departments both here and on the coast are being kept busy getting further matter into shape.

This accumulation of material has been planned by Vice President and General Manager E. W. Hammons so that a full amount of exploitation material may be ready for each exhibitor. The product actually on hand supplies not only a volume, but a great variety of material. Especially welcome to exhibitors will be the Robert C. Bruce Scenics which were made during a recent visit to the coast of British Columbia and Alaska.

Eight of the Chester-Outings, which will hereafter be controlled by Educational have been completed. These will be released weekly. The first half dozen of Chester Scenics have also been completed. In process of editing and titling there are some thirty reels of travel pictures, taken in almost every portion of the world that Educational promises will reveal a new artist among photographers.

Record Breaker Reported

"Why Change Your Wife?" Brings Big Returns in First Run Cities

FROM the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation comes the announcement that Cecil B. DeMille's latest Paramount-Artcraft superspecial, "Why Change Your Wife?", has started on a career of record breaking in first-run cities that promises to eclipse the box-office performances of previous releases, not excepting "Male and Female."

Starting with an engagement of record-breaking length and receipts at Grauman's Rialto in Los Angeles, according to Famous Players-Lasky, "Why Change Your Wife?" so far has not failed to set big attendance figures in any house in which it has played, and last minute reports indicate that this unique record is not due to be interrupted.

From John P. Goring, Kansas City, the following wire was received at the home office recently: "Starting today on the third consecutive week of an indefinite run, 'Why Change Your Wife?' at the Royal theatre, bids fair to eclipse any production heretofore presented in Kansas City. It has already shown to fifty-eight thousand paid admissions, which is twenty per cent. of the total city population. This DeMille masterpiece will easily exceed the record of 'The Miracle Man' at the Royal theatre by several thousand dollars."

It is probable that New Yorkers will have an opportunity of seeing "Why Change Your Wife?" at the Rivoli theatre within the next two or three weeks. The picture is scheduled for general release early in May.

Rural Drama to be Re-Made

New Version of "Old Homestead" Will Be a Paramount Production

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces that a new version of Denman Thompson's "The Old Homestead" is to be made as a George Melford production for Paramount-Artcraft with a specially selected cast headed by Theodore Roberts and Monte Blue in the leading roles. Work will be started as soon as Mr. Melford finishes "The Translation of a Savage," which he is now filming.

"The Old Homestead" first reached the screen as a Paramount picture in 1915 when it was presented with a cast headed by Frank Losee, Creighton Hale and Louise Huff. In 1918 it was revived as out of Paramount's Success Series. The original screen version, directed by James Kirkwood, was made with the co-operation of Thompson's family and the exterior scenes were taken at the Thompson farm in New Hampshire.

The new screen version will doubtless contain, aside from the original elements of its charm, a more expensive delineation of character and a far broader background of scenic effect. Mr. Melford is assembling an exceptional cast and the two already mentioned are an augury of the general quality of the players to be seen in the various roles.

Simplex Notes

Charles C. Charles, President of the Albany Theatre Supply Company, Simplex dealers, and for ten (10) years Travelling Representative for the Universal Film Company in New York State, has sent in his resignation to the latter company. This to take effect on Monday, October 12.

The news of this action will come as a surprise to the many friends that Mr. Charles has made in the territory, but as he says in his statement, "The affairs of the Albany Theatre Supply Company has long since reached that stage where they require the attention of the company's chief executive."

As Simplex selling agents, the Albany Theatre Supply Company has found it necessary to enlarge its quarters. But so great a future does Mr. Charles predict in his territory, that he has just completed negotiations for the ground floor location in the Clinton Theatre Building, North Pearl Street, Albany, which is surrounded by the Clinton Square Strand, Albany; Proctor's and Grand theatre, while within a block are situated five (5) well known exchanges.

From the Chicago offices of the Exhibitors Supply Company, comes the news that during the past thirty (30) days, sixteen (16) Simplex Projectors were sold among the theatres of Peoria, Ill., which city had long been considered the stronghold of another make of projector.

Mr. H. A. R. Dutton, President of the Exhibitors Supply Company is highly gratified with the results of the past month's activities in Peoria, who saw the Lyceum, Princess, Apollo, Duchess, Hippodrome and Empress theatres equipped with the famous Simplex, while the new Madison and Asher's new Palace theatre have also contracted for Simplex as a part of the projection room equipment for these two latest and handsomely appointed theatres in the city of Peoria.

Mr. Dutton reports also that besides the Chicago offices doing record business, the Indianapolis, St. Louis and Milwaukee offices of the Exhibitors Supply Company are also working at top speed.

Resume of Realart's Career

Selling Forces Trying Hard to Establish Season-Record

THE field forces of Realart Pictures Corporation are striving hard to close out the first season's business with a new selling record established. Two big specials head the list of productions, and five star productions are included in the schedule. "The Law of the Yukon," a Charles Miller Production; and "The Deep Purple," an R. A. Walsh Production, both presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, are two features. Two Mary Miles Minter pictures, and one from each of Realart's other three stars, will be released in the next three months.

These seven productions will round out a total of seventeen handled by Realart during the year. The company was organized for active business about the middle of last summer. The first picture was not released, however, until the first of December, 1919, which reduces the actual time in which the seventeen productions were handled to about six months.

"We expect to demonstrate," reads a statement from Mr. Woody's office, "that Realart has one of the livest and best organized sales forces in the business. In addition, we feel that the boys are carrying around about the best line of goods any bunch ever started out with at one time.

"Of course, the two big Mayflower specials, 'The Law of Yukon' and 'The Deep Purple,' are as big a pair as any one could draw to. And, when the balance is considered, it is not difficult to understand why Realart has planned this big clean-up campaign to finish its first season.

"Coming down the home stretch in this way we can look forward and backward over the season with considerable pride. We did not get going until early in December when we released 'Soldiers of Fortune,' an Allan Dwan production, and 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room,' an Emile Chautard production, both presented by Mayflower.

"In the same month came our first star production, 'Anne of Green Gables,' starring Mary Miles Minter as a Realartist. In January we put out 'Erstwhile Susan' and 'The Fear Market'; in February 'Judy of Rogue's Harbor' and 'The Luck of the Irish,' an Allan Dwan Production presented by Mayflower.

"We offered 'The Stolen Kiss' and 'Sinners' in March, and 'Nurse Marjorie' this month. Surveying the list will be noted some of the season's most successful and notable productions—pictures of a standard and quality of production that have firmly established the Realart trademark on the market.

"We have made good on our promises within a year's time. The records our pictures hold in every section of the country are sufficient evidence of this. There is no important chain of houses in the country that has not booked a Realart picture. We have landed every one of our first nine productions at big houses on Broadway.

"Realart Pictures not only have stood as a standard of quality in production, but they have been accorded presentations by the best and finest exhibitors in the country. Almost a year ago we promised to make pictures that would do this, and we have accomplished it. I'll say it's a record.

"Backed by this wonderful record and with a bagful of seven such productions as we have to offer for the remainder of the season, we expect to wind up the season's business in a manner that will set the entire trade by the ears as not even our early performances have. Things are going to happen fast in this Realart campaign."

National Campaign Started

J. Parker Read, Jr., Opens National Drive for Louise Glaum Pictures

J. PARKER READ, JR., producer of the Louise Glaum photoplay productions, has launched a nation-wide publicity campaign. "It has always been my contention," says Mr. Read, "that the exhibitor and producer should know each other's business as if it were his own. I am filling my executive positions with men who have a thorough knowledge of the exhibition and distribution branches of the industry. In this way I safeguard my production, as my pictures will always be of the type to meet the public demand. There is no question but what the public influences picture production. Take for example in the early days when wild and wooly western pictures were the vogue. The public tired of them, and receipts fell off. That was a signal for the producer to try something else, and in the process of evolution we had the vamp type of picture, the problem play, and now it is the adaptation of popular novels and plays.

"The days of P. T. Barnum have faded into the dim and distant past. The exhibitor used to look upon the producer as one distant, aloof and shrouded with mystery. The producer did not give a second thought to the man in whose hands rested the success, or failure of his product.

"I have delegated Mr. Sig. Schlager to make a tour of the country. He will confer with the exhibitor and the managers of the Hodkinson Exchanges, through which organization the Louise Glaum Productions are distributed, and last, but not least, he will arrange with the newspaper editors to aid in the exploitation of the Louise Glaum productions."

Guy Empey at Private Screening of "Oil"

An opportunity to see Guy Empey's latest photoplay, "Oil," was extended to the officials of the Guy Empey Pictures Corporation in a private showing which has just been held at Wurlitzer Hall, New York, for this purpose. The screening was an invitation affair, and only officials of the company and their guests, members of the cast and a few friends were included in those privileged to be present. Mr. Empey addressed a few words of welcome to his friends.

This, the first presentation of "Oil," may be taken as an indication that as a comedian Guy Empey will be a huge success. Both Mr. Empey and Miss Martin, who co-stars in the picture, were warmly congratulated by those present during the informal reception which followed the screening of the feature.

The negative of "Oil" is now being matched and cut from the working print, and a trade announcement of distributing arrangements and release date will be made shortly.

"Empty Arms" Brings Backers $200,000

"Empty Arms," the Lester Park and Edward Whiteside production, will bring its backers $200,000, according to an announcement of the producers. The territory already sold, which includes the Far West, the Middle West, the metropolis, and some of the Eastern states, all average up to the quota which they must reach in order that the picture may earn $200,000.

"Your readers will recall our original statement," said Byron Park recently. "We stated that we were offered $100,000 for the world's rights to this picture by a prominent producer, and that we refused it. We knew what we were doing, however. We knew the property that was in our possession and we were ready to see it through to the limit. Present results show that we were not wrong.

Box Office Reports Will Again Appear in Next Week's Issue

Jans Plans Lavish Production

"Madonnas and Men" to Link Ancient and Modern Life

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made by Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., that an especially elaborate production "Madonnas And Men" will be the third release under the Jans trade mark. This feature, according to the announcement, will be out of the ordinary, inasmuch as it is the intention of the producers to eclipse anything that has been done by this company before. It will be, in the words of Mr. Jans, a big special, something that is decidedly different and one that can be exploited on a big scale. It is understood that this super-production will be in eight reels.

"Madonnas And Men" is being directed by B. A. Rolfe, who, it is said, achieved remarkable success for Jans Pictures by his able direction of the two previous pictures made for this company featuring Olive Tell. Mr. Rolfe's directorial abilities are of such magnitude as to make him a particularly strong asset for this latter production. It is understood that Mr. Rolfe will have complete charge of producing.

It is further stated that Mr. Jans, desiring to put a pet theory to practice, decided upon placing a production upon the market with no one particular star used. He wished to place a feature film on the market that would be so big and so strong it would need no star in particular to make it a moneyed attraction for the exhibitor. In this respect there is no one particular star mentioned in this production. However, according to Mr. Jans special stress has been laid upon the selection of the cast which comprises many well known players in the realm of the films.

The most prominent players mentioned in the cast are Evans Burrough Fontaine who has been making a name for herself in Ed Wynn's Carnival, Edmund Lowe, who is leading man for Lenore Ulric in "The Son-Daughter" a popular Broadway success, Anders Randolph whose work on the screen has covered a successful era, Gustav Von Seyffertitz, a seasoned veteran of the drama, Raye Dean, who has been playing the ingenue role in the stage play "Friendly Enemies," and Fair Binney, sister of Constance Binney. This cast according to Mr. Jans has been selected with care. In his estimation each one in itself represents some well known name in the dramatic field, and each one has been engaged owing to their particular abilities to bring out the dramatic appeal which the story contains.

The story, according to the producers, is one with an exceptional appeal to modern day picture patrons. It opens with scenes in Rome during the time when it was customary to feed Christian slave-girls to the lions and to perform other kinds of tortures upon them. It draws a parallel between the action of a certain roman emperor and his total disregard of the high ideals and virtues of womanhood as compared to similar characters during modern times. Regarding this, according to reports, it can be summed up in the words of the soothsayer in foretelling the future downfall of Rome to the young emperor "As Rome treats its women, so will the Gods treat Rome."

It is understood that the nature of the story dealing with the time of the Romans and also night life in a typical American city affords opportunity for the presentation of lavish and massive sets, and, according to Mr. Jans, no expense will be spared in supplying the best that can be had. The scenes in the amphitheatre, the lions' den, emperor's palace, and many of the cabaret scenes, it is said have been offered with an expenditure of money not very often equalled in the average motion picture. "Madonnas And Men" will be finished in about four or five weeks.

Report Big Independent Deal

Empire State Exchange Acquires Rights to Arrow Pictures

WHAT is described as one of the largest single deals in the history of state righting and independent selling of features in New York has been announced conjunctively by the Arrow Film Corporation and the Empire State Film Exchange of 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

The latter concern has purchased the rights for the state of New York for sixteen five-reel feature productions from Arrow, and the rights to handle the Arrow Hank Mann series of two-reel comedies for all territory in the state outside of New York City. The latter territory on the Hank Mann series is being handled by the Seaboard Film Exchange, which has booked them into the largest theatres in Manhattan and Greater New York.

Included in the deal, according to the announcement to the trade, are the New York rights to "The Chamber Mystery," "The Vigilantes," the "Tex, the Elucidator" series, "Wolves of the Street," "The Desert Scorpion" and the Hank Mann two-reelers.

The "Tex" series is believed to be a new departure in the industry, in that it consists of twelve separate five-reel productions, each a complete story in itself, but each with the same central characters. Each "Tex" story is adapted for the screen from a standard mystery or detective story. The supervision of the series is in the hands of William Steiner, while the active director is Tom Collins.

"The Chamber Mystery" is a rollicking comedy, featuring Earl Metcalfe and Claire Whitney. New York reviewers who have seen it have given it praise both for delicacy of theme treatment, and for the fact that it has been cleverly produced.

"The Vigilantes" and "The Desert Scorpion" are westerns, produced on an expansive scale. The latter is a product of the Art-O-Graph studios of Denver, and features Edmund F. Cobb. It is a typical western story of the rugged type, with plenty of thrills and heart interest.

"The Vigilantes" is a story of the Old West, replete with action and thrill, and with the inevitable love element.

"Wolves of the Street" is also an Art-O Graph subject, with Edmund F. Cobb. The story opens on Wall Street, but shifts to the western plains for its climax and several reels of breathless action. There is a charming love story, also.

The Hank Mann series is being handled for New York City and Northern New Jersey by the Seaboard Film Exchange, 729 Seventh Avenue, of which Harry I. Coleman is president. The Seaboard also has a branch office in Washington, D. C., and is handling the comedies for that territory.

Revier to Direct Serial

Will Make "The Son of Tarzan" for National Film Corporation

HARRY REVIER, who recently completed the direction of the "Return of Tarzan" for Numa, has been engaged by the National Film Corporation of America to supervise the production of "The Son of Tarzan," the latest serial to be announced by this company.

"The Son of Tarzan" is the first of the Edgar Rice Burroughs books to be adapted for the screen in serial form. National previously produced "Tarzan of the Apes" and "The Romance of Tarzan," but these were five-reel features.

Roy Somerville, photo-dramatist, has been engaged to collaborate with Revier. He will prepare the continuity for "The Son of Tarzan," dividing it into about fifteen episodes. Somerville was picked for this task because of his very extensive experience in the preparation of original stories and adaptations for the most prominent stars. He has written script for Douglas Fairbanks, the Talmadge sisters, the Gish sisters, Madge Kennedy and Joe Brandt, director general of National, has announced that every effort will be made by his organization to make "The Son of Tarzan" serial artistically perfect.

Some rather interesting scenes in more ways than one from Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., production for State Rights distribution tentatively titled "Up in Mary's Attic"

Big Comedy Changes Hands

"Up in Mary's Attic" Sold to Fine Arts For Distribution

WHAT is described as one of the most pretentious five-reel comedy features ever produced has been purchased by the Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., of which Murray W. Garsson is president and Charles F. Schwerin, secretary and treasurer and general sales manager, from Ascher Productions. This production, exploited widely under the tentative title of "Up in Mary's Attic," is said to be a novel and elaborate production.

The deal was negotiated through Sidney Ascher and Joseph A. Jacobs, representing the Ascher interests, and attorneys representing the Fine Arts side. The various representatives were in conference nearly one week before terms were agreed upon, for the reason that Ascher Productions demanded one of the highest figures ever asked for a five-reel comedy subject.

"Everyone to whom we have shown it," said Mr. Garsson, "has been overwhelmed by its bigness and by its wonderful exploitation possibilities. The price we paid was a large one, but all who see it will agree with us that the subject was well worth the expenditure."

The picture, which contains a wealth of humor, heart interests, thrill and suspense, will not be released under the title "Up in Mary's Attic." Announcement of the change in title will be made later, the new owners not having agreed as yet upon a suitable merchandising main title.

One of the chief features of the picture is the more than one hundred beautiful bathing girls who grace the various scenes and situations. These beauties were chosen from many applicants, and only those who were beautiful of face and figure and who had had adequate screen experience were chosen. These will be introduced in the new feature in a series of wholly new and novel "stunts" and laughmaking situations.

Since it became known to the trade that Mr. Garsson and Mr. Schwerin had purchased "Up in Mary's Attic," bids have been arriving at their offices on Forty-sixth Street, New York, from all sections of the country. State Rights buyers all over the United States, who have been following the various announcements in the trade papers, have expressed an eagerness to be "let in" on the new feature, which is making a pre-release record for itself.

One bidder has already quoted a price for the entire west, according to Mr. Schwerin, who is handling the sales. Others have come from other sections of the country, many of them seeking whole territories.

While there is considerable editing and other details to be done before the subject is released to the trade, it is believed it will be ready for release within a few weeks. Mr. Garsson and Mr. Schwerin, however, have both declared that its preparation will not be hurried, since it is not their intention to place it upon the market until it has received treatment from the most skillful film editors and cutters available.

Harry Gribbon and Eva Novak, beautiful sister of Jane, are the featured players, but as one reviewer put it, "it is difficult to tell which is the cutest—the hundred bathing girls, the baby, Harry Gribbon, Eva Novak or the dog!" These, with one of the cleverest plots ever presented in a five-reel comedy subject, promise to make "Up in Mary's Attic," under its new title, a sensational success.

Take the hot blood of Mexico and mix it fifty-fifty with the cooler, calmer strain of the Northern neighbor and what happens?

You can gamble on it that the daughter of the union will blow hot, blow cold; that she will hate her Northern blood and then her Southern blood by turns; that she will be passionate, revengeful, brave, unreasonable and most cussedly lovable.

Inter-Ocean's Export Policy

THE attitude of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation in the present foreign film crisis is again defined and explained in a statement issued this week from the New York offices of the company. The statement sets at rest rumors which have gained currency in domestic and foreign film quarters as to the nature of Inter-Ocean's foreign trade policy in the future.

Reiterating its stand taken on two previous occasions in statements issued to the press, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation urges the export of a larger quantity of American productions at this time than at any other period in the history of the export business.

Inter-Ocean's statement follows:

"Despite the statements of a certain well-known exporter who maintains that the American manufacturer cannot hope for a ready market for American productions until the exchange in Europe is stabilized, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation urges a continuation of export trade with the assurance to the American manufacturer of a fairly marginable profit on the sales of his product to foreign territories.

"The rise of the pound sterling during the past week to a point where it is almost safe to assume that it is on its way to normal exchange is indicative of the strengthened position of foreign trade. This emphasizes the importance of a statement made by Mr. Schlesinger, manager of the Department of Foreign Film Sales of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, which appeared in the trade press of March 27. He said:

"'While speculation is rife in the industry as to the outcome of the problems that at present beset the foreign market, it is obviously apparent that the situation is only temporary, and that in due course of time, conditions will return to normal. While the export situation is in a critical stage, its effect on the trade has been grossly exaggerated. I arrive at this conclusion after a thorough study of the foreign market, and on the counsel of merchants who are financially involved in other commercial pursuits, and who have experienced the same difficulties in exports.'

"While Inter-Ocean concedes that profits will not be as large as heretofore, it feels that the present foreign crisis demands no let-up in exports. This conclusion is based on the desire of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation and several other export companies who have expressed their willingness in statements in the trade press, to lend a helping hand to the foreign buyer who is now supposed to be having difficulty in foreign exchange.

"Furthermore, inactivity in the foreign market would seriously hinder the future of foreign trade. In this connection, Inter Ocean Film Corporation refers to a statement it issued which appeared in the trade press of March 6. Among other things, the statement said:

"'Inter Ocean Film Corporation maintains that a period of inactivity in the export branch of the motion picture business would lead to fatal consequences. It cannot see its way clear to indorse the policy of "watchful waiting" in the present crisis, but it heartily recommends the transportation of greater quantities of motion picture films and motion picture accessory products to foreign territories. It feels that such action will stimulate motion picture export trade in the future.'

"Inter-Ocean Film Corporation will continue to export American films in large quantities despite the present condition in foreign markets. It maintains that a continuation of exports is the only means to the solution of the problems which at present beset the industry."

Gets Early Sennett Comedies

THE Majestic Pictures, Inc., with offices at 130 West 46th Street, has issued an announcement which is of considerable interest to state right buyers. It is stated that this organization, which was recently incorporated, has acquired the rights to about two hundred subjects, which are to be released on the independent market. Among the recent acquisitions effected by Majestic Pictures are Mack Sennett's Keystone comedies, featuring Fatty Arbuckle and Mabel Normand. Both J. J. Unger, president of the corporation, and John A. Hammell, manager of distribution, were enthusiastic over the deal whereby they had secured these early efforts of the present master-producer of comedies, and both officials predicted that the productions would meet with a ready demand on the part of independent buyers.

"These pictures," said Mr. Hammell, "were produced by Sennett in the Keystone days, before the now famous comedy-producer, Mack Sennett, became affiliated with Famous Players. In their success before the American picture public, Mack Sennett realized his first big stride towards that position of prominence which he enjoys at the present time as a first-rank producer of successful comedy-pictures. And, Mr. Hammell emphasized with a forcible gesture, it must be remembered that these subjects that Majestic Pictures has now available for release on the state rights market are pictures that have never been reissued before. They are now being reissued for the first time and have been re-cut, redressed and retitled."

The Sennett Comedies, controlled by Majestic Pictures, are listed as follows: "Mabel's Beau", "Baggage Smasher", "Do Re Mi Boom", "Shot in the Excitement", "Double Crossed", "Hash House Smashers", "The Speeders", "Cursed by His Beauty", "Toplitsky and Co.", "Professor Bean's Removal", "Waiter's Picnic" and "His Taking Ways".

Besides the Sennett comedies, the Majestic Pictures will handle short-subject and feature productions. Among the pictures announced as available on the state rights basis at the present time are the two-reelers, "Isn't It Warm?" and "Flap Jacks", both of which are described as first-class laugh-getters. A number of single-reel productions are also announced to be ready, including "A Janitor's Fall" "A Good Elk", "Here's Your Hat", "Her Bohemian Party", and "Fork Over".

President J. J. Unger of the Majestic Pictures, Inc., was until recently general manager of the Triangle exchanges. John A. Hammell, treasurer and manager of distribution, was formerly associated with the General Film Company and later became affiliated with Pathe. Both officials are experienced film men and well acquainted with the various phases of the industry. It is stated that further announcements are forthcoming in the near future from the headquarters of the Majestic Pictures.

Metro Reviews Past Five Years

THIS month the Metro Pictures Corporation celebrates the fifth anniversary of its founding. A statement just issued calls to mind again the early beginnings of the now powerful organization and also those persons and circumstances that have played all-important parts in the development of the corporation down through the five years of its career. The Metro resumé follows:

"Just five years ago, in April, Richard A. Rowland and a few other kindred spirits launched Metro upon its career—a career that has been marked by steady forward progress in the face of obstacles that might have daunted men less optimistic and less determined.

"That Metro has achieved its present important position in the motion picture industry is generally conceded to have been due in the greatest measure to the personal attributes and pronounced business acumen of Mr. Rowland.

"The success of Metro is all the more to be applauded when it is remembered that the company was started on what might have been termed a gamble. It was the direct outgrowth of a concern that had failed to make good. In fact, the story of Metro's formation would furnish the basis for an excellent motion picture scenario.

"Old-timers in the motion picture game will recall the Alco Company. This was a producing and distributing organization, financed by a system of exchanges. These exchanges relied upon the Alco Company to supply them with pictures. Alco, for some reason was unable to turn out the pictures wanted, and it became noised about Broadway film circles that the company was on the market, to be bought up for a song.

"Maxwell Karger, now Metro's director general, heard about the plight of the Alco Company. Mr. Karger at the time was, as he admits, almost 'flat'. He had a little money, to be sure, but not enough to take over the operation of the Alco Company, small as the quoted price was. Mr. Karger worked himself into a state of glowing enthusiasm, but he lacked sufficient of the sinews of war—in the shape of ready cash to take over Alco.

"Mr. Rowland was then an official of the famous General Film Company. Mr. Karger got in touch with him, and after 'selling' the idea to him, they took over the affairs of Alco. The new company included the affairs and good will not only of Alco, but of Columbia Films, the Dyreda Company, Quality Pictures and Popular Plays and Players. Mr. Rowland was made president of the new concern, which adopted Metro as its trademark and launched upon the production of pictures.

"The beginning was auspicious. Pictures were made on time, and the system of exchanges was supplied with prints as per schedule. Metro was a going concern.

"Mr. Rowland had always been of the opinion that the public wanted to see big stars on the screen, in stories of outstanding merit. He put his theory into practice, and picture-goers will remember some of the notable productions screened by Metro in its early days with such eminent stars as Ethel Barrymore, Emily Stevens, Edmund Breese, Valli Valli, William Faversham, Emmy Wehlen and Grace Valentine among others.

"A little while later Metro secured the services of Francis X. Bushman, then in the heyday of his career, and Beverly Bayne, whose following was enormous. Bushman and Bayne were tremendously popular, and Metro made a great number of special productions with these co-stars. One of the most lavish of these was a mammoth production of 'Romeo and Juliet,' Shakespeare's immortal love story of the Montagus and Capulets.

"Mr. Rowland was then instrumental in developing Harold Lockwood as a screen star, elevating him to stardom from the position of leading man. Metro saw Lockwood rise to the greatest heights in screendom, until at his untimely death, a year ago last Fall, Harold Lockwood was the best paying male star in the silent drama.

"Metro's start was made in the Heidelberg Building, at the corner of Broadway, Seventh avenue and Forty-second street. From a small beginning the company rapidly expanded, and outgrew its offices in the Heidelberg Building a year after organization, moving to the Longacre Building, diagonally across the street, where the company has since occupied almost the entire eleventh floor.

"As the company expanded it began systematically to recapitalize and to absorb, first the separate companies that made it up at its inception and then the exchanges. The exchanges were acquired one after another, until, with the recent acquisition of the New Jersey and Dallas exchanges, Metro owns outright all but two of its system of twenty five exchanges. These two are in Boston and Philadelphia.

"Virtually all the men who cast in their lot with the Metro company under Mr. Rowland's leadership are still loyal followers of their chief and still ardent boosters for Metro on any and all occasions. They include, besides Mr. Karger, W. J. Atkinson, now general manager; Joseph W. Engel, until recently treasurer of Metro and now general manager in charge of the company's West Coast studios in Hollywood; Harry J. Cohen, manager of the foreign department, and E. M. Saunders, general sales manager.

"Metro's policy from the outset, as directed by Mr. Rowland, has been one of consistent conservatism. There has been no inflation, and the effort has been made consistently to turn out better and better pictures, in accordance with Mr. Rowland's conviction that public taste should be played up to instead of down to.

"A few months ago Mr. Rowland's prophecy about big business entering the field found verification in the affiliation which has linked Metro with the Marcus Loew enterprises. Notwithstanding this affiliation, however, the Metro organization is still intact and Metro maintains a seperate identity, with Mr. Rowland at its head, as the producing and distributing agency of the new business association."

Metro Producing in East and West

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION'S fifth anniversary finds the company again operating studios in the West and East simultaneously, for the first time since the United States Fuel Administration established its wartime regulations about economy in the consumption of coal for all but essential industries.

This dual arrangement has resulted in bringing Maxwell Karger, director general of Metro Pictures, to New York for the reopening of the company's studios in New York, and in placing upon the shoulders of the individual directors remaining in Hollywood full responsibility for the results of their work.

As yet no announcement has been made regarding the staff of directors who will work in the Sixty-First Street studios for Metro under the supervision of Mr. Karger. The personnel of the directorial force in the East will be got together gradually; and though it is understood at the present that negotiations are under way with several of the more prominent directors in the East, no definite announcement regarding their identities is as yet forthcoming from Metro officials.

Of the men in charge of productions in the big studios in Hollywood, John E. Ince and Henry Otto to date have to their credit the greatest number of productions, three each, of the "fewer and better" series of Metro pictures.

The initial picture of the "Perfect 36" which Mr. Ince made was Viola Dana's screen comedy, "Please Get Married," from the Morosco stage success by James Cullen and Lewis Allen Browne. This he followed with the melodrama by Finis Fox, "Should a Woman Tell?" which brought a new screen actress before the motion picture public in the person of Alice Lake. Lee Kugel's stage play, "Old Lady 31," recently bought and done into pictures starring Emma Dunn, with Henry Harmon and other celebrated players in the cast, was Mr. Ince's third effort. This he has completed and is now engaged in staging "Indiscreet Wives," with Alice Lake, from a stage play by Julie Herne, daughter of James A. Herne who wrote "Shore Acres," a previous screen success of Miss Lake's.

Henry Otto began his work on the "fewer and better" pictures with a cinema version of Avery Hopwood's popular stage farce, "Fair and Warmer," starring May Allison. A second picture for Miss Allison, "The Cheater," from the drama by Henry Arthur Jones, is Mr. Otto's most recent directorial achievement; and in between these two he did "The Willow Tree," the Japanese fantasy by J. H. Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes, with Viola Dana in the principal role.

Next to Mr. Otto and Mr. Ince in the number of productions completed comes Herbert Blache, who picturized "The Walk-offs," a satirical comedy-drama by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, for May Allison's second starring-vehicle in the "fewer and better" series. Rather an abrupt change of subject followed, it being the big Drury Lane melodrama, "The Hope," by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, and presented on the screen with an all-star cast headed by Jack Mulhall, Ruth Stonehouse, Frank Elliott and Marguerite De La Motte.

At present Mr. Blache is engaged on the beginning of "The Saphead," from Winchell Smith's and Victor Mapes's "The New Henrietta," which in turn was revised from "The Henrietta," by Bronson Howard. This picture, "The Saphead," will have an all-star cast headed by William H. Crane and Buster Keaton.

Jack Dillon, who directed Bert Lytell in the picture production of Sir Gilbert Parker's world-famous novel, "The Right of Way;" Rex Ingram, whose staging of "Shore Acres," with Alice Lake was so noteworthy; Jack Conway, to whose credit is the first Lytell success, "Lombardi, Ltd.," from the Morosco stage hit by Frederic and Fanny Hatton; and Ray Smallwood, who directed "The Best of Luck," another of the Drury Lane melodramas by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, are other Metro directors who have achieved celebrity for their work on the "fewer and better pictures."

On the West Coast at present Edward Dillon is engaged in producing "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" from the stage comedy hit by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan; and Dallas M. FitzGerald is directing Bert Lytell in "The Temple of Dawn," from the novel by I. A. R. Wylie, who wrote the book on which Nazimova's "Stronger Than Death" was founded.

The first picture to be produced in the East by Metro under the new regime is "Love, Honor and Obey," a screen story adapted by Eugene Walter, the celebrated playwright now a member of Metro's staff of authors, from the book, "The Tyranny of Weakness," by Charles Nevillo Buck. This picture will be done with an all-star cast, including Henry Harmon, who had the part opposite Emma Dunn in "Old Lady 31;" and Wilfred Lytell, a younger brother of Bert Lytell.

Metro Lists Literary Acquisitions

COINCIDENT with the fifth anniversary of Metro Pictures Corporation, the company announces the purchase of a number of big novels and plays for early production on the screen. Metro has issued the following statement regarding its latest literary acquisitions:

"This list of new acquisitions marks a continuation of the Loew-Metro policy of great plays by great authors, and supplements the notable collection of titles that has already been made public. Metro's policy in drawing its picture material from the highest possible sources is seen reflected in the quality of the company's latest output, that takes its place, according to a common consensus of critical opinion, among the best screen productions of the year.

"Prominent in the list of new plays recently acquired by Metro for production on the screen are 'The Hole in the Wall,' Fred Jackson's thrilling drama of the supernatural, which is playing to packed houses in the Punch and Judy Theatre, with Martha Hedman in the leading role; and 'Big Game,' by Willard Robertson and Kilbourne Gordon, which was one of the season's productions at the Fulton Theatre, with Allen Dinehart, Pauline Lord, and Reginald Barlow in the cast.

"Further additions to the Metro schedule of great plays by great authors are 'Held in Trust,' George Kibbe Turner's thrilling mystery serial which is now appearing by monthly installments in the Red Book Magazine, and 'June Jeopardy' by Inez Haynes Gillmore. The latter is a fascinating novel of social life by the gifted author of 'Phoebe and Ernest.' Other purchases by Metro include 'The Gay and Festive Claverhouse', which is a novel by Anne Warner and published by Little, Brown and Co., and 'Head and Shoulders', a short story by F. Scott Fitzgerald, which appeared recently in the Saturday Evening Post.

"Not satisfied to stop here, however, in its quest to corner the literary and play producing market, Metro made the purchase of Adolphe Belot's celebrated French drama 'L'Article 47.' This famous old play was first produced at the Ambigu Comique in Paris, Oct. 20, 1871. Its New York production followed at Daly's Theatre, the year following, with Clara Morris, W. J. Le Moyne, Louis James and Mrs. C. H. Gilbert in the cast. It will be produced on the screen by Metro with a cast of notable players.

"'The Girl Patsy,' J. Madelyn Fiegl's well known stage play, which enjoyed a successful New York production, completes the list of recent purchases made by Metro that have up to the present time been made public. In this production June Mathis, Metro's gifted scenario writer, played one of the prominent roles. Miss Mathis gained her knowledge of screencraft from the land back of the asbestos curtain, and not the least of her recent and notable accomplishments was the scenarioization of Sir Gilbert Parker's celebrated novel, 'The Right of Way,' which Metro produced on the screen, with Bert Lytell as the star, and which was adjudged by the critics to be one of the best pictures of the year.

"The foregoing list of purchases of screen material of the highest possible order is quite wholly in line with what Metro's former policy has been. This policy is illustrated by the names of forthcoming productions already announced, and which includes 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse,' by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, and called the greatest novel of the century. Metro will give this great novel by the celebrated Spanish author a magnificent production with an all-star cast.

"'Polly With A Past,' by George Middleton and Guy Bolton, will be still another gigantic Metro screen production, starring beautiful Ina Claire, who played the title part in the original David Belasco stage production of the play. Other names on the Metro list which are now in preparation for production on the screen are 'Pink Feathers,' by Eugene Walter, 'Parlor, Bedroom and Bath,' by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan, 'The Temple of Dawn,' by J. V. R. Wylie, and 'Indiscreet Wives,' by Julie Herne, daughter of James A. Herne, whose famous drama 'Shore Acres', is one of Metro's most recent releases.

"Three more Jack London novels will reach the screen through Metro to follow 'Burning Daylight,' which will be released shortly, with Mitchell Lewis as the featured player. These novels include 'Smoke Bellew,' 'The Mutiny of the Elsinore' and 'A Daughter of the Snows'.

"'The Best of Luck,' another Drury Lane melodrama by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, will succeed 'The Hope,' which is about to be released, and will be followed in turn by 'The Great Millionaire,' and 'The Marriages of Mayfair.'"

Expanding Metro Exploitation Service

EXPANSION and development of its exploitation service until it provides for every Metro exhibitor, whether his house be three hundred seats or three thousand, is reported to be under way in that distributing organization, according to a fifth anniversary announcement made by an official of Metro Pictures Corporation.

"There is being worked out, and at the same time applied," declares the Metro announcement, "a system whereby local representatives of Metro in various parts of the country and the home office in New York will co-operate in working with the individual exhibitor, no matter where he may be located in business or what the capacity of his house, for achievement of maximum returns from every one of the Loew-Metro 'fewer and better' pictures shown.

"The backbone of exploitation and advertising, Metro believes, is the press book issued with every picture; and these books have been enlarged and made so comprehensive as to embrace every angle and detail of an advertising, exploitation and publicity campaign. But at the same time Metro holds that no one person or set of persons can be aware of the local conditions and point of view in the thousands of places where constituent attractions of the 'Perfect 36' series of photoplays adapted from big stage successes and best-selling novels are run.

"Hence the extensive work of the press books has been augmented with personal and local co-operation from representatives of the Metro exchanges, who being on the spot are acquainted with the exhibitor, his theatre's character and his public's taste and susceptibilities. By the joint working of the home office, through the issuance of press books and individual advice and co-operation with exhibitors, and of the Metro exchanges, the organization which releases to the world the 'fewer and better pictures' believes that showmen will find themselves getting more and more out of each picture.

"After a long and careful period of investigation Metro has found that this arrangement promises to be the most workable of any yet devised by a motion picture distributing company. Other companies, as the trade knows, have gone to the extreme of sending metropolitan film men out through the country for the purpose of telling, rather dogmatically, how a picture should be exploited. Experts though these representatives undoubtedly have been, their didactic attitude often has so grated upon the sensibilities of the exhibitor, who, naturally from seeing his public twice daily knows it rather well, that he has preferred working alone and unassisted to submitting to being told, as if he were incapable of thinking for himself or were hopelessly out of date.

"'The most experienced advertising men will admit,' commented a Metro official, regarding the expansion of the company's exploitation service, 'that the game is so new that there are no rules sufficiently proven that they must be slavishly observed. And that, we fear, has been the trouble with so-called experts sent out through various territories to tell the exhibitors in those territories what they should do. They have tried Broadway ideas on Main street; and the viewpoint and public on Broadway are not those of Main street.

"'Metro believes that the exhibitor is a pretty live wire. He has the one business of selling entertainment, and it is only natural that he should be thinking pretty constantly about that business. What we aim to accomplish is not to attempt to do that thinking for him, but, by digesting and analyzing in advance the exploitation possibilities in our pictures, give him a basis from which to work.'

"'The exhibitor has before him a long string of pictures, made by different companies. Metro does not attempt to make features fast enough to supply one house day after day. They can't be made that fast and made as good as we strive to make them. Hence, without attention directed intensively toward fewer and better pictures, it is logical to suppose that we should be very familiar with the entire appeal of these pictures. The benefit of our scrutiny of our own pictures we give to the exhibitor.

"'We say, 'Here are the big points of appeal in this film. Which one of them do you think your public will be most attracted by?' We talk it over, both profiting by the consultation. Then we go ahead, with our shoulders to the wheel, and put the attraction over big.'

"The press books in themselves provide for every side of advertising, exploitation and publicity. At the very first is a brief, cleary story of the picture, next a general talk on the big points Metro believes the film has for advertising. Reproduction of lobby stills of three sizes, a mail campaign needing only the insertion of the date of showing, striking and artistic advertising cuts, scene and star cuts of modern, distinctive style, a wealth of publicity material, advance and review stories, biographical sketches of players, human interest items, special Sunday supplement material, all ready to-use; reproduction of posters, from window card and one-sheet to the big twenty-four sheet; stunts galore, not only suggestions for them, but with details worked out."

Cosmo Hamilton Lauds "Shore Acres"

"James Herne, himself, could he see his characters brought to life as Ingram has re-vitalized them, would, I am sure, be as thrilled as I was."

This spontaneous and voluntary tribute was paid by Cosmo Hamilton, the playwright, to Metro's all star picturization of "Shore Acres," featuring Alice Lake, in a letter received by B. F. Rosenberg, manager of the Los Angeles Metro exchange. The text of his letter follows, in part:

"I am constrained to send you a few lines to say how deeply impressed and moved I was by Rex Ingram's production of 'Shore Acres.' To my mind it is a tender and most masterly and imaginative translation to the screen of that fine old play which has become almost a national institution in the country and James Herne, himself, could he see his characters brought to life would be as thrilled as I was."

"The Average Must Be Superlative"

ACCORDING to Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, the public of the near future will demand that every production be one of outstanding merit, and that even the average release will have to be of superlative quality to satisfy the standards of the American picture audience, is Mr. Rowland's belief. The statement of the Metro executive follows:

"Whether or not the current comment is true that the American public no longer will eat any but the very best cuts of meat or wear stockings woven from any material but silk, it is certain that none but the first quality of motion picture entertainment is now countenanced.

"Not only the cheap picture, but also the mediocre picture, has gone the way of the cotton sock, the shoddy overcoat, and the paper collar. Such films still exist, but they are dwindling in volume with the sureness of the moderately stocked cellar.

"Paradoxical as it may sound; the screen of the future—and it is not a distant future, but one that will come to-morrow—must present to audiences pictures that are consistently exceptional. Every production must be one of outstanding merit; the average must be superlative.

"No use to hark back to the pioneer days when one-reelers were slapped together on the roof of a vacant house in New York, on a stage which revolved with the sun. Let us look back for a brief instant at the development of the motion picture within the last two or three years. Scenario-writers were paid high salaries, money was lavished on production, companies were fairly straining in their efforts to outbid one another for stars. It would seem that the height of expenditure had been reached.

"But there was a flaw in this system which a few progressive companies, and Metro among them I am happy to say, saw; and that was the stereotyped story upon which the photoplays were founded. Picture audiences knew by heart all the conventional twists of plot, all the threadbare situations. Given a glimpse of the first reel, any member of the audience could have worked out the story from memory of many similar ones witnessed before.

"The solution was the purchasing for adaptation to the screen of plays and novels and stories of shorter length that had proven popular. Dramas and comedies that had withstood the test of Broadway; novels that publishers had deemed worthy of investment; stories that had by their sheer merit passed the exacting judgment of cold-eyed magazine editors—these the foresighted maker of pictures chose as the backbone of his business.

"Metro, ahead a shade, if we may be permitted to say it, of even the most progressive of the other concerns, was fortunate in starting early its drive for the material for 'fewer and better' pictures. The reward that came of it may be seen by a glance over a haphazard few of the titles that come to my mind at the moment: 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse,' by Vicente Blasco Ibanez; 'Fair and Warmer,' by Avery Hopwood; 'Polly With a Past,' by George Middleton and Guy Bolton; 'Parlor, Bedroom and Bath,' by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan; 'The Marriage of William Ashe,' by Mrs. Humphry Ward; 'The Right of Way,' by Sir Gilbert Parker; 'Lombardi, Ltd.,' by the Hattons; 'Alias Jimmy Valentine,' by Paul Armstrong; 'The Willow Tree,' by J. H. Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes; 'Tess of the D'Urbervilles,' by Thomas Hardy—these are but a representative handful.

"Pictures based on stories and plays of that character were put in production at the new Metro studios in Hollywood, California, late last summer. By fall they were ready for release. And the whole hearted approval of the public justifies Metro in believing that the American obsession for the best extends to motion picture entertainment, if to nothing else.

"The mere purchase of the best available photodramatic material is not the entire story of 'fewer and better' pictures. It is only the first chapter; and that, as every reader knows, may often prove full of promise and interest, and then fall down lamentably in later and carelessly done parts of the book.

"The basic principle which is the understructure of this policy is that hurry and artistic work are incompatible. One cannot rush a picture through, improvising on the spur of the moment, substituting here and there without thorough planning, doing the next best thing, and expect the finished product to be genuinely meritorious. Robert Louis Stevenson once said, in speaking of the art of writing, that if one cannot spend an entire afternoon in turning a phrase so that finally it will express his thought, that man should not go in for literature.

"In our art we feel likewise. The object is to produce pictures that will express with all the dramatic force and skill possible, the story we have selected for the Metro screen. When changes in production are necessary, they must not be hasty makeshifts, but the result of fully matured thought. And since such alterations from an original plan, no matter from what cause they have arisen, take time, it is not possible to grind out a picture weekly."

Karger Issues Statement

ON the fifth anniversary of its founding, the Metro Pictures Corporation takes occasion to deal in detail with the career of one who has been identified with the organization since its inception and to whose efforts much of the corporation's success is accredited. This person is Maxwell Karger, now officiating as the director-general of the Metro Pictures Corporation. Following is the statement just issued from the Metro offices:

"One day a pupil of Joachim, the great violin virtuoso—a man who had played first violin at the Metropolitan Opera House and in the Philharmonic Orchestra and toured in concert as solo violinist with Edouard de Reske—broke his violin across his knee. He had had a new dream—a vision of motion pictures, then in their crudest beginnings, developing into a new are to enthrall the world. He was going to be one of the pioneers of this dawning development.

"The pupil of Joachim was Maxwell Karger, Metro's dynamic director general. Now the fifth anniversary of the formation of Metro finds Maxwell Karger in charge of all the company's productions in the East. These are to include productions to be made at Metro's New York studios in Sixty-first Street, just off Columbus Circle, and at the magnificent new producing plant to be built by Loew-Metro on Long Island.

"Mr. Karger returned last month from the company's Western studios in Hollywood, California, where he had launched the policy of fewer and better decided upon by Metro. During his stay in the West he personally supervised the production of forty pictures, his work including collaboration with the adapters, coaching the directors, cutting, titling and assembling the productions.

"Mr. Karger will adhere to a similar policy in his direction of the Eastern productions. And, starting his fifth year with the organization, of which he was one of the founders, he has already began work on Eugene Walter's scenario of 'Love, Honor and Obey,' an adaptation of Charles Neville Buck's novel, 'The Tyranny of Weakness.'

"Mr. Karger had always been a close student of the stage and during his career as an opera violinist carefully noted the work of production from every angle. He was at home in the mechanical field and the business end of production as well as in the matter of artistic direction. He had a background of wide culture and new theories about production in motion pictures, which were yet to be put to the fullest test.

"When Metro was organized five years ago, Mr. Karger was given personal charge of every production. The early system called for fifty-two productions a year. It was a system against which Mr. Karger was mentally in revolt. He felt that marked development in screen work could not be achieved with new pictures turned out at the rate of one a week. So he kept hammering home his ideal of fewer and better pictures.

"His argument, shared by other officials of Metro, was that the motion picture industry was suffering from over-production and the short-run evil—an evil because a short run made it impossible for the producers to put their best into the pictures without piling onto the rocks of financial disaster.

"With that evil overcome, however, Mr. Karger has been confronted with a new one. And that is the scarcity of ideas for screen dramas and the dearth of writers capable of realizing what ideas there are.

"'In the past five years the motion pictures have advanced to a degree of mechanical perfection that goes even beyond the fondest dreams of those of us who were enthusiastic about motion picture possibilities from the start,' he said 'We have seen tremendous strides made, so that the American picture industry is miles ahead of any in the world. And we have seen the best actors of the legitimate stage come by one and more or less successfully learn the new art of motion picture acting.'

"'Today we have the actors, backgrounds, the money—and best of all, audiences of the highest intelligence. The calibre of the 1920 motion picture audience is of a sort that demands the best—and we give them the best we can get.'

"'But now, starting the fifth year of the company, we are beginning a new era—the era of ideas, of stories that recognize motion pictures as a fine art.'

"It is in obtaining the services of the most distinguished authors whose abilities show screen possibilities that Mr Karger sees the greatest future for pictures. And he feels confident that this year will mark the beginning of a time when the material supplied will reach the degree of perfection that the mechanical end has already achieved.

"Mr. Karger was born in Ohio and as a boy showed great promise as a musician. He played in several Chicago orchestras and became an orchestra leader at twenty. Then he won a scholarship that sent him abroad to study under Joachim. His career with the Metropolitan and Philharmonic orchestras and as a solo violinist followed."

Edwin Mortimer To Be Metro Director

Edwin Mortimer, for two years a director with Maurice Tourneur, has been placed on the general staff of the Metro tudios in Hollywood, Calif. He takes up his new duties immediately. Mr. Mortimer has been in motion pictures for a number of years, and before that was an actor on the legitimate stage for fourteen years.

The Latest in Studio Equipment

WITH the rounding out of its fifth year as a motion picture organization, and with the completion of the third big dark stage at its modern studios in Hollywood, Cal., Metro has at its disposal what is believed to be the most perfectly equipped picture-making plant in the world. In describing the production facilities at its disposal in the West Coast studios, Metro Pictures Corporation states:

"Facilities in the West, not to mention those in the East, now include the original extensive studios in Hollywood, with the addition of an equally large lot directly across the street, for future expansion, and also a sixty-five acre tract of land in the wonderful San Fernando Valley. This was acquired recently to furnish outdoor settings for Metro's "fewer and better pictures." It formerly was known as Rose Hill Park, but since its acquisition by the makers of Metro-Classics, it has been renamed Metro Park. It lies fourteen miles northeast of Hollywood, and comprises a rolling, country-like stretch of land with mountains in the distance—an ideal space for making scenes outdoors.

"There are in the main Metro lot in Hollywood five stages—two of which are open, and the other three, the last of which is now undergoing finishing touches in the shape of installation of electrical equipment, dark. While Maxwell Karger, director general of all those big pictures made by Screen Classics, Inc., and distributed through Metro, was in charge of the Western studios, it was found that the dark stages in the main proved more satisfactory for interior 'shots' than those open to the daylight, because indoors a constant light could be got, unaffected by weather conditions or the time of day.

"As far back as a year ago, the Metro plant had ready for production an electrical equipment exceeding that of any other studios in the West. Its nearest competitor in that respect then was considerably behind in the matter of lighting facilities. Dozen after dozen of Cooper-Hewitt stands and goose-necks; Kliegs' California sunlight arcs by the hundreds are at the immediate disposal of directors of the 'fewer and better pictures.'

"And this equipment is of the most modern type. Under a system installed by David Thompson, studio manager, not a line of electric cable is ever stretched across the floor of the immense enclosed stages. All cables are strung overhead, out of the way of directors and players and electricians, so that the floor space is as clean as that of a deserted ballroom. The overhead Cooper-Hewitts are suspended by cables from movable cranes running in grooved rails and able to be moved rapidly to any quarter of the stage whenever required on a particular set. A feature of the studio equipment is the silent control system of lighting. Under this system of lighting the control of all the great banks of Cooper-Hewitts, Kliegs, Wohls and other lights used on his set will be right at the director's finger-tips.

"Laboratories, cutting rooms and photographic workshops of various kinds have been put up to keep pace with the improvement of the facilities where scenes are photographed. Four fire-proof cutting rooms, separate buildings for the plaster modeling department and art title department and a storehouse for surplus scenery were built and furnished under the supervision of Clifford B. Butler, general superintendent of the Metro West Coast plant.

"On the lot across from the studios a spacious four-shop building has been constructed for the plaster-casting department. In this Victor Andre, chief of that work in the Metro studios, and his assistants, carry on their work. A two-story building containing five artists' studios, two lettering shops and a number of storerooms, houses the art department, which is headed by D. Anthony Tauszky. On the studio grounds a storehouse 140 feet in length has been built for laying away extra flats and other studio equipment when not in use.

"The newest structure, the third dark stage, slightly larger than the two dark stages, cost $45,000 to make. It is 90 x 100 feet in dimensions, with twenty feet wings on each side. It is roofed over, skylighted and used for the making of interior scenes by artificial illumination. The skylight is blackened.

"The capacity of the big studios in Hollywood as yet has not been tested to the full, but six companies easily can work there without interfering with each other. Recently there were photoplays headed by Bert Lytell, May Allison, Viola Dana, Emma Dunn, Alice Lake and one of the Drury Lane melodrama companies shooting scenes on the lot at the same time. All were unusually big productions, but there was no conflict in the demand for space for the reason that this is so enormous."

Metro Reviews Nazimova's Work

IN a statement just issued, Metro Pictures Corporaion gives a retrospect of Nazimova's career under the Metro banner and proclaims the Russian star to be the "world's greatest actress." The statement is submitted as follows:

"Nazimova, the Russian star, has done eight pictures and is in the midst of her ninth production for Metro Pictures Corporation. Since coming under the Metro banner Nazimova has won for herself the title of the world's greatest actress—a title bestowed not only by American critical observers and the great army of American motion picture 'fans' but also by the conservative reviewers of England.

"Nazimova's work has but recently been widely placed in Europe, through an arrangement made by Metro with Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., in London, of which Sir William Jury is managing director, and the Mundus Film company in Paris, under the direction of Madame Schuepbach. European critics instantly acknowledge her leadership, comparing her with Ellen Terry, Madame Rejane and Bernhardt, emotional queens of yesterday.

"The brilliant artiste had made but one cinema production prior to signing her contract with Metro. Her first picture for Metro, produced by Nazimova Productions, was 'Revelation.' As Joline, 'daughter of joy,' a grisette of the Paris cafes, in this drama of primitive feminine emotions, adapted from Mabel Wagnall's novelette, 'A Rosebush of a Thousand Years,' Nazimova's success was instantaneous.

"From the very beginning she was established as a box-office 'attraction sans pareil, so great was her immediate popularity. Her productions from the start challenged long established film favorites for leadership, and in a short while she had passed them, according to authentic figures from exhibitors. One box-office record after another toppled when Nazimova was shown on the screen, while the superb quality of her acting caused picture-goers to marvel.

A new photograph of Nazimova, Metro's great star, whose latest picture is "The Heart of a Child"

"Nazimova followed 'Revelation' with 'Toys of Fate,' in the dual role of Azah, the gypsy girl, and Hagar, her mother, who was faithless in love; 'Eye for Eye,' playing Hassouna, Bedouin child of the desert; 'Out of the Fog,' in the dual role of Eve, the fisher-girl and Faith, her mother; 'The Red Lantern,' again playing two contrasted parts, those of Mablee, the Eurasian, or half-Chinese maiden and Blanche Sackville, her English half-sister; 'The Brat,' doing Maude Fulton's role of the chorus girl; 'Stronger than Death,' enacting an English dancer caught in a swirl of dramatic events in the heart of India, and 'The Heart of a Child,' wherein she does a London gutter snipe, a product of Limehouse who later climbs to the dizziest social heights.

"'The Heart of a Child' is Nazimova's current release. It is based on Frank Danby's powerful novel, and was adapted to the screen by Charles Bryant, who also plays the leading male role of Lord Kidderminster opposite the star. Ray C. Smallwood directed. Nazimova is at work on an entirely different theme than any of the plays mentioned. Neither the title of the picture nor the details of the plot are announced by Metro. It is the desire of the star to maintain the closest secrecy concerning this production, which she promises will be a complete surprise to her many admirers.

"Nazimova recently renewed her contract with Metro for a lengthy period."

VITAGRAPH

DAVID SMITH, the Vitagraph director who recently made "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," left this week for a trip of two weeks to the Portland, Oregon country to select locations for the next James Oliver Curwood story. Niles Welch has been engaged to play the lead in this story, and plans for sending a troupe to Oregon will be completed by the time Director Smith has locations selected.

Two accidents were reported from the Vitagraph plant this week. Earle Williams was in an automobile accident near Santa Barbara when two cars came together. The company was in the north working on exteriors for "The Three Keys," being directed by Chester Bennett with Vola Vale playing the feminine lead. Williams received several scalp wounds, and the accident delayed production several days.

Bill Hauber in driving an automobile over a cliff in Griffith Park this week for the Larry Semon comedy to follow, "The Fly Cop," could not extricate himself from beneath the steering wheel in order to jump into the net alongside the leap of the car, and was forced to remain in the machine during its thirty-five food dive. None of Hauber's bones were broken, but it is feared he was internally injured. His true condition will not be known for several days.

It so happened that five Vitagraph companies were working at the studio one day early this week, and each of the five required mob scenes. In all approximately 1,500 people were busy at the plant that day.

The mammoth bridge built across a canyon in the Vitagraph exterior lot is to be destroyed next week for scenes in the William Duncan serial, "The Silent Avenger." This is to be the most spectacular stunt staged for this serial, and the building of the bridge and preparation of the same, which will be destroyed in an instant, has taken more than five weeks.

The two water polo teams of the Los Angeles Athletic Club worked with the Antonio Moreno Company in the making of scenes for, "The Veiled Woman," serial under the direction of Webster Cullison this week. A number of water polo scenes were made in the big tank at the Vitagraph plant.

UNIVERSAL

CASTS for two Universal productions were selected this week. The subject to be made under the direction of R. S. Sturgeon, "The Girl in the Rain," will star Ann Cornwall, and the supporting cast will include Lloyd Bacon, Jessalyn Van Trump, James Farley, George Konkle and James Liddy. This picture will have a Kentucky setting, and has to do with the reformation of a man who perfected a counterfeiting plant to insure that his sister receive a college education.

Lynn Reynolds, who is to direct the making of "The Red Lane," adapted from the Holman Day story of the same title, will have Frank Mayo and Lillian Rick as his principals, and the other players named are Jean Hersholt, James Mason, Paul Weigel, James O'Neill, Harry Lamont and Frank Thorne. This is a story of a U. S. Secret Service man on the Canadian border, and the plot is laid about a saloon on the Canadian-U. S. Border, half of which is in the United States, and half across the line.

Harry Carey is to make another appearance in a dress suit in his coming production, "Human Stuff," now being made by Director Reeves Eason. The early scenes of this picture are laid in the East where Carey is seen as the son of a wealthy manufacturer.

Continuities are being written for two new productions to be started shortly. One is titled, "Mirama," which is being prepared by Doris Schroeder. It is laid in the South Sea Islands, and may serve as a vehicle for Priscilla Dean.

Harvey Gates is writing the continuity for a H. H. Van Loan story titled, "Fightin' Job," which will no doubt be the next vehicle for Harry Carey.

GARSON

THE final editing of the Clara Kimball Young picture, "The Soul of Rafael," is now being done, and it is expected the final viewing of the picture will be held at the Garson studios some time this week. General Manager Harry Carson has been to Chicago on a business trip, and is expected back on April 8th.

The stage play by Arthur Wing Pinero, "Mid Channel," is to be Miss Young's next vehicle. J. Frank Glendon has been selected to play the opposite lead, but no director for this subject has been selected.

GASNIER

WORK is progressing on the third Lew Cody production for Robertson Cole which has been titled, "The Mischief Man." This is an original screen play by Elmer Foist, author of a number of plays for Metro and Fox, and the continuity was written by H. Tipton Steck. Betty Blythe and Elinor Fair, together with Lloyd Hamilton are the principals.

The first Lloyd Hamilton comedy made at the Gasnier studios by Gilbert Pratt, has been completed and titled, "The Whiffenpoof." This comedy is to be released by Educational.

Two airplanes have been used for the past ten days by the Ruth Roland Company in episodes for "Broadway Bab," which is being directed by George Marshall.

Censorship Now Unnecessary

BY CECIL B. DE MILLE

ALMOST coincidently with the founding of the motion picture industry, film censorship came into existence. With varying degrees of destructiveness, it has continued to hamper and nullify the work of the producer down to the present moment.

In the early days, censorship was a much more widely spread evil than it is today. Nearly forty states and many cities claimed the right to say what their citizens should and should not see on the screen.

Fortunately, that day has gone, never to return, it is to be hoped. Today but a few states and as many cities maintain formal boards of censorship. But these relatively few and the existing censorship organization in Canada cause the producer unlimited trouble without, in our opinion, accomplishing anything which justifies their existence.

Motion picture producers long ago realized that, irrespective of what censorship boards may or may not do, the public is the final judge and the final censor. The major portion of the people of the United States realize this fact equally well, as is evidenced by the constantly diminishing number of censorship organizations.

Perhaps there was a time when cheaply sensational screen plays succeeded but that day lives in memory only. Every motion picture producer knows that, but unfortunately the censors do not seem to realize the existing conditions.

The motion picture theatre of today caters to all classes but if there is one class which, more than any other, patronizes the cinema houses, it is the family group. Exhibitors are careful to maintain the constant good will of this patronage. The exhibitors know that they cannot give their patrons pictures which jeopardize the existence of this good will. And the producer knows that he cannot sell his product to the exhibitors if that product promises to damage the good name of the theatre.

As the situation stands today, the existing censorship boards have established individual standards each differing from the other. What passes one board may be deleted by another. An amusing instance of this occurred several years ago at the time we produced "Carmen." At that time, thirty-odd censorship boards censored this production. And of more than thirty cuts made, no two boards cut the same things.

The result, from the producers' standpoint, is that it is impossible to please all of the censors and the production suffers accordingly. Every censor considers himself, or his board, as the only and final authority. Each board makes its own changes with the result the continuity of the story is, in nearly every instance, ruined.

Just why the screen should be made to bear the burden of censorship while the stage escapes has never been made clear. A stage production which oversteps the bounds of decency or morality meets with immediate suppression. This is as it should be. The same end should meet any and all screen dramas which come in the same category.

Why, on the other hand, trifling and troublesome alterations, based on the personal beliefs or moral codes of individual censors, should be permitted to destroy the producer's finished work remains an unsolved riddle to those of us who are giving our best to the screen. We know that the public will receive only the best. Some day in the not-too-far-distant future, the states and cities which maintain censorship boards will awaken to the visible facts of the case and abolish once and for all the present autocratic organizations which hamper our work and prevent the public from getting that which it pays its money to see—the complete, properly constructed and dramatically correct photodrama.

JOTTINGS

OUR impression of the Motion Picture Directors' Association Ball is one of a vivid, glittering mass of color and light. As someone said, film players have so little chance to go in for color that they make the most of it when they do. It is our belief that every costume of startling shade that has been displayed on Fifth Ave. and on 57th St. during the past month, was worn at that ball, for never in our simple young lives, have we imagined such combinations of hues or such quantity of brilliancy as we saw last Saturday night. Mae Powerful lights were thrown on the dancers throughout the evening, adding to the brilliance of the scene, and everyone seemed to enjoy the evening hugely.

Arthur H. Jacobs, who opened offices about six months ago at 145 West 45th St. for the purpose of representing prominent artists and casting productions, is now completing arrangements whereby he will double his present activities and organization. He has established a Book and Play Department, under the direction of Mr. E. A. Weil, who will endeavor to supply suitable material for film productions. The motion picture rights for new and old theatrical successes can be secured through this department as well as original work of prominent authors. Each article is said to be carefully read and considered before it is submitted. Mr. Jacobs' slogan has been "Quality and Service" and the rapid growth of his business in such a short space of time gives fair indication that he has carried out his ideals to a most conscientious and successful degree.

The Way of the Griffith Studio

A Glimpse of a Few of the Noted Players Between Scenes

NOW that the Studio Directory is entirely out of our hands, and we've installed a dictaphone that repeats into our telephone transmitter at regular intervals: "It's at the binder's. We're still hoping for its appearance ultimately;" thus saving us a tremendous amount of vocal effort.

We set out one day last week to enjoy ourselves. We succeeded. We wish we could succeed one-quarter as well in getting that Directory out on time But then, of course, we don't have Mr. R. E. Long and the Griffith Studio to help us with the Directory.

We had been looking forward to seeing Mr. Griffith and the Gishes and Richard Barthelmess and Carol Dempster and all the rest of his delightful company ever since they first came East to produce, and hoping that sooner or later we'd be able to watch them work. We expected to sense an unusually delightful atmosphere, as we had been told frequently by a few of our really reliable friends that it existed. But it was even more delightful than we had supposed.

Dorothy Gish under the direction of Richard Jones, was working on a new comedy that has not yet been named, but it has to do with a young wife's efforts to please her husband upon his return from France, and Dorothy was trying, with the aid of a flurried butler, to cook a delectable dinner in about ten minutes, without her husband's even suspecting that the real cook had departed. While we watched her glancing through no less than fifteen cook books, and demanding one ingredient after another, with the "pep" that she can put into such scenes, we were entertained on the side lines by the aforesaid husband, who should have known nothing of what was going on, but in reality, was enjoying the comedy as heartily as anyone. This was James Rennie, who is playing opposite Miss Gish for the second time. In one scene in the picture, he will be called upon to take his "young wife" up in an airplane, and there will be no faking the incident, as Mr. Rennie was in the Royal Flying Corps for two years during the war, and has all the qualifications attributed to the character he is playing, all the flying qualification, at least.

At our first opportunity, we mentioned the flying scene to Miss Gish, and were met with unlimited enthusiasm. "It's a chance I've been hoping for ever since I've been in pictures," she exclaimed. "I wouldn't miss it for anything! There's no use in your worrying about me," she added to Mr. Long, "I'll come down, you know, Everyone does."

"I've no doubt about that," he replied, "but I hope it will be safely."

About three o'clock, someone brought her a glass of milk and a piece of cake, and we discovered that while most of us had had a delicious luncheon in the studio's cafe, the little star had been working straight ahead, with no stop for food.

From the kitchen set, we approached a view of the tropics, where Carol Dempster was having close-ups taken. Mr. Griffiths was personally directing this picture, although he seemed to be watching everything, and offering suggestions whenever they were wanted. There was music, very dreamy and romantic, for Mr. Griffith believes in creating the right moods, in this way, and Miss Gish has laughingly explained that the several companies frequently had to wait for one another to finish, because it was rather difficult to do comedies while the musicians were playing "The Blue Danube," for instance or a selection from "Lohengrin."

"Way Down East" is also in course of production, under Mr. Griffith's direction, although there were no scenes in it scheduled for that day. Four pictures being made at once—it is a large organization to have been built up and to be carried on under the complete control of one man. He deserves all the admiration and respect that he has won in such abundance, for he has talent for constructive organization as well as artistic genius—a rare combination.—Marguerite Jones.

CLEVELAND

The Strand Theatre Quartet has just closed a tremendously successful eight-weeks' engagement at the Strand theatre, Cleveland, and is now preparing to fulfill a series of engagements at the leading first-run motion picture theatres throughout Ohio.

M. A. Levey, local manager of the Robertson-Cole exchange, came back to town last week from the R-C convention so imbued with enthusiasm that he went out in the territory and closed up first run booking on "The White Dove" for the Hippodrome, Toledo; Libert, Youngstown, and Knickerbocker, Columbus.

Masterpiece Film Attractions is gradually lining up a lot of big features for early spring release, in accordance with their new special photoplay policy. The newest one to join the Masterpiece list is "Frivolous Wives," a Jans production directed by B. A. Rolfe.

Angelius Constant, motion picture magnate, who owns and operates the Olympia and the Strand theatres, Steubenville, and the American in East Liverpool, says the picture business in these towns has never been better.

Henry Laws, Metro's booker, is conspicuously absent from his desk in the Sincere building. He is just getting over an attack of diphtheria.

For forty-eight dours during the past week, motion picture exchanges were in a turmoil, owing to the sudden express strike that tied up all transportation. On Thursday morning the express drivers refused to go to work. Exchanges employ parcel post for film transportation, but this avenue was badly congested by night. Several exhibitors in the State reported dark houses Thursday night, but by Friday all difficulties were adjusted and films were being delivered with the usual promptness.

R. C. Buttolph, manager of the B. B. Film Distributors, Inc., of Cleveland, in a very plain advertisement appearing in a local motion picture journal tells why he is so set against the deposit system. The deposit system is indefensible," Buttolph says. "And it is up to the exhibitor to relegate it to the junk heap." The film business must be run just like any other business, to make it a permanent institution. Good shows will make good money for the exhibitor, and the exhibitor will not fail to pay his bills regularly if he is given good shows to run.

SEATTLE

During the celebration of "Coffee Week" in Seattle and Tacoma, "The Gift of Heaven," made by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company especially for this occasion, was shown in the different picture theatres and was well received.

W. A. Simons has been made president, and Henry Turner manager of the Missoula Amusement Company, of Missoula, Mont. This concern operates an extensive string of houses in Idaho and Montana.

W. A. Baker, formerly owner of the Empress theatre, Chewelah, Wis., is now building a house at Kennewick, Wash., which will seat over 600.

James Q. Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer Theatre, Inc., has secured the Washington franchise of the Associated Exhibitors. Mr. Clemmer is second vice-president of the association. The first showings of all Associated Exhibitors' pictures in the Washington territory will be presented at the Clemmer.

For the fourth time and the sixth week "The Miracle Man" has been shown in Seattle. For three weeks the Strand played it as a first run; and it has come back three times, each time playing a full week to large audiences.

At the International Mining Convention, which will be held in Seattle in April, motion pictures will play a prominent part. The development of coal and the mining of metals will be shown on the screen.

PORTLAND, O.

A series of Thursday afternoon half-hour orchestra concerts has been started by A. C. Raleigh, manager of the Columbia theatre. The Columbia is the first Portland cinema to stage its special concert during the week, as other theatres have their musical events on Sunday at 12:30 noon or one hour later.

For the first time in its history, the Star theatre of Portland has its own manager. Heretofore, it has shared honors with either or both the Peoples and Majestic theatres, all three houses being under the direction of Jensen and Von Herberg. Fred G. Beagley is the new Star manager.

The sun officially and finally set for Portland's oldest motion picture house, the Sunset, on Sunday evening, March 28. The lease of the theatre has been sold by John J. Jennings to a corporation which will tear down the present theatre and erect a modern store and office building. The swan song of the Sunset was sung by practically every Portland film man Sunday evening after the final show in response to an invitation to a "wake" from Mr. Jennings.

Admission was made by C. S. Jensen recently that the motion picture firm of Jensen and Von Herberg was negotiating for a 50-year lease of the location on which the Majestic today stands. Jensen and Von Herberg have a lease on this theatre which will continue seven or eight years longer; but should a longer lease be obtained, a modern theatre will immediately be erected, according to Mr. Jensen. The new theatre will represent an expenditure of $850,000, including rental, and will accommodate 3,000 persons.

Ralph Winsor, former manager of the Sunset theatre, entered the service of Jensen & Von Herberg on April 5. At present he is connected with the Portland Liberty theatre and during the absence of Paul E. Noble, manager, during May, Mr. Winsor will have entire charge.

Four Universal comedies running in four of Portland's five first run motion picture theatres at one time is the record made by C. W. Koerner, branch manager for the Universal exchange.

Recent visitors at the Portland branch office for Universal include Art Kolstad, of the Liberty, Hood River; Manager Marsten, of the Noble and Orpheum, Marshfield; T. S. Woolson, of the Opera, Camas, Wash.; W. H. Durman, of the Grand, Camas, Wash.; and representatives of the firm of Matlock and Gruelick, operators of the Arcade, Pendleton.

PROVIDENCE

The managers of the local moving picture theatres are starting a crusade against the male patron who annoys women During the past three weeks, several arrests have been made and the men so taken have been fined in the District Court on assault charges. The managers desire their women patrons to notify them of the slightest annoyance, that the undesirable element may be cleaned out, or the malicious practice stopped.

"Danny" Daniels, the old time secretary of the Providence Baseball Club, is in town this week. He has gone into the moving picture industry, and comes here as the agent for the First National's "In Old Kentucky."

SAN FRANCISCO

Escondido, Cal., is to have a new motion picture theatre, to be erected upon the site of the old Avenue House. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 1,000, with a frontage of 50 feet and a depth of 140 feet. One of the latest types of organs is to be installed at a cost of about $8,000. N. O. Emeit, lessee of the Princess theatre in the same town, will lease and operate the new house.

The Plaza theatre in San Diego, Calif., has given a contract to the Robert Morton Organ Company, of Van Nuys, Calif., for the installation of a two-manual organ to cost about $18,000. There will be pit installation, similar to that being put in the recently constructed theatres on the coast.

House Manager Russell Rogers, of the Plaza, San Diego, also announces that special stage settings are being painted by Edwin H. Flagg, the scenic artist who did work for Grauman's, the California, and other Los Angeles houses.

Paul Maiss, the organist at the Superba, rendered as an overture for Easter and the following week "The Rosary."

CANADA

Mayor T. L. Church, of Toronto, Ont., has issued a statement in which he intimates that local censorship of moving pictures is desired. He urges that the examination of all moving pictures can be placed under the jurisdiction of the inspectors of the police department with returned soldiers doing the actual work. He does not say definitely that he wants this arrangement to replace the present Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors, and it has been pointed out that if the civic administration makes any move to censor films, lobby displays or moving picture advertising the Provincial Government will step in with a prohibitory order.

Hon. Edward Brown, Provincial Treasurer of Manitoba, has announced that the Manitoba Board of Censors has been empowered to scrutinize all moving picture theatre advertising and to report to him all instances of newspaper, billboard or other advertising that are considered objectionable.

Under the regulation adopted, exhibitors of the Province who are judged to be guilty of using obscene or questionable advertising matter will run the risk of having their theatre licenses cancelled. Hon. Mr. Brown has issued the warning that such action may be taken on the first offence. The censors will examine all theatre advertising after it has been published.

The Women's Press Club of Winnipeg, Manitoba, organized a theatre party to attend the Monday evening presentation of the First National special release, "The Right of Way," which is a Canadian story, at the National Theatre, Winnipeg.

Canadian Theatres, Limited, is the name of a new Western Canadian theatre syndicate which has been organized. The headquarters of the new company are located at Calgary, Alberta. A number of houses are represented in the enterprise, it is stated, and the main object is to arrange for cooperative bookings.

BUFFALO

Plans for a $1,500,000 theatre and office building, to be located at Washington street and Broadway, were announced this week by Maurice Shea, local theatre magnate. The theatre will have a frontage of 182 feet on Washington street and 160 feet on Broadway. It will have a seating capacity of 4,500 to 5,800 and will be operated by a company to be known as the Olympic Amusement Company. The new house will take in the Family and Lyric theatres and when the new house opens, it is expected that the Olympic will be closed. Thus the new theatre will mean the passing of three Buffalo houses.

The new Capitol theatre, Triangle street and South Park avenue, opened to the public Easter Sunday. It is one of the finest neighborhood houses in Buffalo and is owned by George Hall and George Haney. The theatre was filled with flowers on opening day from Buffalo exhibitors, exchange managers and friends of the owners. The house cost $150,000 and has a seating capacity of 1,200. Constance Talmadge in "A Virtuous Vamp," was the opening attraction.

Allan S. Moritz, manager of the Buffalo Famous Players-Lasky office, has been elected president of the Buffalo Motion Picture Exchange Managers' Association, succeeding J. E. Kimberly, who recently resigned as manager of the Republic office. A Grievance Committee has been appointed by the exchange managers, consisting of H. H. Greenwald, Fox, chairman; Frank S. Hopkins, Universal; Archie Mosen, Select; Harry Marcey and W. Allen, Vitagraph.

Frank Lotko has opened a new theatre in Niagara Falls. It is the Colonial and has a seating capacity of about 700. The house is located on 24th street and is one of the coziest in the town.

S. L. Lambert this week began the erection of a large four story theatre building on East Main street, Welland, Ont. The theatre will be the largest block in the town, being 60 and 100 feet. A department store and bank will use parts of the building.

To Expand Production in East : : : : :

METRO begins its fifth anniversary activities this month with its New York studios renovated, and the first production to be made in the East since early in 1918 now under way. The resumption of Eastern productions, in conjunction with the productions that will continue to be made at Holywood, California, ushers in the company's new year with promise of production on the largest scale yet attempted. The amount of productions will be increased during the year with the opening of a third studio to be built on Long Island.

The initial outlay for the Long Island studio will be in the neighborhood of $2,000,000 it is stated. Plans have been drawn for buildings, which it is declared will combine all the features of the elaborate Pacific Coast studios.

"The aim is to make the Long Island studios the most distinctive in the country" announces Metro Pictures Corporation, "and no efforts are being spared to realize this aim. A feature of the new stage will be a special electrical equipment."

Announcement of the site that has been obtained has been withheld for the present, but it is announced that work will be rushed through as soon as the present difficulties in the building trade are settled. The recent agreement of the builders and bricklayers has given impetus to the work.

Metro states that its purpose in having three studios in operation at the same time is to "increase output without being crowded into 'rush work'. The same underlying policy that has marked the 'fewer and better' series of pictures will be pursued," continues the Metro statement," and the increased output will be obtained through the utilization of entirely new companies, directors and studio staffs."

The New York Studios are at No. 3 West Sixty-first street, overlooking Columbus Circle and a long stretch of Broadway on the South side and all of lower Central Park on the East. These studios were abandoned in 1918 because of the war demand for coal restrictions. All activities were transferred to the Pacific Coast.

The work on renovating the studios was begun early in February, under the supervision of M. P. Staulcup, Metro art director and technical expert, and his assistant, Frank Namzy. They were the first of the Metro men to return from the West. They were followed in March by Maxwell Karger, Metro Director General; George McGuire, his assistant, who was formerly Metro's chief cutter; William Meyerhof, who heads the electrical department at the new studios; Lewis Dickhaut, chief carpenter, and Julius Gazvarde, his assistant.

The studios and Metro offices occupy the sixth and seventh floors of the Sixty-first street building, running through to Sixty-second street. The stage on the seventh floor has a floor space of 150 by 73 feet. All the old flooring has been torn up and an entire new concrete floor put in.

The glass roof was painted black, as Metro, from its experience with its Pacific coast studios at Hollywood, became convinced of the necessity for "no daylight" interiors. New Cooper-Hewitt lights have been installed.

In productions at the New York studio Mr. Staulcup intends to use the natural "backings" that the studio affords for New York, representing Central Park, Broadway and Eighth avenue.

The entrance to the studio is on the sixth floor, where Joseph Strauss, studio manager, has his office. The bookkeeping and business departments are also on this floor, along with the dressing rooms, which have been repainted and repapered. Nearly all of the old Metro scenery, which was kept in the store room, when Metro went west, has been scrapped. The carpenter shop has had new equipment installed. A new screen has gone up in the projecting room, and the lunch room, kitchen, film cutting room and receiving department have been completely overhauled. All of the walls on both floors have been repainted.

On the seventh floor, besides the stage, there are the offices of Mr. Karger, Mr. McGuire, Mr. Staulcup, Mr. Namezy and Mr. Meyerhof. Another office on this floor has been fixed up for Eugene Walter. A scenario office has been taken over by Arthur Zellner, who recently came from the Pacific coast to write continuity in New York. Another office is being fitted up for June Mathis, the head of Metro's scenario department, who is shortly expected to return from Hollywood to New York.

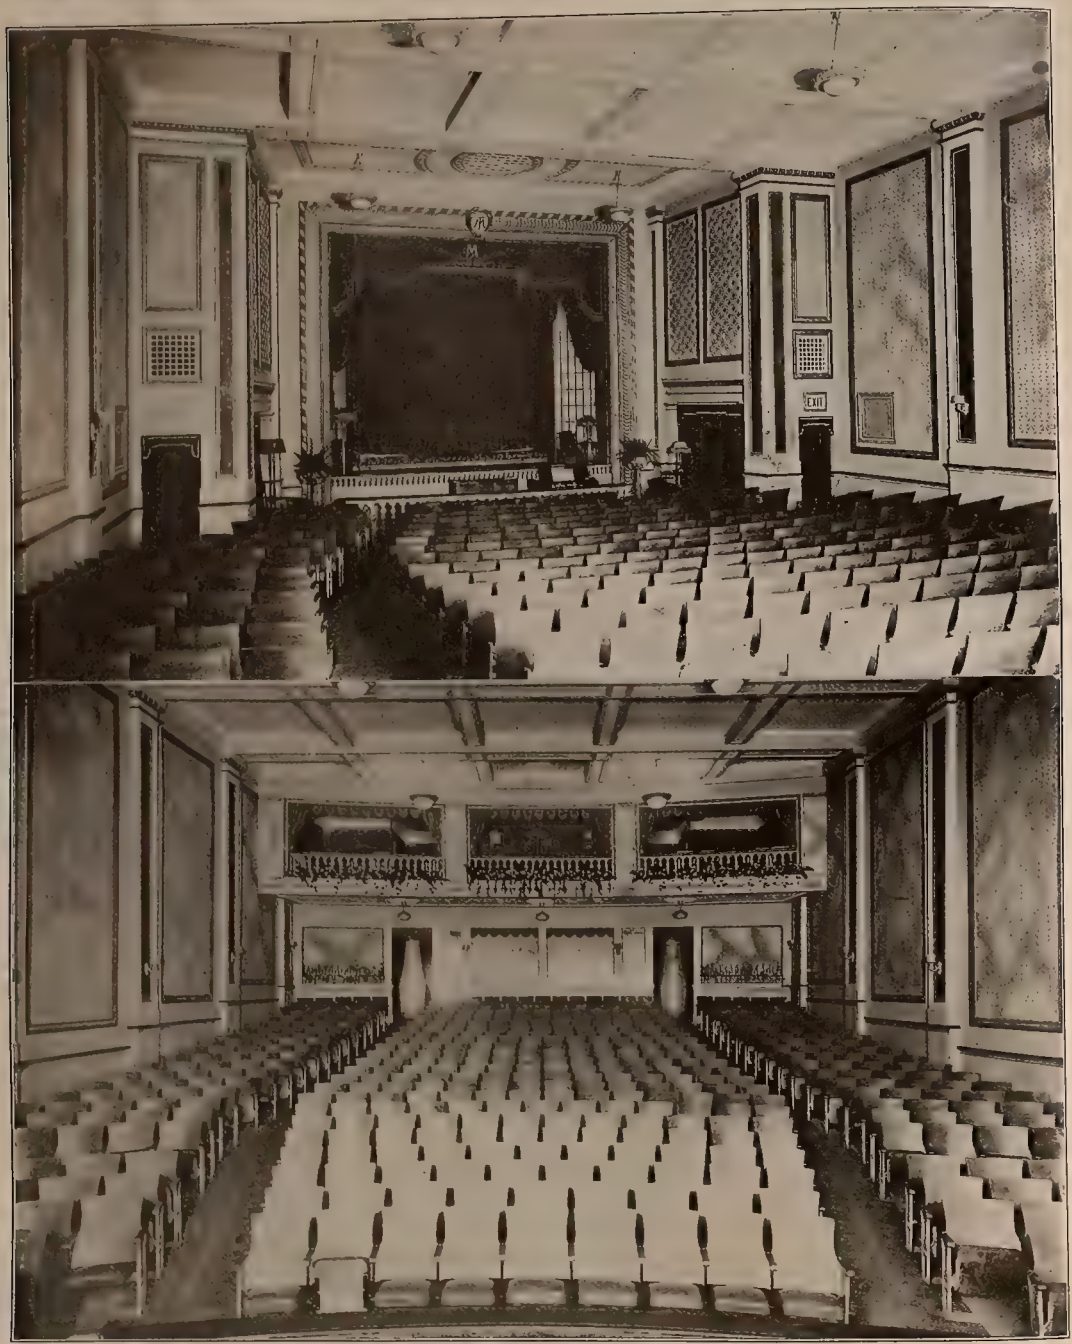
Two Very Artistic Spots Found in the Benicia Majestic



The photographs accompanying the story on the Majestic theatre prove that it is possible to have beauty in a house of small seating capacity. In the case of the Majestic the stamp of quality is seen on the exterior as well as within the auditorium

The 550 Seat Majestic Theatre Compares With the Best

This Theatre Has a Unique Layout for Its Mezzanine Floor

The Majestic Is a Wonderful House for a Small Town

BENICIA, California, has recently been given as fine a theatre as a town of 2,300 persons could wish for. The Majestic, which is illustrated by full page plates on pages 3711 and 3712, was opened on February 22 with W. B. Crooks as manager. James W. Plachek, of Berkeley, was the architect and Henry McCullough was in charge of construction.

The seating capacity of the theatre is 550, with 500 seats on the main floor and the remainder on the mezzanine. It is built of brick and concrete and is fireproof throughout. The total cost of the structure was about $75,000.

The front of the building is finished in three shades of a tapestry brick. A large marquee adds to the attractiveness of the theatre front. The vestibule walls and floor are finished in marble. There are five sets of double doors with ten mirrors in each, leading into the theatre. The foyer measures 45 x 12 feet and is done in cain stone with heavy carpets over all. At one end of the foyer is a ladies' rest room and at the other end is the manager's office and a stairway leading to the mezzanine floor. In the auditorium, richly colored tapestry panels and pilasters break up the side walls.

The aisles are covered with thick carpeting and the seats, which were furnished by the American Seating Company, are upholstered.

A stage has been provided large enough to accommodate small shows and musical acts. A beautiful velour drop curtain costing $1,700 is at the front of the stage. Up each side of the proscenium arch is an organ chamber.

The organ is the latest style of Robert Morton orchestral instrument and is presided over by Mr. Frank Horback.

A great deal of attention has been given to the decorations of the interior. The auditorium abounds in artificial flowers, potted plants and ferns.

There is considerable worthy of study in the layout and placing of the mezzanine floor. As shown in one of the accompanying illustrations, this floor is a sort of rest room and mezzanine combined. Placed at the back of the theatre on a level with the projection room and equipped with rich hangings and carpets this mezzanine floor has an attraction seldom found in theatres of this size.

The projection room is set back from the mezzanine seats and its location allows practically a level throw to the screen, the best condition for perfect projection. It is 15 x 13 and 12 feet high. In it are two Simplex machines, a dissolver, a spotlight and a motor rewind. There is also a storage cabinet for holding films when not in use. Off at one side of the projection room is the generator room. Here are found two Fort Wayne motor generators with controls. D. McLaughlin and Aubrey Williams preside over the projection equipment.

The color scheme of the theatre is mulberry blue and gold. Lights are so arranged to give a soft mellow glow and the theatre as a whole gives a patron a feeling of quietness and restfulness. Before building the house, Manager Crooks made a trip all through the principal cities of the East, visiting other theatres and taking many notes which later were embodied in the construction and equipping of the Majestic.

It is probable that Mr. Crooks will erect another theatre soon in either Sacramento or Oakland, California, and it is reasonable to expect that the new building will maintain the high mark that the Majestic has set.

New Theatre for Evansville, Indiana, To Cost Over Half Million Dollars

Standard Theatres Company to Add 2500 Seat House to Its Chain of Theatres

EVANSVILLE, Indiana, is to have a splendid new theatre as is shown in the accompanying illustration of the building to be erected during the year for The Standard Theatres Company of Indianapolis, Indiana, at a cost of more than $665,000.

This building will be located in the heart of the business district of Evansville, fronting 148½ feet on Main Street and 142½ feet on Sixth Street and will be of brick, steel and concrete construction, fireproof throughout. The front portion has been planned for hotel purposes and will be six stories high, containing more than one hundred rooms, all with bath.

The theatre with a seating capacity of 2500 will occupy the rear portion of the site, with an entrance on the corner, providing a beautiful lobby 24 x 50 feet. Every comfort has been provided for the patrons and all equipment will be of the very latest and finest type obtainable. The stage is large enough to accommodate the most extensive legitimate production, although a program of vaudeville and pictures will be the usual offering.

The Standard Theatre Company, which will operate this theatre, is a million dollar corporation and one of the co-working units in a chain comprising The Bankers and Merchants Theatres Company, The Terre Haute Theatres Company and The Peoples Theatres Company, with theatres at Fort Wayne, Richmond and Terre Haute. It is at present engaged in erecting at Clinton, Indiana, an 1,100 seat house at a cost of $150,000 and has purchased land at Anderson, Indiana, on which it will build a 1,300-seat theatre this year. It is a fixed policy with this chain to locate their theatres on the busiest side of the busiest street next to the busiest corner, and their successes in the past have amply justified this procedure.

Evansville may indeed be proud of this handsome addition to its busiest district and satisfied in the possession of one of the finest amusement houses in the State.

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

EXHIBITORS HERALD

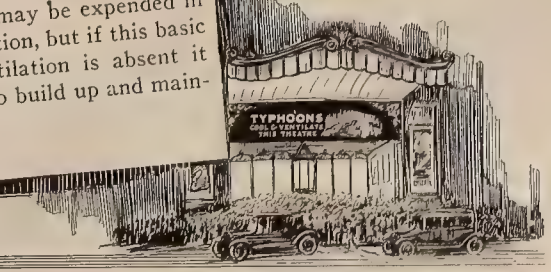
VENTILATION

by MARTIN J. QUIGLEY

CERTAINLY there is nothing more fundamental in the business of an exhibitor than keeping his theatre in such a physical condition throughout that patrons have at least no good cause for complaint.

A surprisingly large number of exhibitors are not doing this. Many failures to provide agreeable physical surroundings occur in the matter of ventilation—a basic and indispensable requirement for every well ordered theatre.

Poor ventilation or no ventilation at all strikes at the very root of a theatre's success. The day has passed when patrons may be expected to tolerate for any considerable length of time a theatre where the air is foul and unhealthy.



Thousands of dollars may be expended in good pictures and exploitation, but if this basic requirement of good ventilation is absent it will be found impossible to build up and maintain a satisfied patronage.

Kinema Has Straightaway Projection

The Kinema theatre was recently opened to the public of Salt Lake City. Mr. William Cutts, who has been appointed manager of the new house has gone to unusual efforts in catering to the convenience of his patrons. The two pages of illustrations of this theatre show many of the points that have been the cause of the favorable comment.

Mr. Cutts has laid out an artistic foyer with comfortable chairs and settees. The women's rest room was designed and furnished by one of the city's most expert interior decorators. Chairs, a chaise lounge, writing desks and tables, all in attractive wicker style, make it an ideal rest room.

In the interior of the house, the operator's projection room is situated on a level with the screen, giving a maximum value to the projection. The effect of the outside lobby is enhanced by a large shield canopy bordered with electric lights.

Cutts expects to make his house one of the principal first-run houses in the West. He was the first man in his territory to sign up for "The Virgin of Stamboul," the big Universal-Jewel picture starring Priscilla Dean.

Typhoon Fan Ships Large Typhoons

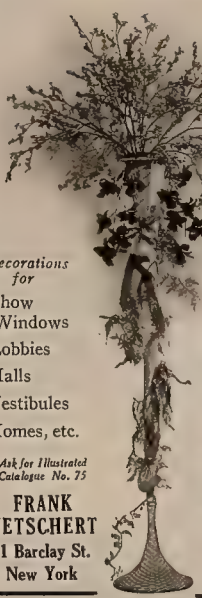
The Typhoon Fan Company of New York has recently received more orders for large diameter Typhoons than ever before. This is due, of course, to the fact that there are many more large theatres being constructed now than for the past several years, requiring cooling and ventilation during the warm weather. Some idea of the size of these large fans may be had referring to the accompanying illustration.

This particular Typhoon is 12 ft. in diameter. Two others are being made ready for shipment to the Cozy theatre, Okmulgee, Okla.

One 10 ft. diameter has recently been shipped to Harry Crandall's new Strand theatre, Cumberland, Md., together with several of smaller size. Four other 10 ft. Typhoons have been shipped to the Victory theatre, Tampa, Fla.

Takes Temporary Office

The New York office of the American Photoplayer Co., has been moved to the Hotel Schuyler at 57 West 45th Street, where temporary headquarters will be maintained.



Atlanta Office for Typhoon Fan

Mr. Ernst Glantzberg, president of the Typhoon Fan Company, has left New York for the South and will stop over at Atlanta, Ga., where he will open a permanent office and headquarters for the Typhoon Fan Company. Mr. F. K. Ricksecker of Atlanta, has been appointed representative in this territory.

Mr. Ricksecker is well known not only throughout the South, but in other parts of the country where he has been identified for the past four or five years with the American Photo Player Company.

The Atlanta office makes the fifth in the chain of offices that are being established by the Typhoon Fan Company.

Before returning, Mr. Glantzberg will visit Nashville, Knoxville, New Orleans, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Chicago.

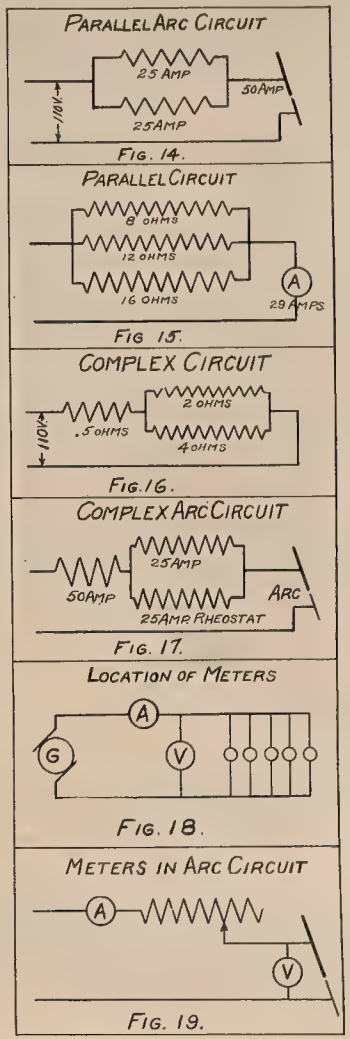
Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Practical Electricity—VII
Study Lessons for the Projectionist

OFTEN in an arc circuit in order to get the desired amount of current flow two rheostat are used in parallel. By this connection we obtain a resistance of a carrying capacity equal to the current capacity of the sum of the two. An arc circuit using rheostats in parallel is shown by Fig. 14.

Here two 25-ampere rheostats designed for a 110-volt circuit are connected in parallel giving a total capacity of 50 amperes for the circuit, the current flow being divided equally between the two branches.



As an illustration of the method of solving the current flow through parallel paths we will use the circuit shown in Fig. 15 in which resistances of 8, 12 and 16 ohms, respectively, are connected to form parallel paths for the flow of the current through the circuit. An ammeter connected in the circuit shows a current flow of 29 amperes, and it is desired to find the current which is flowing in the separate branches.

It is first necessary to find the equivalent resistance of these three resistances in order to determine of drop in potential around this section of the circuit. This may be found from the formula of the previous lesson, which results as follows: $\frac{1}{R} = \frac{1}{8} + \frac{1}{12} + \frac{1}{16}$ or $\frac{1}{R} = \frac{13}{48}$ and R = 3.69 ohms. Then multiplying this value by the current, 29 amperes, we obtain 107 volts as the drop across this section.

We may now find the current in each branch by dividing the drop in potential by the resistance of the respective branches. This gives 13.4 amperes as the value of the current flowing in the 8 ohm resistance, 8.9 amperes in the 12 ohm resistance, and 6.7 amperes in the 16 ohm resistance. The sum of these currents gives the total amount of current in the circuit as shown by the ammeter.

When a combination of series and parallel connections are made in a circuit the circuit is known as a complex circuit. In solving a complex circuit as to total resistance, allowable current flow and drop of potential introduced in the line, it is best to consider each section of the circuit separately. A complex circuit is shown by Fig. 16 in which two resistances of 2 and 4 ohms resistance connected in parallel are in series with a resistance of .5 ohm across a 110-volt line. In order to determine the total resistance of the line we will first compute the equivalent resistance of the section connected in parallel. This is found from the equation $\frac{1}{R} = \frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{4}$ or $\frac{3}{4}$ and R = 1.33 ohms. This added to the series resistance of .5 ohms gives a total resistance of the circuit as 1.83 ohms. This circuit will then allow a current flow of 110 divided by 1.83, or 60 amperes. The drop in potential around the parallel section is 1.33 × 60 or 80 volts.

A complex circuit is sometimes used on an arc circuit where a series resistance in the circuit is variable so that the current flow at the arc can be regulated. Fig. 17 shows two 25-ampere rheostats in parallel connected in series with a 50-ampere rheostat used in an arc circuit for 220-volt supply. The series resistance may be variable so that the combined value of the voltage reducing or ballast resistance may be altered and thus obtain a variation in the current supplied to the arc.

A variable resistance should not be used as a path in a parallel connection as a division of current might be obtained which would overload another section of the circuit and cause excessive heating. All the above combinations are possible for use in an emergency, but for successful and continuous operation a rheostat should be used which is specially suitable for each installation.

Besides supplying a voltage drop for the circuit the rheostat in the arc circuit acts as a ballast in order to stabilize the flow of current to the arc which is a very necessary factor due to the peculiar properties of the arc.

Rheostats are usually marked by the manufacturers giving the resistance and the current carrying capacities and in case of variable rheostats the maximum and minimum current rates. In connecting up a circuit care should be taken that the proper connections are made where more than one rheostat is used, and that they are of sufficient size such that undue heating will not take place.

In case of trouble in any circuit and the flow of current ceases it is necessary to determine at what point the line becomes dead before any wires are disconnected. The best way in which to test a line to determine whether or not a drop of potential exists at a certain point is by use of a lamp and socket, this may be placed across the line at any point without danger of a short circuit and by the brilliancy of the lamp will show whether or not full voltage exists at the point tested.

In order to measure the quantities of an electric circuit a voltmeter and ammeter are used.

A voltmeter is an instrument having a very high resistance so that it may be connected across any part of an electric circuit without appreciably effecting the current flow from the source. The movement of the voltmeter, however, depends on the magnetic effect of the current flow in the coils which in turn is proportional to the voltage applied to the terminals of the instrument. The scale of the voltmeter is calibrated by applying known values of E. M. F. to the terminals of the instrument and marking the position of the needle for each particular pressure applied.

An ammeter is an instrument consisting of a large winding having a small resistance and is connected in the circuit in series with the line, such that any current passing to the connected apparatus must pass through coils of the ammeter. Care must be taken that an ammeter is not connected across the line, i.e. in parallel with the connected apparatus, for on account of its low resistance coil practically a short circuit would be placed across the line and a large current would flow and blow the fuses, also the instrument would probabaly be damaged due to the excessive current.

The illustration Fig. 18 shows the method in which a voltmeter and ammeter may be connected in an electric circuit to indicate the properties of the circuit. Here the total current going to the lamps must pass through the coils of the ammeter and the current flow is indicated. The voltmeter as shown is connected at the load end of the line and shows the potential drop at the lamps. This is slightly less than the generated voltage due to the line drop, but it is this voltage in which we are interested when calculating the resistance of the connected load.

An arc circuit is shown in Fig. 19 in which an ammeter and voltmeter are connected to show the current flow and the drop across the arc. After an arc circuit has been installed and tested to make sure that the proper series resistance has been inserted in the line, there is little need for a voltmeter reading as the voltage is practically constant. However an ammeter in the circuit to indicate the current flow is a great help in obtaining satisfactory operation of the arc.

20. An electric flatiron draws 3 amperes at 110 volts. What is the resistance of the heating coil?
If the voltage applied to the heating coil is reduced to 100 volts, what will be the proportionate temperature of the iron?
21. If the ammeter in the circuit as shown by Fig. 15 reads 20 amperes, find the applied voltage and the current in each branch.
22. If 220 volts is applied to the circuit of Fig. 15, what will be the current in each branch, and the total current flowing as shown by the voltmeter?
23. Given three resistances, A of 5 ohms, B of 11 ohms, and C of 10 ohms. Find the voltage drop across each resistance, the current in each resistance, and the total current taken from the line when A and C in parallel are connected in series with B across 110 volts.
24. The meter readings of Fig. 18 are 4 amperes and 120 volts. Find the resistance and current consumption of each lamp.

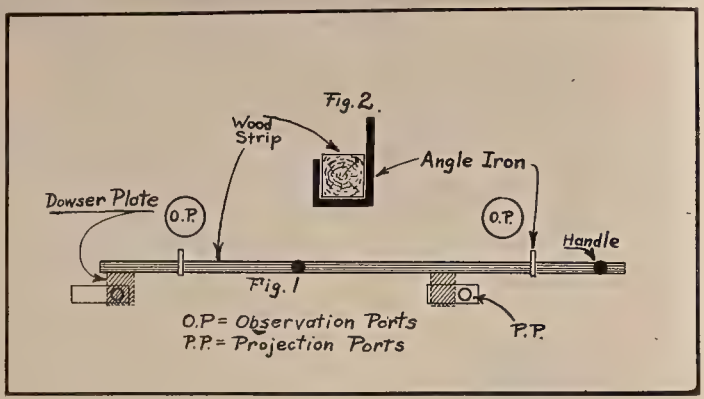
Their Heads Are Their Signals

W. McG. and F. R., Cambridge City, Ind.:



We are very much interested in our work and are always striving for better projection We have two Simplex motor driven machines, one 1914 and 1916, and they are in what we think the best of condition. We use White A. C. Special Carbons, which give the best possible results on A. C. Our town is about 3,000 population and only this one theatre here. We have been running first class pictures for this size town. Several patrons have remarked to the manager that the pictures were as clear and steady as they ever saw in a larger place. We do not mean to boast, but BOOST for better films and projection. We can proudly state that our heads have always been the "signals" for change of machines. We have never and SHALL NEVER punch or mark the film. We found the better way and think every projectionist can do so if he tries.

The International Projection Association of New York City listened to a lecture on Saturday, April 10th, on the subject of Optics. This was one of the lectures in a long series arranged by the Association for the benefit of its members.

Jayne Sends in a Drawing and Description of His Own Change-Over Device

A Lay-Out That Is Simple to Improvise and Equally Simple to Install and Operate

HAVE read the NEWS with much interest for two years now, but this is the first time I have ever gotten courage enough to "break into" the column. Am enclosing a description of a change-over device that I have been using here for some time. I have found it very satisfactory so am passing it along, hoping that it will be of some use to some one else. It is positive in its action providing the projectionist watches his cue for his change-over closely. You can forget about your off-going machine and put your attention on the on-coming. I simply watch my cue, get my on-coming machine under motion with the light on and the "dissolver" does the rest. It is a little awkward at first, of course, but with a little practice you can make a change without losing a foot of film.

I have found that the tendency nowadays is to have the dowsers connected, but in my opinion this has its drawbacks, as I always like to see that my shot is good and bright just before I start.

Well, if you think my idea is worth while you can pass it on. Am using two Type S Simplex with a Fort Wayne M generator. Have just recently installed all three of these machines and they make some difference in a picture. Was using a Westinghouse Mercury Arc Rectifier and a Fort Wayne Compensarc before. We kept both of these and have them for emergency, so we have two systems that are wired direct to the lamps.

I think it's a joke the way the "big fellow" in the small town and the "little fellow" in the city scrap about punch marks. I don't mean that the punch marks are a joke, however. Personally I think the only way we will ever get rid of the "conductor-operator" is through the exchange. If the exchange would jump good and hard on some of these babies that send their film back looking like a Swiss cheese, we would get somewhere. I remember when Goldwyn first started, the manager of the Buffalo exchange sent a letter with each show. The words "Managers will be charged for every punch hole found in these films" were especially emphasized. I ran Goldwyn about sixty days old and I don't remember ever finding a punch hole until they changed exchange managers and policies. What's the answer? Where does the trouble really lie?

My simple "change-over" device consists of five things, namely, two angle irons, one piece of wood 1 inch square of suitable length, and two pieces of tin or cardboard of a size best suited to meet local conditions.

With a couple of handles or knobs, a few nails and screws, and a hammer and screw driver, along with the above named, I find that I can, by using a small amount of gray matter, make a home made dissolver that makes a very fair change-over. You can readily see, I think, from the drawing above about what I mean.

In Fig. 1 A1 represents the two angle irons. Fig. 2 is a side view of one of the angle irons showing a cross section of the wooden strip which forms the main support. From this you see how the iron holds the strip up. The iron must be large enough, however, to allow the strip to slide freely from side to side. I have these irons placed, as shown in diagram, about eight inches to the right of the Projection Port. That is a matter of choice, however. The main thing is to hand them so that the wooden strip will slide evenly about six inches above the show, where the light rays are centered in the Projection Port.

BB in Fig. 1 are the two pieces of tin (or cardboard) so placed that when one port is open the other is closed. C represents a "stop" or "limit" pin which is placed so that the "slide" can only be pushed so far in either direction. By adding a couple of handles (H in Fig. 1), you have the whole thing.

In addition to this I have a 6-volt light hung on each of the two "blacks" of this affair of mine so that when the machine is shut off and being threaded I have a framing light just where it's needed. When the machine is running, it's out of the way. And the "blacks" keep this small light out of the auditorium.—C. H. JAYNE, Blue Bird Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

Has Trouble With Picture Blurring

W. Y. S., Fayetteville, Tenn., writes:

Am having trouble with my Simplex machine and as the other fellows all seem to get more help from you than from any other source will make a try myself. I can draw the lens down to a fine focus, but every few seconds it will blur up for a fraction of a second. In other words, it is in and out of focus all the time, not badly out but just a slight blur. The other machine does not do this so I know it must be in the Simplex. All the parts seem to be all right and not worn, nor is the shutter gears worn to any extent, so it has us up in the air. Can you suggest any remedy? The aperture plate is not worn nor the film gate. Please give me the correct lineup as regards the condenser and projection lens. I am using alternating current, 110 volt, throwing a picture 8 ft. by 10 ft. The machines are square with the curtain and 65 feet from the screen. I want to know what size condensers to use and how far they should be from the aperture plate. In fact anything you will tell me as regards a correct lineup for the condensers and projection lens. I think you are doing a wonderful work for the exhibitors through your projection dept., I used to take two or three magazines but found that The Motion Picture News covered the entire field so I have narrowed down to it alone. I enclose stamped envelope and will appreciate an early letter.

Reply: We have received several reports of trouble similar to yours, happening on different types of machines, and have taken up the matter with the projection machine manufacturers. Your trouble is quite possibly due to a slight play between the lens case and the jacket of your objective, so that there is a change in the adjustment from the vibration of the machine.

The above may be caused by the surfaces having worn or the felt become matted, and may be remedied by placing a thin piece of felt evenly between these surfaces. This will prevent any change from vibration after the adjustment has been made.

Assuming you are using a current of 60 amperes your proper lineup should be: 2 6½ condensers spaced 1-16 inch apart and at a distance of 18 to 20 inches from the aperture plate.

How Important Is Your Projectionist

By E. B. Dunn

How important is your motion picture projectionist? Have you ever given him a thought? If you have it was not a second thought, just a first and a pass over.

A mere machine to be wound up, to be on time to put your show on—isn't that about all? Well, you might have another thought coming and one to cause a palpitation of the heart.

A beaming smile as you gaze on the long line waiting to put dollars in your already overflowing wallet. The sensation no one knows but you; no one can realize the tingling of pleasure or feel the flush of prosperity that mantles your brow. That exuberance of soul that makes you glad, that the world admires your production and you rusticate in the thought,—the film's the thing.

expectancy. But the picture what is the matter; it does not materialize.

The buzzer buzzes again and again from eager and anxious pressing no picture! Cuss words galore. The audience twists and squirms, clapping and whistling fills the air. The nervous patrons become alarmed and the buzzer continues to buzz long and strenuously. Darkness prevails. The gladness that was, is no more; gloom settles upon that manager's once becoming brow.

Why doesn't that——operator put on the picture? Who knows. A rush for the booth consternation. What! No operator here. Blue air and red lights, "That's All."

Now Mr Manager, this is not a dream, it is what is likely to happen any time. The projectionist is the man who really makes or breaks you, yet he never gets that second thought worthy of having his name on your program, while carpenters, ushers, etc., come to the front.

Would it matter if you carpenter, usher, or even you yourself failed to put in an appearance if your operator was on the job and the show went on? Think it over.

Says He Wasn't Scared Away

C. A. Christopher, Ambridge, Pa., comes to life again:

Well, I suppose you think that I have been scared out by the "City Operators" article on "punch marks, etc.," but nothing of the sort.

The reason I have been quiet is that I am more than busy handling five theatres, as chief, and so I am kept on the jump all the time.

Another thing is that I have bought a motion picture camera and am busy "shooting scenes" for the news reels around here.

What I wanted to write about was some labels, as I have been out for some time and can't be without them, so send me a batch as soon as you can. Also I would like to ask about the N. A. M. L. buttons. I did not receive any when I joined and later sent five cents for one and still didn't get one.

Will you please forward me one as I would like to have one and will pay for it if you say.

About "punch holes" in films, I have nothing to say any more for I have come to the conclusion that it is about 50-50 on both sides. I was sitting in a large, in fact the largest theatre in Pittsburg, Pa., and at the end of every reel there were a slew of punch marks and scratches went dancing on the screen.

An old man sitting next to me asked me what the big idea was to have all the "decorations" on the picture. I told him how it came. He said; it was time the manager of the theatre got wise to himself. He was right, for it is up to the managers to get wise to those kind of birds and give them the merry razz out of the theatre.

I don't think much of a manager who will let his operator put a lot of rotten punch marks on the screen and then always wonder why he can never get anybody to come to his theatre.

Why can't they come to their senses?

One more thing and I am done. Please tell me this; why is it if you punch one little hole in a film the exchanges jumps the operators and causes all kinds of rumpus when the same exchanges sends out film with as high as twenty exchange numbers in a single reel.

Here is a sample of some taken out of the Universal Company's film with twelve of these in every reel.

Let us not only stop the practise of punching holes in the film ourselves but stop the exchanges also from spoiling a good picture.

If they don't want to come fifty fifty with the operators then my sentiment is let all but punches and go to it right.

Brown Appointed Typhoon Sales Representative

Mr. O. R. Brown, the well known motion picture supply man and partner in the A. & B. M. P. Supply Co. of Raleigh, N. C., was appointed last week representative of the Typhoon Company for North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.

Mr. Brown is well qualified to handle this exceptionally large territory for the Typhoon Company, having been for many years an exhibitor himself where he became familiar with the results obtained by the operation of Typhoon in his theatres.

In recent years, Mr. Brown has represented some of the largest supply manufacturers, and enjoys perhaps one of the widest acquaintances throughout this territory. He will make his headquarters, as heretofore, in Raleigh, N. C.

Mr. Brown came to New York last week and conferred with President Glantzberg of the Typhoon Company on prospects for the summer season.

White Light for Motion Picture Photography*

By Wm. Roy Mott, Research Laboratory, National Carbon Company

It is not practicable to operate more than a single enclosed arc on 110 volts because its starting arc voltage of 40 volts is over twice as great as the starting arc voltage of flame arc of 15 to 20 arc volts. The difference is further illustrated in Fig. 7, showing an Aristo enclosed arc lamp, the same converted to burn flame carbons and the twin arc Wohl lamp. (This Fig. 7 was prepared by Mr. Ben Parris.)

A vertical flame arc is generally preferred, but the arc will burn well in a great variety of positions. In general, flame upper carbons and flame lower carbons are used in motion picture flame lamps so that the lamps can be used on either direct or alternating current and without any regard to polarity if it is direct current. This arrangement is different from the photoengraving field where a very common trim is a neutral enclosed arc upper carbon with a white flame positive lower. In this case the flame carbon must always be made positive because the flame chemicals travel through the arc stream from the positive crater to the negative crater. It is the flame materials that produce the light and wrong polarity or pure carbon open arc gives about one-sixth the photographic light of the white flame arc. However, a positive flame upper carbon gives better efficiency with a flame negative lower as against a neutral negative lower.

On alternating current, both carbons should be flame carbons, as here the flame material feeds from both electrodes, and so this arrangement gives the maximum efficiency. The use of reactance ballast on alternating current lamps in place of resistance ballast in the arc, and gives from 50 to 100 per cent. more light for equal power on the line. With reactance ballast on two or three flame arcs in series on 110 volts, the overall power factor is better than 8.5. Three flame arcs in series on 110 volts with metal coated carbons gave very little if any more efficiency than two flame arcs in series.

We will now consider some of the typical flame lamps used in motion picture studios.

4—Rapid Developments of High Amperage Flame Lamps

Description of Several Types of Flame Lamps

SPECIAL flame lamps have been developed to operate on A. C. or D. C. and in series on 220 volts or in multiple on 110. This makes the lamp of universal use, and calls for no special attention to the electrical conditions. The resistance of the flame lamp to mechanical shocks, electrical shocks, such as overvoltage and to bad weather conditions, has made it universally used for outside (of Studio) motion picture work. Combined with all these advantages is the remarkably small weight of these lamps. For instance, some of the twin arc lamps weigh no more than 20 pounds for lights giving 8,000 or more horizontal candlepower, and with the light of a little greater actinicity than daylight. The amount of light is probably greater in proportion to weight than any other artificial light used in motion picture studios. Further improved design can greatly reduce this weight.

We will show briefly figures of a number of typical high amperage flame lamps. The following flame lamps are commonly used in motion picture work; Allison and Hadaway, Aristo, Bogue, Chicago State Lamp, Joyce, Klieglight Macbeth, Scott, Simplex, Sunlight, Universal, Wohl and others. As there is no article or book where these types have been shown collectively, I believe the following figures will be of interest.

The Aristo Lamp, Fig. 7 is an enclosed arc lamp which has been much used by portrait photographers and in motion picture studios. The motion picture studio now use in the Aristo Lamp, white flame carbons ½ x 12′ upper with a ½ x 6′ lower with or without the globe. The greater diffusion of the light and reliability of the flame arc immediately found great favor with the photographers of motion picture concerns when demonstrated a few years ago by Mr. A. D. Spear, June, 1912, at Edison studio. The amount of light with 28-A and 63 arc volts with flame carbons was 5,130 mean spherical candlepower in the tests in our laboratories in Cleveland.

The Allison & Hadway lamps is a twin arc designed especially for portability in a suitcase form. There is also made by this company, a diffusing cabinet with

Why Amateurs Fail With Fine Grade Cameras

By R. B. Fowler

"In all the cheaper grades of cameras on the market, the largest diaphram opening on the lens is about one-fourteenth the focal length of the lens. We term that an F.14. It is only possible to take good clear snapshots with this lens when you have bright sunshine and you are out of doors. A little better grade of camera using two lenses (one before the shutter and the other behind the shutter) gives you an opening as large as one-eighth the focal length, or F.8. But you now have nearly four times as much light without varying your shutter speed, because areas of circles are to each other as the squares of their diameter.

"With the still better grades of cameras, you will find lenses which have openings as large as F.4.5 (which is nearly four times as fast as the F.8, or nearly sixteen times as fast as the cheap single lens cameras, working at F.14). I have said nothing about shutter variations because I wanted to give comparisons adhering to the original speed of the shutter of the cheap cameras, about one-twenty-fifth of one second.

"Now you should readily see that while with cheap cameras you will find yourself underexposing, with the better cameras, you will have a tendency to over-expose, not realizing the tremendous change in the volume of light with the diaphram opening. You will have to increase the speed of the shutter in order to cut down the light admitted. You will also see now why, with these cameras, it is possible to make good snapshots, where you would have to take time-exposures with the little single lens cameras."

Motion Picture Craftsman Hold Successful Ball

The newly formed Local 614, known unofficially as the Motion Picture Craftsmen, and consisting of workers in laboratories and studios, held an informal ball and mass meeting at Bryant Hall on Sixth Avenue, New York City, on the evening of April 12th. A large gathering was present, fully 600 persons enjoying the program of dancing and addresses.

According to a statement issued by Mr. Abe Heller, president of the association, the purpose of the ball was "to stimulate interest in the organization and to arouse enthusiasm amongst the members and prospective members." Most of the other New York organizations were represented by delegates.

Besides Mr. Heller, the officers are as follows: Wm. Painter, vice-president; Ralph Pecorelli, vice-president; P. E. Brulatour, treasurer, and Geo. G. Woodruff, secretary.

The Barton Organ

TRADE MARK REG.

A Matter of Importance

The selection of a Pipe Organ is a matter of importance to the Exhibitor if his Theatre is to maintain supremacy. That is why the discriminating exhibitor gives the Barton Organ first consideration.

Most any organ will produce music, but the Barton Organ does more than just make music. The Barton Organ combines the grandeur of a Cathedral Organ, the crispness of Symphony strings, melodious wood wind and solid foundation in variations of musical appeal. And in addition, introduces the greatest musical invention of the age—The Divided Manual—thousands of new and original tonal combinations of wondrous beauty—never before possible.

But the matter of greatest importance is the fact that these new and astounding musical effects can be played by any organist without special training. The standard playing methods familiar to every organist does away with the "hard to get" and "harder to keep" specially instructed operator.

The Barton Organ attracts by its unique originality.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Down on the Farm"

(Mack Sennett Comedy—United Artists Five Reels)

MACK SENNETT'S long heralded five reel comedy, "Down on the Farm," has reached the screen, and judging from the quantity of lively incident and the quality of the production the publicity drive has not misrepresented the facts. Mr. Sennett is a past-master in the art of ridiculous tomfoolery, and no plot which ever appeared in a play may be said to be safe once he discovers its comical values. He is particularly partial toward the antique "city feller ruining little Nell, mortgage on the farm, erring daughter returning home to relieve the 'sorrer' of her parents" idea. And why not? Isn't it an excellent subject for b-u-r-l-e-s-q-u-e? It was funny enough when it appeared in its original melodramatic form in the local op'ry houses of these United States.

By dressing up the old plot with sure-fire hokum Mack Sennett has uncorked a comedy which is a knockout in more ways than one. One may call it a broad satire on the "ten-twenty-and-thirty" days, when Bertha and Nellie of Sewing Machine and Cloak Model fame, respectively, cried out to Paw and Maw that the villain still pursued them. There is the city slicker as desperate as any Desmond who ever twirled a mustachio, and there is the rustic swain who eventually frustrates the villain after a series of highly amusing complications. The "papers," meaning not only the cigarette kind, but those which spell "MORTGAGE," are given prominent display.

When the director wants to supply novelty and atmosphere he introduces a barnyard menagerie. Chickens, cows and geese meander about, thoroughly in harmony with the setting. The Great Dane, Teddy, has an important role. The same may be said of Pepper, the cat. This pet is totally unconscious of the camera and furnishes as droll comedy as any biped. A mouse comes in for a bit and enacts his part cleverly. Of course, Mr. Sennett has utilized the idea before in shorter pieces, and there may be some who will say that the more pretentious offering is "old stuff." But he has twisted it about a great deal and added novel touches through the employment of the menagerie, so when it falters the animals pick it up. The regular Sennett stock company is present. Louise Fazenda, Harry Gribbon, Bert Roach, Marie Prevost and limbs, Ben Turpin and eyes and Billy Armstrong carry the burden of the plot.

The comedy has rich exploitation possibilities, and during its premier showing at Quimby's Strand, in Fort Wayne, Indiana, it was given an unusual campaign. Hay wagons, acrobats on streets, rubes who walked about and registered at hotels, and other features literally stopped traffic. The management staged a prologue with eighteen people against a barnyard setting, and, also lending atmosphere, was a rube orchestra and a variety of barnyard animals. The manager of the house states that he did capacity business in spite of a snow and sleet storm. LAURENCE REID.

"The Woman Gives"

(First National—Six Reels)

A HIGHLY developed melodrama of rare order is this latest photoplay of Norma Talmadge where she sacrifices her love, her happiness, and her career to redeem the man who had been the first stepping stone to that success.

Inga Sonderson, penniless and alone, following the death of her father, is getting along well as Daniel Garford's model until one day she meets Robert Milton, a struggling young artist whom Garford is befriending, and falls in love with him. Milton returns her love, but lets his jealousy get the better of him when he learns that Inga is visiting disreputable places in an effort to save the soul of Garford, who is fast going to the dogs after a serious quarrel with his wife.

Inga's efforts to redeem Garford lead her into a subterranean opium den where she is pursued by a Chinaman, and just escapes a fist-fight with Garford himself who resents her interference. In the end, however, she wins and brings him back to his former social position and sees him repeat his former artistic successes.

Garford's proposal of marriage to her brings a realization of her true love for Robert Milton, and she goes to him and confesses her love just in time for the picture to close with a long, lingering kiss.

The picture is replete with tense situations. Norma Talmadge holds the stage almost all the time. Her support is excellent, but the major portion of the success of the production is due to Miss Talmadge herself.

ELSIE LOEB

Reviewed at Stillman Theatre, Cleveland.

"The Confession"

(National Film Company's Production—Adapted from Hal Reid's Stage Play)

"THE Confession" in films is an adaptation of Hal Reid's play of the same name and has lent itself well to screen production, since its story is intensely dramatic and permitted the injection of action and incident.

As the production stands it registers as one of the most notable independent pictures of the year. The plot holds attention and interest grows as the story is unfolded.

Henry B. Walthall, as the priest who heard the confession of the murderer, is most convincing and gives a portrayal which ranks with any of his extensive career.

Francis McDonald, as the brother, the sympathetic role, charged and convicted of the murder, plays the part most naturally. Margaret Landis ably portrayed the role of the sweetheart after two years' absence from the screen. William Clifford, as the heavy, added merit to the cast. All other parts are well cast.

The showing at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, has created considerable word-of-mouth advertising. It, of course, has an especial appeal to Catholics, but contains real dramatic worth also. J. C. JESSEN.

"The Woman He Chose"

(Seven Reel Subject Produced in Sweden—Sponsored in America by Mickey Film Co., Inc.)

THIS is an adaptation of "The Girl from the Marsherofft," the powerful novel by Dr. Selma Lagerlof, the only woman ever awarded the Nobel prize, and in picture form, as in literature, proves itself to be a strong drama that should prove popular with audiences.

The literary masterpiece is a fine foundation for pictures. It tells the simple story of a young girl's betrayal in a land where sin is regarded as a disgrace and how she later comes to happiness. The picture is enacted by a capable cast of Swedish actors who demonstrate a technique rarely seen in pictures, especially those of foreign production. The story holds interest throughout and the scenery of Sweden, where the picture was made, affords fine backgrounds. The photography is excellent and the direction fully up to American standards. L. H. MASON. Reviewed at the Ziegfeld theatre, Chicago.

"The Strange Boarder"

(Will Rogers Starred—A Goldwyn Release)

"THE Strange Boarder" is more a series of semi-humorous incidents, made entertaining by the star, than drama. That Rogers is able to carry the slender story with his meritorious interpretation of the Arizona rancher, who is buncoed on his first visit to a city is a tribute to his art. The picture entertains, has some moments of real heart interest appeal and many bits of the sort of comedy for which the star is famous.

Irene Rich plays opposite Rogers in the role of a stenographer. Others in the cast are James Mason, Doris Pawn as the wife and Lionel Belmore, whose work as the ward heeler is meritorious.

The settings, photography and general excellence of the production also aid the star in making the picture interesting. J. C. JESSEN.

"DESERT LOVE"

Tom Mix Furnishes Plenty of Thrills

TOM MIX, hard-riding, quick-shooting, chasm-jumping, sure-hitting star, fills up five reels of "Desert Love" with the above mentioned playful stunts, and that is about all there is to the picture. The story is not over-impressive, sagging in the middle, but leading eventually to a thrilling climax. But the star has all the requisites for his daredevil stunts, including good western exteriors, and sufficient bandits to shoot at.

The whole production is up to the usual Mix standards and his admirers will continue to admire when they see it. They don't keep you waiting long before the action starts. In the first reel several score of outlaws arrive to "shoot up" an Arizona town. They do it in a very thorough manner, and the sheriff, played by the star, is killed, but manages to leave safely behind him a list of the bandits' names and a baby son. The latter grows up and in the course of twenty-five years, following his father's footsteps, is elected sheriff, and Tom Mix is brought back to life. He thereupon proceeds to "get" all the evil doers named by his dying father. We only see three of the outlaws receiving their just punishment, but this is enough to allow the star to get in some thrilling action. Of course there is love interest, and in the final climax there is a lovely maiden to be rescued as well as a father to be revenged.

There are some startling improbabilities if you want to look for them. The father's mistaking the innocent daughter for the guilty is crude. So is the existence of a second band of outlaws when we are led to believe that there were no more. One character ages about ten years in the twenty-odd year period. Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Buck Marston.....Tom Mix
Barbara Remington.....Francelia Billington
Dolly Remington.....Eva Novak
Jack Remington.....Charles K. French
The Wolf.....Jack Curtiss
The Whelp.....Lester Cuneo

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Once more Tom Mix, the daredevil of the screen, is in town! The well liked Fox star will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— in his latest production, "Desert Love." This is another drama of the untamed southwest, and is full of exciting thrills furnished by the fearless star.

Mix plays the part of "Buck" Marston, sheriff of an Arizona county. Twenty-five years before his father, also a sheriff, had been killed by a band of outlaws, whose names have come into the possession of the son. With endless vigor and energy he runs them down one by one, and finally captures their chief after a thrilling chase. Only one is left, The Whelp, who steals away with the girl loved by Mix. In a scene that is fraught with dangerous stunts the young sheriff rescues the girl and revenges his murdered father.

The scenes in which the daring star thrills his audience are too many to be named. The most thrilling is a leap from a broken trestle to a window of a house, with a clear drop of a hundred feet below.

PROGRAM READER

No picture is more able to furnish the thrills than a good old western picture. No character is more picturesque than a brave and brawny sheriff of these counties in the Southwest, where the only way to stop crime is by fast and vigorous action. Thus does Tom Mix, the daredevil of the screen, in his latest Fox picture, "Desert Love," which will be seen at this theatre on ————. The star proves once more that he is absolutely fearless, and some of the daredevil action which he exhibits in this picture excels anything ever seen before on the screen. It is a whirlwind, a tornado, and a cyclone of action all rolled into one.

SUGGESTIONS

As the star is the biggest thing in this picture, spend most of your exploitation energy on him. Spread his easy-to-say name all over the town, and speak of him always as "the daredevil of the screen" or the "cowboy-actor who fights as if he means it." Mention his last picture, "The Daredevil," even if you have not shown it. The best stunt would be to have a man dressed as a cowboy ride through the streets with such signs as "No! I'm not Tom Mix. But I know where he is—at the ———— theatre in 'Desert Love.'" Such a character in your lobby would also help. See if you can put over some press stories dealing with Mix's early life, such as his serving in the Spanish-American war under Roosevelt, and his life among the cowboys.

CATCH LINES

For twenty years his father's death had been unrevenged, but when "Buck" Marston grew to manhood—that's where the action starts in "Desert Love."

As drama of the wild Southwest, and the struggle of good against evil.

Tom Mix, the daredevil star, in a picture that gives him every opportunity to thrill his audience.

The pending railroad strike in New York has seriously hampered the shipments of paper. Until normal conditions again obtain, "Exhibitors' Box Office Reports" will appear but every other week.

"NEGLECTED WIVES"
(Alternate Title—"Why Women Sin"—Wistaria)

Careful Production Overcomes Trite Theme

THIS is a political and society drama, with an average cast, some lavish sets, and a theme that is a relic of bygone days. It will be known in some territories already sold as "Why Women Sin."

Despite the title, there is only one neglected wife in the picture, but she is so piteously neglected that she weeps through most of the six reels. Her husband is seeking the nomination for governor and can't find time to come home to dinner, so his wife passes the time by weeping and hugging her young daughter. Far too many close-ups are shown of the wife and child in loving embrace. Her husband, Pemberton, is being fought politically by a corrupt boss, who, when he can find no dark spots in his opponent's past, frames up several schemes whereby Mrs. Pemberton may be led from the straight path. Unsuspecting Mrs. Pemberton luckily avoids the snares until the last reel, when the "frame-up" seems perfect. But an international detective emerges from behind the goggles of a chauffeur, and we learn that the conspirators are wanted for murder in Paris. Pemberton, of course, reforms, and, we take it, is to neglect his wife no longer.

Once the villains begin to get in the work, the picture creates interest a-plenty. The gambling house and roadside inn scenes are well directed and splendid in detail. The sub-titles are sometimes too heavy in their efforts to put over the moral. And when the villain, who has been painted as a fop, turns out to be an Apache chief, it doesn't convince.

The "Why Women Sin" title is irrelevant. Among a sophisticated audience the ever-weeping wife, and the little child who brings papa and mama together, may savor a bit of oft-burlesqued melodrama. Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Neglected Wives" ("Why Women Sin"), a powerful drama of modern American life, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This is a society and political story laid in a large city in the United States. It tells the tale of a neglected wife, whose husband is so busy with his political plans that he can find no time for his wife and little daughter.

Pemberton, the husband, has a bitter opponent in Horton, a corrupt political boss. Horton, when he finds that Pemberton's record is clear, endeavors to trick his wife so that he may, through her, kill Pemberton politically. Mrs. Pemberton unsuspectingly goes to a gambling resort, and only through a stroke of good fortune is able to escape the raid that follows. Again she is tricked by one of Horton's spies into a compromising situation, which Horton promises to keep a secret if Pemberton will renounce his candidacy. But the spies also have a past, and when they are arrested for their past crimes, Horton finally announces that he is defeated.

Pemberton, realizing that his neglect has left his wife to seek the company of questionable friends, promises to make amends for the past. And while he still hopes for political advancement, he intends to first of all care for the brave little woman he has taken as his wife.

PROGRAM READER

A powerful lesson, clothed in a thrilling and exciting drama, is contained in "Neglected Wives" ("Why Women Sin"), which will be seen at this theatre on ————. There is a scene in a fashionable ladies' gambling resort that is one of the most elaborate and lavish ever screened. And throughout the entire six reels runs an entertaining story of a man who devotes his entire time to political advancement and forgets the little wife who waits at home, lonely and disconsolate.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture will be known in some territories as "Neglected Wives" and in others "Why Women Sin," which is given by the producers as an alternate title. The former is the better title and more appropriate for the picture. Rather than show any close-ups of the cast, it would be better to feature long shots of some of the lavish scenes in your lobby decorations. In your copy, dwell on the fact that it is a stirring political play, and is also a strong condemnation of the man who places business before his home. You might use a sign in front of your theatre reading "Pemberton Seek Nomination for Governor! In doing so he neglects his lonely wife. Such is the thrilling plot of 'Neglected Wives.'" You cannot boost the "moral lesson" angle of this picture too much. For a teaser campaign try the slogan, "Do You Neglect Your Wife?"

CATCH LINES

He placed his political advancement before his domestic happiness, but in the end he realized their relative values.

The story of a politician husband and the wife he neglected.

She had gained wealth and honor, but she had lost her husband's affection.

"THE CUP OF FURY"
(Eminent Authors-Goldwyn)

Trite and Unconvincing Theme; Direction Is Poor

THERE is very little entertainment value in this picture, since it presents a theme which is passe and the director has not shown any imagination which might have given it some points of interest. The story goes back to war days when German spies were sneaking around with bombs and conceit. To give his story a note of heart interest, Mr. Hughes has written the idea around a girl who is under a cloud of suspicion because of her association with Germans. Suspense is aimed at in keeping her under this cloud, but it falls quite short of the mark. The moment comes when she vindicates herself and with considerable flag-waving the long-drawn out, obvious story comes to an end.

Most of the action transpires in a shipyard and it is so slow moving, so filled with unimportant scenes of interminable length, that if the subject carried any original punch it is lost. Certain crude touches don't help matters much. For instance, the British authorities would permit the heroine to leave England under suspicion and still they would go to the expense of watching her activities in America. Again, an I. W. W. character is seen haranguing the mob of workers in the same old way. The German spy comes over to get in touch with the girl, who is really of no importance to either side.

Then the crudest touch of all. Mr. Spy puts his bombs in a huge suitcase, walks through the supposed guard in broad daylight, and throws one (maybe two) into the "works," But it makes no more fuss than a firecracker. Rest assured he is killed. Ditto the I. W. W. The director has made errors of omission and commission. His groupings are bad, his lighting faulty. And the title editor goes to extremes in flag-waving editorials and dialect. The players succeed in appearing genuine, which is remarkable considering the unrealities that creep forth. The shipyard atmosphere is good.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An eminent author's production is "The Cup of Fury," which comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week with a cast that includes Helene Chadwick, Rockcliffe Fellows, Kate Lester, Herbert Standing, Florence Deshon and Sydney Ainsworth. Rupert Hughes is the author of this story and he has concocted a tale which is rich in action and suspense. The picture goes back to the period of the war when the shipyards of the country were working overtime to supply ships to carry troops and provisions abroad. One can see that such a background is appropriate for a spy melodrama like "The Cup of Fury."

The plot concerns the girl, Mamise, who has been reared under German guardianship in England. When her foster parents commit suicide to save themselves from disgrace, she is permitted to go to America under the promise that she keep silent regarding the machinations in which she was involved. And she has a struggle in disarming suspicion which lurks everywhere. A time comes when she vindicates her honor and shows her patriotism and it is this moment which presents a climax of undeniable strength. The picture carries an abundance of atmosphere, the shipyard scenes being genuine and dramatic. T. Hayes Hunter directed the picture.

PROGRAM READER

Rupert Hughes, one of the most vivid writers of the day, is the author of "The Cup of Fury," which will be shown at the ——— theatre in the near future. This is a German spy picture and details the shipyard industry and while the theme is familiar still it carries enough moving moments which eliminate its obviousness. The audience will look upon the plottings of a German spy to wreck a shipyard and the struggle of a girl who is under suspicion because of her German associations. Suffice to state that she vindicates herself. The picture carries a pleasant romance which counteracts the melodrama and gives the offering a perfect balance. The cast includes such adequate players as Helene Chadwick, Rockcliffe Fellows and Florence Deshon.

SUGGESTIONS

In advertising this picture it would be advisable not to mention the theme unless you are sure of your crowd. The fact that it is a German spy picture may keep certain patrons away. Feature it as a story of the shipyard industry during the war. Bring out that it is a melodrama which carries a pleasant vein of romance. The title can come in for some special exploitation and also the author's name. Here is another chance for an artist to draw the prow of a ship with the scaffolding about it. And you can run stories in the press of the shipyard industry and the important part it played in winning the war. Mention the director's name. Tell that he was responsible for "The Border Legion," one of the most vital pictures ever shown. Feature the players. Helene Chadwick has appeared in several successes. So has Rockcliffe Fellows.

"DANGEROUS TO MEN"
(Metro)

Viola Dana's "Pep" Carries Slight Comedy

EVER since Viola Dana made a hit in "Some Bride," as one of those irrepressible "cutie cut-ups," it has been her object to find similar material. Her search is rewarded in H. V. Esmond's comedy of the long ago, "Eliza Comes to Stay," which for picture purposes has been retitled "Dangerous to Men." This offering hasn't the comedy foundations of "Some Bride," and aside from the star's characterization it doesn't carry many interesting points. It cannot be said truthfully that her portrayal is always interesting because of its lack of repression. Certainly there is nothing arresting in the theme, which is the often told and always obvious idea of a girl being taken under the guardianship of an eligible bachelor.

The sustaining point of the piece is discovered in her efforts to torment him by appearing much younger than her years. And in accomplishing this Miss Dana throws caution to the winds and conducts herself in reckless abandon. Dismissing the farcical value and looking for logic it is incomprehensible that the older figures could be so easily fooled by the girl's age. Her well-rounded figure and sophisticated actions give the lie to her deception. Still she deceives them for four reels. To reveal the facts, Miss Dana has a vehicle and nothing more.

The picture depends entirely upon her character study and in giving expression to it she resorts to slapstick, high-jinks and grotesque apparel. Her exaggerated antics are apt to become tiresome to those who seek variety in characterization. The action is so concentrated in presenting her various caprices that it crackles throughout. Miss Dana is so keenly alive that she literally carries the slight material on her saucy shoulders. As it is a one character story, her healthy rendition is excusable. The other players don't have many opportunities to distinguish themselves since they are used to "feed" the star. The technical arrangements are well done. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Viola Dana, the Metro star, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest photoplay entitled "Dangerous to Men." This is an adaptation of H. V. Esmond's play, "Eliza Comes to Stay," and it affords the talented Miss Dana with a role which capitalizes her vital and vibrant personality. Not since the offering, "Some Bride," has the star had such an ideal vehicle for bringing out her rich sense of humor. She appears as an orphan who hides her eighteen years in the disguise of a girl of ten in order to provoke her newly appointed guardian into releasing her from his contract. She believed him to be a crusty old bachelor and went to such extremes to make him dissatisfied with his job.

However, when she discovers him to be an eligible young man she decides to keep up her deception simply for the fun of the thing. She carries her adventures so far that her age is easily guessed. But Eliza doesn't care since she has fallen in love with her guardian. It may be said that he returns the affection. The picture uncovers plenty of high jinks which make it an enjoyable comedy. There is a sparkle and vitality to it which is customary with a Dana offering. The star is supported by Milton Sills, one of the favorite leading men in pictures. A. P Younger, the scenarist, has maintained the original flavor of the play.

PROGRAM READER

Viola Dana, the versatile Metro star, whose inimitable comedy is in a class by itself, will appear at the ——— theatre in the near future in her latest picture, "Dangerous to Men," an adaptation of the play, "Eliza Comes to Stay." The star hasn't had a subject in a long while which has brought out her fund of humor to better advantage than "Dangerous to Men." It is a type of picture similar to "Some Bride" in that it offers Miss Dana plenty of opportunities to play one of those irrepressible girls who keep the man in the case in considerable hot water. Our patrons should be highly pleased with this offering. It will send them away in a good frame of mind. Miss Dana has the support of Milton Sills as her leading man. Watch for further announcements.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a popular stage success as an angle in the exploitation of this picture. "Eliza Comes to Stay" is one of the most pleasing farces that ever appeared before the footlights, and as the picture, "Dangerous to Men," it is bound to prove satisfactory. The title can be played up to advantage through catch lines, teasers and a poster campaign. Feature it as an uproarious farce comedy which treats of a girl who cuts up capers to torment her guardian in releasing her. Mention that the star is in a class by herself in the delineation of such roles. Also play the names of Milton Sills and other players prominently. Use stills of the star in some of her grotesque costumes. Tell that it is a sparkling picture which carries spice and sentiment.

CATCH LINES

She didn't like the idea of having a guardian so she decided to torment him. How did she go about it? See Viola Dana in "Dangerous to Men."

She was dangerous to men because of her thousand moods. See Viola Dana in the rollicking farce-comedy, "Dangerous to Men." A picture of humor and spice.

"TREASURE ISLAND"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Interesting Picture Made from Stevenson's Famous Story

ANOTHER classic from the realm of literature has reached the screen in Maurice Tourneur's production of Stevenson's "Treasure Island." It is to the credit of this director's artistic perceptions that he has been able to catch the charm and atmosphere of the memorable story even though the scenario is not a faithful adaptation. What if the character of Jim Hawkins, the boy hero, is deprived of his initiative and spirit—what if some of the lesser figures are given more prominence than they deserve These variations do not destroy the fabric of the tale. Rather are they permissible, to get every ounce of action from the translation.

In order to visualize the outstanding details, the scenarist has taken liberties with Stevenson and he may be excused upon the ground that even the screen has its limitations. However, the glamor, the atmosphere, the color, the fancy of the printed page, are caught effectively. In our opinion the children will respond enthusiastically to its stirring adventure and also those grown-ups who haven't forgotten their youth, because Mr. Tourneur's action is graphic and the picturesque characters, Jim Hawkins, Bill Bones, Long John Silver, Black Dog and the blood-thirsty pirates—these figures, with the exception of the first mentioned, are just as vivid as Stevenson painted them.

The action on the pirate ship, the conflict on the island, the incidents which lead up to Jim's adventure—these points are what make the picture retain the vital quality of the story. Mr. Tourneur, a stickler for atmosphere, has caught some marvelous shots and his details fit with Stevenson's descriptions. One serious flaw the picture has. Jim is interpreted by Shirley Mason, who, try as she might, is unable to make the character convincing because of her sex. Charles Ogle is immense as the peg-legged John Silver and Lon Chaney gives another of his vivid character studies as one of the pirate cutthroats or two. The buccaneer crew is picturesque to the core. The same may be said of the ship. So long as the action suffices there is no need of worrying over the traditions of the story.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island" has been adapted to the screen and as a Paramount-Artcraft picture it will appear at the ———— theatre beginning ———— with a cast of well known players. This is one of the best adventurous stories ever written and it did much to establish the vogue of the author. Telling a tale of the swashbuckling pirate days of the Spanish Main it presents a wealth of incident, a full quota of thrills, and a charming romance. It is not very long ago when it appeared as a play and as a picture it should be even more successful. The limitations of the theatre can not cope with the silver-sheet in visualizing the gripping episodes. The Spanish Main is well suggested—something which could not be said of it in terms of the spoken drama.

Nearly every picturegoer is familiar with the story and the vital and vivid characters. Jim Hawkins, the boy, Bill Bones, Black Dog, the blind man Pew, Long John Silver with his wooden leg, Captain Smollett, the Squire and the Doctor, are presented in the identical situations of the story. And they are wonderfully humanized by Shirley Mason, Charles Ogle, Lon Chaney of "Miracle Man" fame and others. Maurice Tourneur has directed the picture and brought out all its salient points. He hasn't overlooked a single detail to give the story its vitality.

PROGRAM READER

"Fifteen men on a dead man's chest—Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!" This is the ballad sung by the pirates in "Treasure Island," the Robert Louis Stevenson classic, which has been made into a picture and which will appear at the ———— theatre on next ————. The management is congratulating itself at being able to present this wonderful story to the filmgoers of ———— Stevenson's wonderful tale of swashbuckling pirate days on the Spanish Main is one of the classics of literature. Unfolding as it does a world of adventure, a beautiful romance, a series of thrills, and a group of characters which are the most colorful ever drawn, the story is one that makes perfect screen material. Maurice Tourneur is the director who has humanized the gripping tale and the players who bring life to the figures are thoroughly capable. Remember next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

What fine exploitation can be given to this picture! The names of Stevenson, the author, and Tourneur, the director, can be linked together as a combination hard to beat. The bookstores can be exploited, too. And the picture, being a visualization of a classic, should be advertised from every angle. Bring on your mailing campaign—use newspaper space to present the ballad sung by the pirates—"Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum," etc. Tell something of the author. Use your artist to paint likenesses of the characters for lobby display. Use stills plentifully.

"SLAM BANG JIM"
(American—"Flying A")

Good Laughs in Mixture of Farce and Western

"SLAM BANG JIM" is somewhat of a hybrid. It is part farce and part wild western, with a few burlesqued characterizations thrown in. And although most of the picture is taken up with a bandit pursuit, the picture on the whole is going to please, for in some spots it reaches the heights of fine comedy.

Straight farces on the screen are few and far between. The audience, accustomed to a logically worked out plot, and carefully developed characters, may therefore be somewhat taken back by this picture. For there is little attempt at characterizations, and, since it is farce, the plot is weak, although well-developed. But it is filled with amusing situations, and with William Russell, the star, instills his zestful personality throughout. He has a dual role, and the glorious, gun-shooting chase is developed through mistaken identity. Jim gets into a fight a few minutes before his wedding, and his wrathful bride-to-be and disgusted father disown him. He goes to Arizona with a new found friend, and is there mistaken for a notorious bandit. He is arrested and escapes through the aid of the bandit's sweetheart. From then on he leads the sheriff's posse a merry chase. His fiancee and her father are brought on from the east, with more mistaken identity as the result. But before our heads begin to spin and we become too bewildered, the plot-atmosphere clears.

The star appears too kindly to be a bandit, and pleases more as the tenderfoot. He does some good riding and fighting in both roles, and the only time the action slows up is when the second set of characters are being introduced. His support is good, but, even allowing for farce, Harvey Clark overdoes it a bit. Sets and photography are very good. Length, 5 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Murial Manning	Francella Billington

Kate	Ruth Everdale

Directed by Edward Sloman.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the most delightful light comedies of the season is the offering at the ———— for ————. "Slam Bang Jim" is its title, and it lives up to its name, being just one rapid fire piece of action succeeding another with lightning speed. William Russell is the star, and proves that he is one of the screen's best comedians as well as a splendid horseman.

Jim Page is so unfortunate as to be arrested a few minutes before his wedding when he tries to aid a man against thieves. His fiance and irate father will listen to no explanations and so Jim, bucking up against fate with his omnipresent smile, reaches Arizona. But Jim is again unfortunate when he is mistaken for a notorious bandit and locked in the town jail. He escapes, however, and with the real bandit and his sweetheart turning up, as well as Jim's fiance and her father, there is no end of the humorous situations that follow in quick succession.

There are scenes is a western cafe which have seldom been equalled on the screen for magnitude. Hundreds of people are before the camera in a thrilling scene when the bandit "sticks up" the saloon. The whole production has been carefully and elaborately produced, and the many humorous situations and the star see to it that there is plenty of laughs.

PROGRAM READER

Don't some people just fall into bad luck. Jim proposed to a girl seventy-five times before she accepted him. And then, on his way to the wedding, he tried to prevent a hold-up and got arrested for resisting an officer! Of course his sweetheart would listen to no explanations. Such is the sad tale of "Slam Bang Jim," the attraction for ————. But it does not stay sad very long. William Russell, the star, helps to turn it into a side-splitting comedy. It is just five reels of laughs, with enough good comedy situations to crowd into half a dozen pictures. And William Russell's name is enough to tell you how much action there is in it.

SUGGESTIONS

The star, good program readers, and pointed catch lines, will be your best helps in putting this one across. Show photographs as well as stills of William Russell, and recall his past performances. In your program tell of the unhappy plight of the groom-to-be or else describe the "stick-up" scene in the western saloon. Use catch lines a-plenty. For a teaser use this: "Were you ever mistaken for a bandit? Slam Bang Jim was." Appeal to your comedy fans—there are plenty of them who are always looking for something to make them laugh instead of cry. The bandit scenes in the picture allow some opportunities for stunts, such as a masked rider through the streets.

CATCH LINES

Don't ever get into a fight on your way to your wedding. Jim did and not even the averting of a robbery would cause his pretty fiance to forgive the humiliation.

"LOCKED LIPS"

Antique Story and Crude Touches Provide Weak Entertainment

SINCE the featured player of this picture is a Japanese actress, the wife of Sessue Hayakawa, it is perfectly obvious that the scenario written for her would be based on the "Madame Butterfly" formula, which can be pigeon-holed as number (6) among screen productions. There is a deal of coincidence and very little logic in the plot, although it would be less theatrical had more attention been paid to the editing. The idea becomes rather vague because certain subtitles which would clarify matters are conspicuous by their absence.

The only variation on the threadbare story is found in the locale. The Hawaiian Islands provide the locale of Lotus Blossoms fall from grace. And the guilty culprit is not a lieutenant of the navy but a derelict who is washed up on the white sands. It is understood that a marriage ceremony is performed between them. The action on the island only discloses a few close-ups of the "actory" derelict, a few cross words which he utters, a view of a native hut and a marine shot. The culprit leaves his Jap wife vowing that he won't come back "'til he's good and ready." In Honolulu he meets and falls in love with a San Francisco girl and a subsequent scene shows him married to her, though there is no wedding ceremony or a caption which would inform us of the fact. Not having one redeeming quality he leaves her to satisfy his lustful desires in New York. Returning he finds that he is a father.

Which introduces the very long and arbitrary arm of coincidence. For the nurse is none other than Lotus Blossom. A man who doesn't have any scruples whatsoever would not worry over the anguish he might cause his wife. Yet he professes to believe that Blossom will reveal the facts. But she maintains a silence (hence the title, "Locked Lips"). In order to get her out of the way he attempts to poison her with incense fumes, but he falls a victim instead. This is a crude scene to say the least. The picture is so clumsily constructed, so palpably "manufactured" that it carries very little quality. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Lotus Blossom	Tsuru Aoki
Harvey Stanwood, alias Parker	Stanhope Wheatcroft
Komo	A Jap
Audrey Stevens	Magda Lane

By Clifford Howard.
Scenario by Violet Clark.
Directed by William C. Dowlan.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The piquant Japanese actress, Tsuru Aoki, who is the wife of Sessue Hayakawa, will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in her latest photoplay entitled "Locked Lips." The story is modeled somewhat upon the "Madame Butterfly" pattern and presents the idea that a Jap, male or female is highly endowed with a sense of honor. Tsuru Aoki plays the part of Lotus Blossom, a teacher in a mission in the Hawaiian Islands. Romance comes to her in the form of an American, a victim of a shipwreck. And she trustingly entertains his proffer of love. Eventually he tires of her and going to Honolulu he meets and falls in love with a San Francisco girl. He follows her to the California city where a marriage is duly performed.

Then into his life comes a vision of the past. Lotus Blossom appears as the companion of his wife although for the latter's sake the Jap maiden resolves to keep silent. However, her seducer holds the belief that she may talk and in order to have her out of the way he attempts to poison her. But he is a victim of his devilish scheme. So Lotus Blossom finds happiness with one of her own race. The picture is punctuated with incident and suspense and is colored with an appealing note of heart interest. Tsuru Aoki plays the heroine with charming repression, while Stanhope Wheatcroft is capital in the opposite role.

PROGRAM READER

"Locked Lips" is the title of the picture which will come to the ———— theatre next ———— featuring the dainty Japanese actress, Tsuru Aoki, who in private life is the wife of the eminent star, Sessue Hayakawa. The offering is based upon the characteristic sense of honor of the Jap, and the actress has a chance to prove this virtue in a climax of genuine dramatic strength. How she gives up her heart to an American—how she discovers that her romance is shallow —how she hides her sorrow in order not to bring anguish to another is told in scenes which reveal deep pathos and heart interest. The picture is constructed upon a sound premise and patrons of the ———— should be highly pleased.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is your chance to bill the star as the wife of Sessue Hayakawa. And make the most of your opportunity. Since he has a big following it is natural that screenlovers would have an interest in his wife. So feature her name prominently. Play up the picture as something similar to "Madame Butterfly." This should arouse interest because the latter subject is a favorite everywhere. Exploit the title and bring out that the offering is a heart interest drama which reveals a broken romance. Mention that the picture presents the accepted fact that the Japanese race have a high sense of honor. Dress your lobby in the atmosphere of the flowery kingdom. Your musical program should be appropriate, too. Getting an audience in a responsive mood through atmospheric touches helps a lot in putting a picture over.

CATCH LINES

She had great faith in mankind and when romance beckoned she responded. What came of it? See "Locked Lips" with Tsuru Aoki.

She had a high sense of honor and vowed to keep silent about her tragedy Why? See Tsuru Aoki (Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa) in the appealing picture, "Locked Lips."

"CAPTAIN SWIFT,"
(Vitagraph)

A Pleasing Picture Which Should Interest

ALTHOUGH this feature has nothing in its makeup which would startle an audience, still it has enough "life" to make it pleasant entertainment.

Its great drawback lies in the fact that the story is too tame, there being no decided action in any of its reels and no strong love interest which would tend to keep an audience in suspense until the final scenes.

Earle Williams is seen in the Australian bush country and the "English drawing rooms with the same set expression of repose which seems to give him a certain sameness throughout the length of the feature.

But it is not his fault, for the story does not go into the details of Captain Swift's adventurous life, showing him as a crook, bandit and thief but rather makes him out a man of goodness and kindness of heart.

This may be all right provided there is enough "life" left in the story to give it the proper interest.

However, the object aimed at in this picture has been attained in many ways, for it shows "Swift" as a good, likable character throughout and in doing this a certain charm is given to the scenes which is sure to keep an audience in a pleasant state of mind until leaving the theatre.

Tom Terriss has been very careful in his direction, taking great pains with his exteriors and he has selected a good cast among whom are Florence Dixon, Edward Martindale, Adelaide Prince, Downing Clarke, Barry Baxter, Alice Calhoun and James O'Neill. Length, 6 reels. Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Earle Williams' latest Vitagraph production, "Captain Swift," will be the attraction at the ———— on the ———— of next ————.

In this picture Mr. Williams gives a unique performance of the bold and daring adventurer only he prefers to accentuate the good qualities of "Swift" rather than those of the robber and bandit. And let us say that the star has never been seen to better advantage than in a role of this kind, where the adventurer alternates with the gentleman of the drawing-rooms. The story is taken from the famous stage play by C. Haddon Chambers and was directed by Tom Terris who has taken great pains to inject the proper atmosphere into it and at the same time to make his characters real and human.

The story opens with a prologue showing "Swift" making his escape across the hot sandy deserts after a bank robbery has been committed. He stops long enough to succor a prospector who in dying of thirst but whose life he does not save. Seeing that his pursuers are hot upon his trail, he changes clothes with the dead man and eludes his pursuers by walking in the bed of a river where he leaves no tracks.

We next see him in England moving in the best society But his identity is known to a servant who promises not to let the matter out provided he is paid to keep his mouth shut. Swift refuses to comply with his request, whereupon the blackmailer proceeds to make known our hero's identity to a detective who is hot upon his trail.

Fortune favors Swift again, however, for a banker whose life he had spared in the sage brush country and who knows him to be a good man at heart, decides to drop the charge and allow Swift to go free, thus bringing a pretty love affair between the hero and his sweetheart to a close

Earle Williams in "Captain Swift," his latest Vitagraph production, will be the attraction at this house next ————.

In this feature Mr. Williams gives preference to the finer qualities of the adventurous captain, evading those of the robber and bandit. And in doing this he brings to the screen a thoroughly likeable character and one that is sure to make a lasting impression on the minds of those who witness his latest portrayal.

The story is taken from the famous stage play by C. Haddon Chambers and was directed by Tom Terris who has taken great pains to inject the proper atmosphere into it and at the same time to make his characters real and human.

In the opening scenes "Swift" is seen making his escape across the hot sandy deserts after a bank robbery has been committed. He stops long enough to succor a prospector who is dying of thirst but whose life he does not save. He now changes clothes with the dead man and makes his escape to England where he is followed by a detective who finally lands upon his tracks and is about to arrest him when a prominent banker comes to his assistance, drops the charge and allows Swift his liberty, thus bringing a pretty love affair between the hero and a young girl who has become attached to him, to a close

When you book this picture your one best bet is to feature the story, which is taken from the life of the famous Australian outlaw, who lived a good many years ago and whose life is well known to readers of history.

It would be a good idea to run teaser lines in your advertising such as "Who was the famous Captain Swift?" "Have you read his life?" "Do you know that he was one of the most famous outlaws that ever lived?" "And do you also know that the money he robbed from the rich was given to the poor and needy," or some such lines.

You might mention that this is a new type of role for Earle Williams and that he makes the character of "Captain Swift" a likeable one.

"RIO GRANDE"
(Carewe-Pathe)

Should Give Satisfaction Wherever Shown

THIS is Edwin Carewe's first production to be released under the Pathe banner, and we must say that he has made a picture which should interest in any house where it is shown.

"Rio Grande" is taken from the stage production of that name and was written by one of our greatest playwrights, Augustus Thomas, whose recent film, "The Copperhead," is only one of this remarkable author's contributions to enjoy pronounced success upon the screen.

Mr. Carewe has been careful in many ways to get the proper atmosphere into the story and has the right idea in opening his picture with many scenes showing the rare wild beauty and grandeur of the border country. There is only one fault which the writer observed—the love interest should have been stronger. Instead of developing the story with this essential point in view, Mr. Thomas has chosen to switch his plot and give preference to the wilder scenes of border life.

Maria Lopez is the daughter of a Mexican father and American mother. She was stolen in childhood by her father and brought to Mexico. The "Rurals" are pursuing her one day because it is known among them that her parent is an insurgent leader. Fortune favors our heroine and she arrives in safety on the American border only to be captured by a Texas ranger, Danny O'Neil. Romance now enters their lives which ends in Danny's winning the girl of his heart—but only after many thrilling adventures have taken place.

Rosemarie Theby gives a splendid performance as the Mexican girl, in action, manners and appearance.—Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Augustus Thomas' "Rio Grande" produced by Edwin Carew and released through Pathe, will be the attraction at this theatre on ———— of next week. It is a picture strong in heart interest and shows the love of a Mexican girl for a young Texas ranger. Rosemary Theby, who is so well known to screen followers for the various roles she has played in the past few years, plays a Mexican girl with a trueness that makes one believe that she is a descendant of that race.

While on guard at the Rio Grande, Danny O'Neil captures a young girl dressed in men's clothes. The girl had been pursued by the Mexican "Rurals" on the other side of the river but by a clever ruse she had evaded them and gained the opposite shore. She is greatly surprised when "Danny" decides to let her go. For this she invites him to a ball. Being romantic Danny accepts the invitation, goes to the affair but encounters such opposition that he barely escapes with his life. Maria's love now turns to hate, for she hears that her father has been wounded and taken prisoner by the Americans. She calls her men together and attacks the little town of Fronteras. After terrific fighting on both sides her men are defeated and Maria meets for the first time, her long lost American mother. Danny pleads with her to marry him but the wrong she had committed against the Americans weighed heavily on her but Danny's persistence finally overcomes all obstacles and he finally wins her.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ———— announces that "Rio Grande," an Edwin Carewe production released through Pathe will be the attraction at this house on ———— of next ————.

It is a story of life and love along the border with Rosemary Theby, who is so well known to screen followers, playing the principal role, that of a young Mexican girl who braves many dangers for the young Texas ranger who has won her heart.

Edwin Carewe who directed this picture, has taken great pains to inject the right atmosphere into the story and has selected a splendid cast of types, whose acting ability can be judged by their remarkable likeness to what the real characters should look.

Marie Lopez is the daughter of a Mexican father and American mother. She was stolen in childhood by her father and brought to Mexico. The "Rurals" are pursuing her one day because it is known among them that her parent is an insurgent leader. She eludes them, however, and escapes to the American border, only to be captured by a Texas ranger, Danny O'Neil. A strong love interest now enters their lives which ends in Danny's winning the girl of his heart—but only after many thrilling adventures have taken place.

SUGGESTIONS

One of the few kinds of stories which has always interested American audiences and perhaps always will, is the one with a tale of western or southwestern life where the thrills are many and the life is of the wild, carefree variety with romance intermixed. Now this tale has all the necessary ingredients of this type of story to make it appeal to an audience and give them good entertainment.

It would be a good idea to feature it as a romance of the border and mention also the fact that it contains enough thrills to make the ordinary serial take a back seat. Also mention the fact that Augustus Thomas is the author, who for strong heart interest stories is in a class by himself. He also wrote "The Copperhead" and "Arizona." And do not forget to let your patrons know that Rosemary Theby plays the leading role, that of a Mexican girl

She hated the Americans and called them "Gringos." What caused her to change her opinion when she met the young Texas ranger? See "Rio Grande" at the ———— theatre.

"THE WOMAN GIVES"
(First National)

Lots of Talent and Effort Almost Wasted

WE fear that in spite of Norma Talmadge's art and beauty, this splendid production so far as sets, detail and lightings go, is not going to be viewed by audiences as anything wonderful.

The fault lies chiefly with Mr. Johnson's story, or rather that portion of it which has been adapted. Basic plots having to do with the regeneration of a man through the devotion of a woman, platonic this time, however, are not new, and when nothing is provided in the way of incident for countless scenes, a picture based on one becomes tedious. Even Miss Talmadge fails to make it interesting. She is cast as a model and artist who through gratitude is led to attempt the reformation of another artist who is well along on the down grade. Just how this is accomplished is not explained. She rescues the man from a "hop joint" and then a sub-title informs that he is regenerated.

Complications to the romance are provided by the jealous lover, who mistakes her interest in the artist for something more than friendship. Sub-titles tell most of the story. Some more sound rather like platitudes and profess a profound knowledge of the feminine sex. It seems rather a shame that this star's talents and so much technical ability should be devoted to a story which is so commonplace. None of the roles provide an opportunity for any characterization. Few of the scenes have any action. There will be some curiosity, no doubt, to know which of the two men Norma will marry, but this is going to be mild for the reason that neither of them are worthy of any great concern. This will get by with Miss Talmadge's admirers, who are legion, but as a real picture it fails.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Inga Sonderson	Norma Talmadge
Daniel Garford	John Halliday
Robert Milton	Edmund Lowe
Mrs. Garford	Lucille Lee Stewart
Cornelius	John Smiley
Bowden	Edward Keepler

By Owen Johnson.
Directed by Roy Neill.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Norma Talmadge, one of the most talented and popular actresses on the screen, will appear at the ———— theatre beginning ———— in her latest First National picture entitled "The Woman Gives." This is an adaptation of Owen Johnson's novel and it affords the star with one of the strongest vehicles of her career. Miss Talmadge has risen to such emotional heights that she demands photoplays of the best quality. "The Woman Gives" measures up to requirements in every particular. The star appears in the role of Inga Sonderson, a model. She poses for her artist lover and the world looks on and smiles. When she poses for her benefactor—well, that is another matter.

She follows him into the Street of a Thousand Sorrows—to undergo an experience that has fallen to the lot of but few living women. She has courage and works out her salvation. The dramatic intensity of her experiences keeps the spectator in complete suspense. Very few actresses could enact this character and make it ring with sincerity. To see Miss Talmadge in the part is to see screen acting at its highest development. Roy Neill, who directed the feature, has brought out all the high lights and has kept his action moving from beginning to end. Miss Talmadge is supported by a cast that includes John Halliday, Edmund Lowe, Lucille Lee Stewart and John Smiley.

PROGRAM READER

"The Woman Gives" is the title of the First National picture which comes to the ———— theatre, shortly, starring Norma Talmadge. This story by Owen Johnson shows how supreme trust is regarded as the greatest proof of true love, but which is apt to cause mischief if it is persisted in too far. In the working out of this strong dramatic story the star has abundant opportunities to display her emotional talent. It is quite needless to say that she takes full advantage of them. Miss Talmadge risks happiness to repay in full a debt of gratitude she owes for her start to success. The result of this course and the circumstances which lead to a happy conclusion make one of the most entertaining productions which has appeared at the ———— in a long time.

SUGGESTIONS

Of course the star is the best medium to exploit this feature and prominence should be given her in every way possible. Make mention of the fact that stories have to be of big calibre to present her at her best. Which introduces "The Woman Gives." This picture can be well advertised through its title. Bring it out in appropriate catch lines and teasers. Feature the story as a drama of a woman's gratitude—a gratitude which she holds above any thought of love. Bring out the high lights. Make a bid for feminine patronage, as there is considerable heart appeal in the story. Use your circular letter here announcing that Norma Talmadge, the emotional star, will be at the ———— next ————. This is sufficient to attract the crowds.

CATCH LINES

Should she redeem the man who is responsible for her success and risk the chance of losing her fiance? What would you do? See Norma Talmadge answer this vital problem in "The Woman Gives."

See "The Woman Gives," a picture which gives Norma Talmadge the acting opportunities of her film career. A picture with a heart and a soul. A big, throbbing, human drama.

"I SAW Maud straining and struggling, crushed in the embrace of Wolf Larsen's arms. I could see the vain beat and flutter of her as she strove to escape from him. I sprang forward—I struck him in the face—"

And in that moment—one of the greatest moments in all fiction—a man as proud as Lucifer was overthrown and a coward became a man.

THIS is only one of the big moments in Jack London's mighty story—a story that crashes against the emotions like the raging surf.

It's all in the picture—all the primitive conflict, the bared heart of life, the rush and clamor of the waves. A marvellous and spectacular production of a story that has thrilled millions.

It Was Midnight---

The Transcontinental

Inside one of the

David Raine.
He was telling his

a shattered romance and tragedy. He was trying to lose himself.

"It was late when I reached home—
unexpectedly," said
David.
"I heard voices from her room.
I went in—

"No. I didn't kill them.
I don't know why
I didn't kill
the man.
He was a coward.
That man.
He crawled away like a worm. Perhaps that's why I didn't kill him.
And the wonderful
part of it.
My wife.
She was not afraid.
She stood up in her
ravishing dishevelment.
And she laughed!
Yes, she laughed.
A mad sort of laugh.
A laughter of fear
perhaps, but laughter!"

GARTER
Rosalie Ray was vaudeville's favorite. Rich men, poor men, young and old, fought for the garter she kicked to them off her shapely limb each night as she swung out over their heads. But Rosalie was disgusted with it all.
Then she gave it up. In the small town where she sought to escape from the glare and glamour of the stage and the sordidness of its people she met her ideal young man. And with the meeting came happiness until—
She learned that he worshipped some secret memento—something he kept hidden from all eyes but his own—a memory of some by-gone romance. Then one day, in an unguarded moment she saw it! It was—
That's the lure of this splendid picture and we wont spoil it for you—the smashing surprise climax that comes, unguessed at, unthought of to break the breathless spell of the story.

Your Patrons Can Learn

Strand With Laughter"

Jack Eaton, manager of the great New York theatre, says the vast throngs simply shook with laughter—and the critics say nothing better has been seen in any sort of theatre. It will pay you to read the reviews:

NOTHING BETTER SEEN

"Nothing better of the sort has been seen in any sort of theatre in New York in some time. It gives Constance Talmadge plenty of chances for the display of her real gifts as a comedienne. The touch of the star is so deft that she lifts the whole piece to a very high plane. Her 'Babs' is, in fact, a real and delightful bit of character acting. Whoever made the play had an excellent idea of what was needed to bring out the fascinating qualities of Miss Talmadge. This actress shows very clearly what delicate effects can be got in the moving picture drama, without over emphasis and through the use of real intelligence."—New York Evening Telegram.

BRIGHT, AIRY AND GAY

"It is a typical Constance Talmadge picture, bright, airy and gay, and certainly amusing to the onlookers. A novel love plan. The method? Ah! You must get your lesson from Constance Talmadge to see how it is done effectively. An able cast supports Miss Talmadge, who looks her prettiest in her latest picture, and is fresh and unaffected."—New York Morning Telegraph.

PACKED WITH FUN

"Packed with humorous situations and both the acting of Miss Talmadge and the titling of John Emerson and Anita Loos are up to the standard set by this capable team. The story allows the star a wide field for the exercise of her whimsy and temperament."—New York Tribune.

BIG LAUGHS AT STRAND

"Constance Talmadge was the cause of much amusement at the Strand theatre in 'The Love Expert.'"—New York Evening Post.

A RIOT OF FUN

"Runs riot with theories of romance —a romantic love research with diverting results."—New York Sun and Herald.

A CLEVER IDEA

"Entertaining, with a clever idea of pantomime in connection with novel lighting effects thrown in for good measure. As an expert in affairs of the heart, Miss Talmadge gives a very competent performance."—New York Evening Sun.

Our Articles of Faith

HERE follow those things for which the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. stands;—

The elimination of that easy originality achieved by cheap and bizarre mannerisms practiced by ignorant and untrained amateurs.

The substitution therefore of a finished artistry that makes of every poster handled a thing of exquisite beauty and a finished work of art.

The permeation of our posters with that spirit of sincerity that will attract, and appeal, and convince the great mass of the observing public. The putting into a poster of the very essence of the photo-play,—and to so colorfully depict it,—and to so finely render it, as to make it seem like a jewelled condensation of the play itself. And to do these things in such a sure and realistic way that the observer will of necessity become unconsciously convinced.

These are the ideals that the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. strives for, and attains. Their sum total make our declaration of faith!

Thoughts at Random

That "25 Per Cent Stuff"

"DO you know," said an exhibitor to us the other day, "I didn't think much of that percentage argument of yours at first but now you are beginning to win me around. That twenty-five per cent stuff sounds just right."

Others have said much the same thing in differing words since the appearance of our editorial, "The Problem of 1920."

Throughout the discussion on percentage we have tried heroically, almost painfully, to make our position clear. But until recently, it has seemed impossible to exhibitors that we could eventually state where percentage would be the rule with all the bigger productions without advocating the present percentage systems or any particular proposed method.

We are not even certain about "that twenty-five per cent stuff." For there will be more factors, and more important ones, than the "split" in the ultimate percentage plan. Exploitation, presentation, etc., must have their place.

But we are certain that discussion is the real need; that percentage cannot, ipse facto, be condemned and become taboo as an editorial and conversational discussion.

And insofar as we have aided to conceive and develop that discussion we know we have carried out our duty as an industry's trade journal.

Church and Theatre

THE problem of competition between theatres and churches—as well as other semi-civic institutions—is gaining in importance. Our mail has shown it a popular topic; reports of exhibitors such as Harry Crandall, who have recently toured the country, confirm our impressions.

It is a subject that we are glad to see on the schedule of topics at the coming June convention of exhibitors in Cleveland.

We cannot blindly shut our eyes to the fact that logical developments are going to increase such competition, that it cannot be legislated out of existence.

But producers, if they are to show some semblance of foresight, must admit that in their hands remains the decision as to whether that quasi-public competition is to kill off the small town exhibitor.

Where a distributor books to a church at purely nominal sums pictures which offer a direct competition with his theatre customers in the same village he is using his left hand to dismember his right.

It is a problem with serious thought. The thousand dollar rental of the big fellows may "pay production costs" but we know of no distributor ready to give up smilingly his share of the "eighty per center's" dollars.

And on the other hand, the proper thought directed to the subject can retain the advantages the church offers to the screen both financially and in strengthening its moral position in the community.

Who Wants This Job?

NEW YORK'S exhibitors have succeeded in devising a bill curbing the advance deposit evil which has been passed by the Legislature and seems assured of Governor Smith's signature.

We have two jobs open for ambitious promoters of legislation. Who wants to tackle Fate by erasing:

The salesman—and his manager—who sells you the picture at one price in the morning, jacks a higher price out of your competitor in the afternoon, and then cancels on you the following day.

Here's a husky job. Where is a Samson?

Exhibitors Convene in Chicago-Plan for Cleveland Meet

Committee of Fifteen to Study the Question of Producer-Owned Theatres

THE Independent Exhibitors Convention, called together by Willard C. Patterson, opened at the Hotel Congress, Chicago, Monday morning. The first steps preparatory to the organization of definite opposition to "producer-owned" theatres were taken on Tuesday when a committee of fifteen was appointed to study all phases of the problem and prepare a report to be submitted to the national convention of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, called by Sidney Cohen in Cleveland for the first week of June. The committee consists of Willard Patterson and Sig Samuels of Atlanta, Frank Rembusch of Indianapolis, C. E. Whitehurst of Baltimore, H. W. Crest of Ohio, Carl Keppler of Florida, L. V. Lester of South Carolina, Dan Chamberlain of Minneapolis, Hector Pasemozoglu of St. Louis, Maurice Choynski of Chicago, Lou Blumenthal of New Jersey, E. T. Peters of Texas, H. C. Farley of Alabama, A. F. Brentlinger of Indiana, John Mannheimer of New York and M. VanPraag of Kansas. This committee will meet at an early date in New York to place all motion-picture manufacturers on record regarding the question of theatre ownership. Together with the report which will be submitted to the Cleveland convention, the committee will make recommendations as to the proper course to be followed by the independent exhibitors.

The committee of exhibitors has split two ways, one section journeying off to Cleveland to get the 'up and down' on the coming exhibitors' convention, and the other to New York to beard the producers in their dens. If the visitors to Cleveland report favorably there is every indication that the June 8, 9 and 10 affair will break all records for exhibitor attendance and for once a real prospect for national organization.

On Tuesday afternoon pledges of co-operation were given during the course of several addresses delivered by J. D. Williams, Robert Lieber, L. J. Selznick, Charles Pettijohn, Harry Berman, Harry Levey and Sam Morris. A call for funds brought a ready response, and five thousand dollars was collected from the exhibitors present. This sum, however, was returned later to the subscribers pending developments at the Cleveland convention in June. The temporary officers were made permanent until the convening of the exhibitor forces at Cleveland. Those installed in office are: Frank Rembusch, president; Sig Samuels, secretary; Dan Chamberlain, treasurer. There was no definite title chosen for the organization, which has been generally referred to as the Independent Exhibitors Association. In effect, the Chicago convention of independent exhibitors served as a grand ballyhoo for the convening of the exhibitors at Cleveland in June. This spirit was generously shared in by Willard C. Patterson, the organizer of the meeting held this week.

The conclusions arrived at Monday evening, following an all-day session of the general body and an afternoon meeting of the executive committee, would have convinced a bystander that there were too many evils in the picture industry to justify the hope that there would be a concerted move set afoot to eradicate any one of them successfully.

The status of the convention was the subject of some discussion. Mr. Patterson's efforts had resulted in bringing together in Chicago a larger number of representative exhibitors than had ever been seen at a convention before. But the wheels were not running very long before it became apparent that to the evil of producer-owned" theatres there were being added the percentage evil, the advance-deposit bane, and here and there a sprinkle of plain politics to season up things.

The complexion of the executive committee, representing as it did various sections and organizations, boded a herculean task for the convention's promoters, if they were to reach any definite, one-purpose organization.

Ivan Abramson inserted himself into the convention with a claim of being able to swing nine millions in backing provided exhibitors put up a million for a producer-exhibitor proposition. The offer was taken under consideration.

The gathering got under way at an early hour Monday morning with close to one hundred and fifty exhibitors present, representing, from indications, many times that number of theatres. Willard Patterson, as the instigator of the movement towards an independent exhibitors' organization, opened the meeting by reading a speech, telling of the inroads being made by producers into the theatre field and the need for some sort of protective steps on the part of the exhibitors. Sig Samuels, owner of the Atlanta Criterion, acted as secretary of the meeting.

When a temporary organization of the meeting was decided on, Patterson was nominatetd for the post of chairman but withdrew in favor of "Doc" Sam Atkinson, the Chicago exhibitor, who passed the buck on to Frank Rembusch.

The committee which drew up the constitution and by-laws of the organization was then named, consisting of Willard Patterson, Hector Pasemozoglu, Maurice Choynski, John Mannheimer of New York, Dan Chamberlain of Michigan and E. T. Peters of Texas.

Among the exhibitors present at the call to order on Monday morning were the following:

G. L. Hooper, owner of the Orpheum in Topeka and the Variety in Chicago; Joseph Hopp, Majestic, Chicago; A. F. Bundinger, Theatre Circuit, Fort Wayne, Ind.; J. P. Bowenerschein, Gaiety, Bluffton, Ind.; C. W. Mason, Orpheum, Fort Wayne, Ind.; Ralph W. Crocker, Star, Elgin, Ill.; M. B. Kincaid, Burke, Kenosha, Wis.; C. S. Cone, Grand Opera House, Wausau, Wis.; E. E. Richards, 12th St. & Wonderland, Kansas City, Mo.; J. P. Adler, Adler, Marshfield, Wis.; O. J. Treulich, Bonita, Chicago, Ill.; Jas. G. Rhode, Rhode Opera House, Kenosha, Wis.; Owen McKwett, Bijou, Racine, Wis.; Hector M. E. Pasemozoglu, Congress & Delmar, St. Louis, Mo.; S. Bauer, Atlas, Milwaukee, Wis.; Fred C. Seegert, Regent, Milwaukee, Wis.; C. F. Lewis, Fischer, Dan-

Robertson-Cole Wires Willard C. Patterson

A FULL, sincere outline of the aims, purpose and hopes of the Robertson-Cole Corporation is contained in the following wire, sent to Willard C. Patterson at the Independent Exhibitors' Convention in Chicago. Copies of the wire were sent the trade press without comment, and the message is so presented, needing no comment:

"I desire to place on record the position of Robertson-Cole in this industry. Our plans have been completed calling for the release of nothing but the biggest of special productions. Robertson-Cole is now in position to offer the independent exhibitors a product worthy of their support to continue to deliver bigger and better pictures. Our definite fixed policy is to remain independent of all entanglements, and we are absolutely against the acquisition of theatres. Robertson-Cole has no desire to enter the theatrical field. But we feel that with the quality of productions that we are offering we have the right to representation in the finest theatres everywhere, and if this right is continually denied us, we must, in justice to ourselves and to properly place our pictures before the public, take steps for the exhibition of our pictures under proper auspices in all of the big centers of population. We feel that our productions merit recognition of this kind, and we are determined to have this recognition, but we earnestly hope that it can be accomplished without the acquisition of theatres. We are independent distributors and we desire to do business on an honesty of purpose basis. We will never be satisfied until our productions, standing as they do on merit alone, are absolutely at the pinnacle in the motion picture industry, and if exhibitors appreciate our efforts in this direction we will feel justified in making whatever investments are necessary to insure success for all. If properly supported in our efforts we will go the limit in the acquisition of stars and productions of the highest standard of excellence. We are in the business of distributing motion pictures and we repeat we have no desire to trespass on the premises of the exhibitor unless we are forced to do so in justice to ourselves and to the public, who have the right to enjoy productions we are furnishing. R. S. Cole."

First National Convention Brings Up Important Subjects

Sennett is Signed for Five Reelers and Present Officers are Re-elected

THE First National Convention opened at the Hotel Congress in Chicago on April 26th with an excellent attendance that had been forecast by First National officials several weeks ago. Special cars brought the exchangemen from the South, East and West, while the Broadway Limited on the Pennsylvania carried Home Office officials, salesmen, exploitation men and representatives of the different trade papers.

One of the important pieces of news revealed in the early sessions of the convention was that Mack Sennett has been signed by First National to produce two five-reel comedies to be released as Mack Sennett Productions. No plans were obtainable as to the nature of these supercomedies but it is believed that First National officials are confident that the laugh king will bring forth the best and highest grade of comedies that have yet been seen on the screen.

The election of officers brought a re-election for all of the present incumbents. Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis, will again guide the destinies of First National Theatres, Inc., and J. B. Clark, of Pittsburgh, was re-elected vice-president. Harry Schwalbe, of Philadelphia, will be secretary and treasurer, and J. D. Williams will continue in his capacity of general manager. The executive committee elected at the convention consists of the following: Moe Mark, of New York; Nathan Gordon, of Boston, and Harry Schwalbe. The board of directors will consist of J. G. Vanherberg, of Seattle; E. B. Johnson, of San Francisco; J. H. Kunsky, of Detroit; Fred Levy, of Louisville; Robert Lieber, Harry Schwalbe, Nathan Gordon, J. B. Clark, A. H. Blank, of Omaha; Moe Mark and J. J. Allen, of Canada.

The officers of First National Exhibitors Circuit who were re-elected were Robert Lieber, president; Sam Katz, of Chicago, vice-president; Jacob Fabian, second vice-president; Harry Schwalbe, treasurer, and J. D. Williams, general manager. The board of directors will consist of Messrs. Vanherberg, Ralph Clark, of New York; E. B. Johnson; Sam Katz; Harry Lieber; Harry Schwalbe and Nathan Gordon.

As was expected, the sub-franchise plan, as adopted at Atlantic City several weeks ago, came in for considerable discussion by franchise holders and directors. This plan will probably be considered and discussed by the First National men during the entire week, but it is expected that definite announcements will be made before the close of the session. It is believed that an inauguration of the rental system which is fixed by the proposed sub-franchising plan at a definite percentage of the exhibition value of the picture for each individual house, will give a startling new turn to the method of film distribution. The final decision of the convention on this matter is being looked forward to with interest. The possession of a franchise, it is said, will guarantee an exhibitor First National product for his territory, and in addition, it will furnish him full protection against even possible invasion of his town by any other First National theatre owner.

Besides the number of First National officials and franchise holders who literally poured into the Windy City on Sunday, there were numerous directors and screen stars. Among the latter were Norma and Constance Talmadge. This is believed to be the first time that Miss Norma Talmadge has appeared publicly at a gathering of exhibitors to meet each of them personally.

First National Will Make "Twin Beds," Says Rumor

FROM Chicago comes news of a rumor that has gotten afloat to the effect that First National has closed conracts for "Twin Beds," to star Mrs. Carter De Haven. Also, according to the tales that emanate from the convention city, there is a possibility that Marshall Neilan will direct the picture. "Twin Beds" is a farce comedy that proved highly successful as a legitimate stage play on Broadway several seasons ago.

Universal Will Support Independent Exhibitor

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company has definitely taken its stand on the side of the independent exhibitor. Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has even offered financial backing to the Independent Exhibitors' Association, now in convention in the Congress Hotel, Chicago.

Through his representatives, H. M. Berman and Harry Levey, of the Universal Company, Mr. Laemmle wholeheartedly assured the independents that they can count on Universal to take a leading stand in the fight for open bookings and the rights of the independent exhibitor.

Following the session at which the Universal offer was made, Frank Rembush, Chairman of the Independent Exhibitors' Association of America, sent the following telegram of thanks and acceptance to R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal:

"The convention of independent exhibitors, in session at Congress Hotel, today formed a permanent national association and greatly appreciate the offer of Universal Film Mfg. Company for their clear-cut and straightforward statement made by your representatives, Berman and Levey. It was further voted and will so be enforced that the independent exhibitors shall cancel and refrain from buying service from any producer who has not declared himself to the effect that he will not buy or operate theatres in competition with the independent exhibitors."

Exhibitors from Forty-Five States to Meet

Indications now point to at least forty-five states being represented at the convention in June in Cleveland of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. This statement was made here today by Sydney S. Cohen of New York, temporary president of coming National Convention. S. I. Berman, who was in Albany recently with Mr. Cohen, left last night for Chicago and on the present trip will arrange other details.

"The Cleveland Convention," said Mr. Cohen today, "will undoubtedly result in a nationwide organization concentrating its efforts at Washington for relief from the 5 per cent film tax. There will be formed in Cleveland a national organization that will be entirely uncontrolled and uninfluenced by any of the special representatives of film manufacturing companies and distributing agencies."

Arthur W. Blankmeyer Dies in Michigan

Arthur W. Blankmeyer, one of the pioneers of Michigan in the motion picture field, passed away suddenly on April 19th of heart disease. Funeral services were held in Toledo. Mr. Blankmeyer operated the General Display and Film Company and owned a half interest in the Gratiot theatre.

Distributing Company is Organized

A NEW national distributing organization to be known as "National Exchanges, Inc." has just been organized and is financed by the Johnson and Hopkins Company, 398 Fifth Avenue, New York City, Finance Construction, Capital Management.

Hunter Bennett, well-known to the industry at large as general sales manager for large distributing corporations, has been elected vice-president and general manager. Mr. Bennett until recently was a special representative for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. He was sales manager of the Mutual Film Corporation when that company was maintaining sixty-eight offices throughout the country. He also at one time was assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation.

Convention High Lights From Two Big Gatherings

By Robert E. Welsh

TOOT! Toot! We're off! On board the good Pullman ship SCHAEFER It must have been named after PETE SCHAEFER Which should be omen enough for any exhibitor convention.

Let's see. We thought this was a First National Convention and an Independent Exhibitors Convention. And isn't that UNIVERSAL BERMAN and HARRY LEVY we see going down the aisle? Maybe we're mixed in our dates.

Gosh, we must be twisted. There goes JOE BRANDT. But then, Joe has become a Chicago convention commuter. Whenever no one else is holding a convention he organizes one himself in the Windy City.

JOE LEE comes in sight. Force of habit almost made us ask where Louis Mayer was. But EARL HAMMONS loomed up behind the irrepressible Joe and we were saved the slip. Earl looks his usual chipper self. Must be great to be born with that Beau Brummel instinct.

Feel a lot better. Yo, ho, boys! Sailing the seven seas to Chicago. The seven being named Straight, Flush, Threes, a Pair, Fours, Openers and "Oh, I didn't have anything but I thought I might scare you out."

Someone just saw a wonderful cherry tree in bloom and everyone was looking out the window when JIMMIE GRAINGER reported with a pat flush King high. If some of Jimmie's remarks get into the next Neilan picture it will be a knock-out.

Well, there's some class in the party. NORMA TALMADGE is aboard the ship, along with JOE SCHENCK and BEULAH LIVINGSTON. And yes, CONSTANCE is here, too.

Was that a parade that just passed? No, only L. J. and staff. Calm once more.

HARRY SCHWALBE and MRS. SCHWALBE are reported as having boarded ship at Philadelphia. Mysterious rumblings commence. Someone has previously discovered Mrs. CARTER DEHAVEN and the whispers say "million dollar deal."

Mrs. DEHAVEN—Oh! yes, FLORA PARKER—leaves the train at Altoona and every First National man wears a mile-wide smile. We take it that the papers have been signed. The whispering increases in intensity. Shh, here comes a trade paper man!

More arrivals to report. MR. and MRS. TOM MOORE made the junction on the Washington train. TOM NORTH is along.

DAVE HOWELLS is with us, which gives First National's gathering an international touch. Sorry to hear that HARRY MUSGROVE, of Australia, is on the ocean and won't make the U. S. in time this year.

BILL YEARSLEY says his watch is doing a shimmy trying to keep up with the fifty-seven varieties of time. From daylight saving time to ordinary honest to goodness time and then to Central time would give any watch the feeling of a ninety-day print.

Well, well! EARL GULICK is here. "No convention is complete without one."

William A. Johnston Recovering

THE many readers of Motion Picture News will be glad to learn that William A. Johnston, following an operation for appendicitis, has rallied rapidly and is now on the high road to recovery.

Sitting opposite J. D. WILLIAMS at dinner. Every time that man talks First National to us he sells us up to the hilt. Just whispered some big news to us. Can't spring it yet. But maybe it will break before the week is over.

Well, if this isn't Chicago! What did we bother to buy a berth for? LE MEAR H. MASON meets us with a Chicago welcome: Three cheers and a wink. The wink worked.

The Congress Hotel thinks a cyclone has struck it. If they have enough rooms to meet all the reservations that have been made they must have built another Annex last night.

Let's slip a word in here for JANE STANNARD JOHNSON and the efficient way she is setting the tangle straight and making everybody happy.

AL LICHTMAN is on the job. He says this is just a hold-over from the Paramount convention. He's good enough salesman to sell us that idea if we give him half a chance.

EARL HUDSON and COLVIN BROWN are two others waiting in Chicago to meet us. The place seems like home to these Elgin boys. They are even starting to apologize to us for the rain. That's native son stuff.

Gosh, that fellow ROBERT LIEBER has a genial personality. Just see him there giving the boys the glad hand. First National uses the same judgment picking a president that it exercises choosing a star.

JOHN KUNSKY, MINNEAPOLIS FINKELSTEIN, AL BLANK and MOE MARK add to the exhibitor touch.

Save us, boys. The ship is sinking. There's FRANK REMBUSCH. It looks like the good old free-for-all exhibitor conventions.

FRANK reports that he is just five weeks away from an attack of "flu." Doesn't look it. Looks in "the pink."

Cheering news. DON BARTON has just told us what wonderful things Motion Picture News advertising is doing for Barton organs. We're willing to listen to that talk all day. But Barton has just been pulled away from us by EXHIBITOR BARBIAN—the Akron, Ohio, live wire—who wants to talk business on his next new house. Yes, he saw the ad in the News.

FRED QUIMBY has arrived. We're not sure whether to change the name of the hotel to Alexandria or Astor. One by one they are arriving. Wonder if there is anybody left back in New York.

LIEUTENANT JIM ANDERSON is boasting to everyone that his picture broke on the front pages of all the Chicago papers. The first press agent coup we have heard about. Bought a paper and read the heading: "U. S. Asked to Take Over Armenia."

Wonder if the Allies will insist on Uncle Sam taking over the LIEUTENANT too? AURORA MARD-D-D—spell it yourself—might term this another Armenian atrocity.

Who's this MYSTERIOUS STRANGER buzzing around the lobby? Why, FRED WARREN, as I live. Must have something interesting to say the way his listeners bristle up.

Just heard the WARREN news myself. Big? I should say a mouthful! Guess the story will break from New York so we won't bother with it here.

FRED BEECROFT wants to know what it's all about. He's getting tired of having the question popped at him. Ninety-nine producers are here and up till ten

Pithy 'Close-ups' of Industry's Great and Near Great

From the Vantage Point of a Lone Scribe in a Sea of Exhibitors o'clock Tuesday morning ninety-eight have asked us, "Just what is this exhibitors' convention aiming at?"

Search us! You're welcome. Try the hip pocket, too.

A. H. SAWYER has arrived. And with him the news that a telegram from HERB LUBIN declares that five producers in New York have already shown interest in his new proposition advertised exclusively in last week's News. We'll say we're feeling good.

The SAWYER and LUBIN boys certainly have a good idea. "The story's the thing," and for the first time on record two real all-wool picture men are going to tackle the story and play proposition for the best interests of producers and authors.

Have just met SI GRIEVER and LEE HERZ. Likeable chaps, and they certainly know the independent field and this territory.

All these Chicago boys give us a good word for L. H. MASON, who handles the fate of the News in this belt. Must be great to be boosted that way. Go to it, Lee.

Tuesday morning and RALPH PROCTOR has just arrived. Two of the Three Musketeers are now here. But neither FRED QUIMBY nor RALPH can explain JACK WOODY'S absence.

This trip gave us our first real chance to get acquainted with J. C. RAGLAND, who is representing ARTHUR KANE and CHARLES RAY'S interests. Clean cut, regular sort of chap that you'd expect to find hanging his hat on the same rack with ARTHUR KANE and CHARLES RAY.

So! Lesser made the hit of the convention with his 'daily newspaper extra.' Harry Beal succeeded in covering the news and giving attention to Annette Kellerman in impartial and clever manner.

Tuesday afternoon and all is well. CHARLIE PETTIJOHN has just invited us into the camp of the friendly enemies. We beg to report surrender without a struggle

Someone reports an enforcement officer snooping around the rooms this morning and jotting down the names of the possessors of empty bottles. If they were empty before we'll bet they were a vacuum when he got through.

JOE LEE must have put something over. He can't wear that smile and fool us. A birdie has just flown in from the Alley with the tip to watch Chicago's Saturday and Sunday papers. We knew it.

Now we know it is Chicago. Just spoke to WATTERSON ROTHACKER. The keys of the city have been given us. "WAT" doesn't expect to see them himself for some time with plans for his big English laboratory buzzing around.

Speaking of one regular fellow reminds us—where is JIMMIE QUIRK. "Photoplay" owns the Congress newsstand display space but we can't find BR'ER QUIRK.

BILL HUFFMAN has been here for a week and we haven't heard him mention engraving once.

Just shook the Congress long enough to learn why Capital is now getting solidly on the map. The same information being given us through the simple act of meeting J. HERBERT MILLIGAN. A man who sits in front of the big desk with all the air of knowing what he is doing and how to do it.

We knew that New York liked FRED WARREN, but we didn't imagine any sales manager could be as popular with exhibitors as we find FRED WARREN to be since the Associated News began buzzing around. There's something radically right when you find the customer liking the seller.

HARRY SHERMAN has been holding court for two days with appreciative audiences. HARRY has a simple gospel. "Let's make pictures," he says, "and stop making speeches."

EMANUEL MANDELBAUM, the original sub-franchise man, has an "I told you so" smile. We don't blame him.

J. D. WILLIAMS' speech to the exhibitors seems to have made some hit—judging from remarks. J. D. talked cold turkey, hearkening back to the old days to tell what united exhibitor action made General Film do when LUBIN tried to buy theatres, and being frank enough to say that even should a sub-franchise holder need protection from a First National member he'll get it.

ERNIE SHIPMAN leaves us on Wednesday for the Canadian country to work on a Ralph Connor story. A little item like a stampede of 'steen thousand buffalo is one of the tasks that faces Ernie. We didn't know there were that many left. Ernie must have been holding them out all these years waiting for the picture.

H. M. THOMAS and "JAZZ BAND" HOLAH have voted the convention a success ably seconded by H. W. CHRIST, of Piqua, "DEE" DIEBOLD, ELLINGE WARNER, JOE LEE, FRED WARREN and YOURS TRULY.

First time we've had the good luck to meet BR'ER WARNER. Have to see more of this boy in New York.

MRS. SYDNEY DREW and JOHN CUMBERLAND have reported at the city gate preparatory to starting work at the Essanay plant.

Which reminds us that GEORGE SPOOR whispered an earful to us yesterday. It only takes four lines to say it here, but here's a tip that it will take as many pages to back it up in the near future. We'll say so. And repeat it.

HARRY SCOTT tells us a new Ringling story every time we meet him, and he hasn't repeated on himself yet. We're beginning to suspect him. AARON HOFFMAN must be supplying him with new material weekly.

LOU BLUMENTHAL is enjoying his first convention in years. No expense accounts to O. K. but his own.

That must be BILLY BRANDT who's paging LEE OCHS just now. BILLY seems to be having a good time, but we are beginning to believe that he was born with that smile. It's good to look at.

HARRY RICE just appeared with a shame-faced look. HARRY confesses that after all these years of publicity crime he pulled his first pure "Hokum" stunt last week. Yes, it stole The Examiner for "The Virgin of Stamboul."

Well, it's all over. The boys are scattering East, West, North and South. Back to li'l old New York—with pleasant memories. Quite a convention. Yes, we are a little tired—and poorer—but we surely met a bunch of real fellows this time.

"Big Six" Organizes Distributing Company for Product

Oscar A. Price named President; F. B. Warren, General Manager

It has been officially announced that the Associated Producers, Inc., have organized their own distributing company to handle the pictures that will be made by the prominent directors that allied themselves about two months ago under the corporate title of the Associated Producers. By virtue of this newly organized distributing company, the Associated Producers will be enabled to deal directly with American exhibitors instead of through a sales organization controlled by other interests. Oscar A. Price has been made president of the distributing company, and F. B. Warren has been appointed general manager.

Contracts pertaining to the new organization were signed last week by Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Marshall Neilan, Allen Dwan, George Loane Tucker and Maurice Tourneur. All these directors will complete their contracts at present in force with other organizations, it is stated, and at least two more prominent directors will join the Associated Producers.

The following statement has been issued by the Associated Producers, Inc., regarding their distribution plans:

"The Associated Producers, Inc., distribution will not utilize the facilities of any other organization. It will own and operate its own newly opened exchanges in all the important sales zones of the country, completely manned and managed by its own exclusive employes. Production plans of the members of the Associated Producers, Inc., are well developed and their new organization will be actively releasing their first powerful productions at the opening of the next motion-picture year.

"Both Oscar A. Price and F. B. Warren, operating executives of this new distribution are men trained in other business outside of the motion picture industry. They are both characteristically independent and have always shown little or no regard for film industry precedents, being organizers of wide experience and with the mental independence of the newspaper publishing profession from which they were recruited into pictures. Mr. Price has been active in editorial and political circles for many years and served his government throughout the World War as Wm. C. McAdoo's strong right arm in the Railroad Administration. Mr. Price has been president of the United Artists' Corporation from the date of its formation a year ago, retiring two weeks ago for this expansion of his activities in the motion picture industry.

"Mr. Warren was one of the founders of the Goldwyn organization in association Samuel Goldwyn, and Edgar and Archibald Selwyn. He was vice-president and a director of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation from the day of its formation, with control over sales. For a year, following his retirement in April, 1919, he was vice-president in charge of sales of the Hodkinson organization from which he retired ten days ago for his new alliance with the Associated Producers, Inc."

Hallmark Takes Over Triangle Exchanges

Frank Hall Closes Deal Acquiring Big System of Exchanges and Many Pictures

FRANK G. HALL, president of Hallmark, and Percy L. Waters, president of Triangle, have just closed another big deal which is of unusual interest to the industry, as it not only involves the taking over of a complete distributing organization with eighteen branches, but also includes control of many big productions of some of the screen's famous stars.

Mr. Hall has acquired for Hallmark Pictures Corporation the complete system of Triangle Exchanges from the Triangle Distributing Corporation and also control of the pictures of Triangle Film Corporation which gives Hallmark exchanges in Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Denver, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, Seattle, Detroit, Salt Lake City, Washington, New Haven and Milwaukee, all of which have been handling the physical distribution of Hallmark pictures for some time.

This move by Frank Hall is said to be the opening gun of an offensive campaign to place Hallmark at the very top of the list of independent producers and distributors. Preparations for large expansion have been going on quietly for several months and with the announcement of the closing of the Hall-Waters deal comes the news of four special pictures completed and ready for immediate release with eight more to follow at short intervals; two of which are already in preparation.

The finished specials are: "The Discarded Woman" and "For Love Or Money," both Burton King productions; and "Should a Wife Work?" and "What Children Will Do," staged by Horace Plimpton. "The Common Sin," another Burton King production is in preparation as is also a new Plimpton production, the title of which has not been decided upon.

The former Triangle distributing organization, now Hallmark, will be kept intact and the personnel of each office will remain the same with George N. Montgomery, general sales manager for Hallmark, in charge. Mr. Montgomery recently completed an extended trip which took in all of the branches and was greatly pleased with the marked spirit of co-operation he found, a spirit which is very much in keeping with Frank Hall's ideas.

The productions controlled by Hallmark through the purchase include some of the pictures of many of the screen's biggest stars and by the world's foremost directors. Frank Keenan, William S. Hart, Douglas Fairbanks and Norma Talmadge are among the most prominent stars in the Triangle Film Corporation's list which contains nine Keenan pictures, thirteen Fairbanks pictures, seven Talmadge pictures in addition to sixteen elaborate Keystone comedies and other interesting productions.

Among the more important subjects are: "The Coward," "Jim Grimsby's Boy," "The Thoroughbred," "The Disciple," "Hells Hinges," "Wolf Lowry," "The Lamb," "Double Trouble," "The Matrimaniac," "Missing Links," "Children in the House" and "Going Straight."

Midnight Picture Show for Newspapermen

On the occasion of the convening of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association in New York this week a monster "midnight matinee" was given on last Wednesday evening, April 21st, at the Rivoli by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc. An entertaining program was presented, including special and timely topical features designed to be of particular interest to the newspaper men invited. The arrangements for the evening's performance were conducted by a committee of the advertisers under the chairmanship of Paul Gulick, who is also president of the A. M. P. A.

Carl Laemmle Buys Out Interests of P. A. Powers in Universal

President Now has Practical Control; Powers Resigns as Treasurer Too

P. A. POWERS has sold out his interests in the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to its president, Carl Laemmle, and has resigned as the treasurer of that organization. This transaction and the resultant readjustment of Universal's holdings several days ago has been made the occasion of the publication of a lengthy statement by President Laemmle. The statement as submitted, follows:

"In buying out Mr. P. A. Powers' interest in the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, I have achieved the ambition of my life. I organized the Universal company eight years ago and it always has been my 'baby.' In all the vicissitudes of the Universal company's varied existence, I never gave up hope of gaining practical control of it some day. That day has come, and I am glorying in the opportunity I have for making Universal the greatest film organization on the globe.

"There is the friendliest feeling between Mr. Powers and myself. He has known for a long time of my ambition to have complete control of the company. He finally consented to sell out to me. The deal was consummated in all friendliness and with regard for the mutual interests of both of us. Although he no longer is connected with Universal, he has my good will and I have his.

"Universal has had its ups and downs, but today it is stronger than ever before, and with a promise for the future which gives me the confidence to go to every possible extreme to make Universal greater.

"It has been a hard struggle most of the time, building Universal. I wouldn't go through it again for all the money in the United States. We have taken the slowest, but likewise the surest, way of building it into a tower of strength. Our basis has been—fair treatment of exhibitors plus fair treatment of competitors. I do not believe that there is an exhibitor in the world who denies that the Universal has tried to right every wrong in the business, and I know that no producing company can honestly accuse us of any of the tricks that have been a blight on the industry.

"It looks like fair weather for Universal from now on. In the past year there has been a marvelous improvement in the quality of Universal pictures. We are prepared to show a more astonishing improvement this year and in the years to come. Never in the history of the company have we been in such excellent shape to produce and market the kind of pictures the public seems to like best. Already, we have on hand for next fall a huge supply of the very best productions the trade has ever known.

"I know whereof I speak. Our latest success, 'The Virgin of Stamboul,' is proving itself one of the most popular pictures of the year. It is a huge money-maker for us and for exhibitors. And it is only the beginning of a succession of master productions, many of which already are completed, which we will release in the near future.

"'The Devil's Pass Key,' Erich von Stroheim's latest Jewel production, will cause a sensation in the film world. It makes you think you're set right down in Paris, so realistic is the Parisian atmosphere. We have five of these big pictures ready now, including 'The Virgin of Stamboul' and 'The Devil's Pass Key." The others are 'Ambition,' with Dorothy Phillips, 'The Breath of the Gods,' with Tsuru Aoki, and 'The Beach Comber,' with Elmo Lincoln.

"For its special pictures, to be released approximately every week, beginning next July, Universal has selected six popular stars, each star to make a series of eight pictures during the ensuing year. This plan has already met with hearty commendation on the part of exhibitors. It will assure them a steady output of excellent pictures starring players of first rate ability and prestige.

"In the serial field Universal is far ahead of its competitors. Our five great 1920 serials are taking like hot-cakes. 'The Lion Man,' 'Elmo the Fearless,' 'The Moon Riders,' 'The Vanishing Dagger' and 'The Dragon's Net,' taken either individually or together, form a distinct stride in chaptered photo-drama. That is because Universal has put unlimited care and money into their production. Two of them are the results of foreign expedition, one to Europe and the other to Asia, so that the proper settings and foreign atmosphere for their various episodes might be absolutely correct.

"Universal is beating new paths in other directions. Two exploring expeditions now are in the hearts of Africa and Borneo, getting pictures never before shown on the screen—pictures of native life, of the scenic wonders, and of the strange animals of those two untrodden sections of the world.

"Other new and recent ventures by Universal include the turning out of high-class five-reel comedies based on farcical stories by popular writers, a new brand of high-class two-reel comedies, and a weekly novelty reel of strange and curious things in nature and in the works of mankind.

"Universal rapidly is expanding its great sales and distribution force. An expedition now is nearing Australia to set up the first Universal branch in that continent.

"All these and other awakenings of activity I see about me in Universal give me great hopes for the future. The more I make comparisons between the methods the Universal has used to arrive at its present position of prosperity and popularity and the various methods others have employed, the more I realize that any man or company which bases its efforts on high principles is bound to come out on top.

"Keep your eye on Universal. We've just begun to fight."

Indiana Exhibitors Form Production Concern

FORMATION of the United Exhibitors Productions Corporation, organization of which was revealed a few weeks ago when articles of incorporation were filed in Indianapolis, constitutes a protest of a league of Indiana exhibitors against what they consider to be exhorbitant prices of producers, directors said this week.

The leaders declined to divulge the names of theatres which are to be included in the circuit, but stated that it is their intention to book co-operatively and eventually form their own producing company in California.

The organization is incorporated with $1,000,000 capital. Original incorporators are Robert W. McClaskey, G. L. Pugh and Frank Fitzgibbon, of Indianapolis; Merrill Moore, of Kokomo, and Herbert Williams, of Los Angeles, California. Headquarters of the corporation for the time being will be located in Indianapolis.

Musicians' Demands May Boost Admission Rates

Admission prices in nine large motion picture houses and theatres of St. Louis will be increased, beginning next season, if the demands presented by union musicians employed by members of the Theatre Managers' Association of St. Louis, amounting to an increase in salaries of forty per cent, are granted. This statement was made last night by E. J. Sullivan, manager of the St. Louis Orpheum and chairman of the managers' association.

At a conference of musicians and managers of the Shubert-Jefferson, Orpheum, Grand opera House, Loew's Garrick, Empress, Gayety, Standard, Rialto, and Columbia Held recently, the union musicians presented their demands for increased salaries. The managers offered to concede to an increase of fifteen per cent in salaries, but the union refused to accept this, Mr. Sullivan said.

Schulberg Heads Distributing Company

Corporation Distributing Katherine MacDonald Pictures Plans Wider Field of Activities

B. P. SCHULBERG, one of the oldest executives, in point of service, in the motion picture industry, has acquired an interest in and been elected president of the Attractions Distributing Corporation, which releases the Katherine MacDonald productions through the First National Exhibitors Circuit. B. P. Fineman, who has been president of Attractions since its inception a year ago, becomes vice president and will remain in Los Angeles to cooperate with Sam E. Rork, president of the Katherine MacDonald Pictures Corporation, on the productions of this star and others whom Attractions plans soon to present on the screen. Mr. Schulberg's headquarters will be in New York, and he will move the offices of Attraction Distributing Corporation to those he has occupied for some time in the Longacre Bldg.

The assumption of this office restores to activity in American film circles one who has steadfastly endeavored to advance the standards both of production and distribution. For the past year, since leaving Famous Players-Lasky and the United Artists Corporation, after aiding Hiram Abrams in its formation, Mr. Schulberg has been identified with the export end of the business, through an affiliation with one of the largest distributing concerns of Europe, who entrusted him with the purchase, to the extent of many hundreds of thousands of dollars, of American film product. This association supplemented a film education dating back over twelve years, a period during which Mr. Schulberg has been identified with every progressive development of the industry, and seven years of which were served with Famous Players-Lasky, starting with Adolph Zukor's formation of the Famous Players Film Co., in 1912, and culminating as General Manager of the combined Paramount and Artcraft.

Under the new regime, Attractions Distributing intends to offer specialized representation to stars, directors and other factors in the business, besides producing big special features from time to time.

In a statement regarding the new plans of the company, Mr. Schulberg said:

"Although I have thought so for a long time, I have never felt with more conviction that the time has come when individual initiative and original thought and action are at last to bring their fullest reward in the film industry. Whether in the case of star, director, or sales or exploitation executive, the independent worker in the industry who really serves the screen by conscientious effort and serious purpose can accomplish more than was ever before possible because the industry has fortunately reached that stage where personal and specialized methods of production or exploitation transcend in value and in effect all the machinery of unwieldly organizations lacking the same degree of personal inspiration and zeal, without which all creative art is futile.

"The big successes of the screen have emanated from this spirit and from these independent sources, and from them will spring the future masterpieces of the screen.

"It is our purpose to maintain such a policy as will enable us to bring most readily and with the least hindrance to the open market all such pictures as we may be selected to sell or exploit, and to bring to independent producers and distributors all stars and directors who wish to establish independent units of production."

Legislature Passes Motion Picture Laws

Session Ends in New York with Passage of Three Statutes, Including Cotillo Bill

THE New York State Legislature came to a close at 2 o'clock on the morning of April 25th with the passage of three bills of interest to the motion picture industry, the Cotillo deposit bill, the Kelly guardianship bill and the waiver bill to protect the exhibitor from any effort on the part of the manufacturer towards circumventing the provisions of the Cotillo measure. The three bills are now in the hands of Governor Smith for action during the next thirty days.

Three bills to which the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League offered strenuous opposition, died by remaining in committee, these being the Hunter bill, seeking to repeal the present law under which motion picture theatres are operating in this State on Sundays, the Davenport bill, raising the age of admission to theatres, from 16 to 18 years, and the Flynn bill which sought to force upon the exhibitor the necessity of employing in addition to the regular operator, an apprentice.

In passing the three bills and blocking the others, the New York State Exhibitors' League secured what might be termed a 100 per cent victory, for every bill they supported was passed and on the other hand every bill opposed was downed. The victory belongs to Sydney S. Cohen, president of the League; S. I. Berman, Charles L. O'Reilly and Irvin Salyerds, who not only spent the entire week here but remained through the session, which lasted until 6 o'clock in the morning, returning at 11 o'clock and sticking to their posts until 2 o'clock the following morning, when the session ended.

The chief interest, of course, centered around the Cotillo bill, the opposition coming from the manufacturers, who sent telegram after telegram to the senators and assemblymen in the vain hope of keeping the bill in committee. The bill passed both houses, however, and it is understood, stands a fair chance in being signed by the Governor. The bill prevents the use of money exacted on film contracts for deposit by manufacturers or producers, in the producing of films or in other ways carrying on his business.

In a motion picture way, this session of the New York Legislature has been a most interesting one. Almost at the start Assemblyman Hunter introduced a bill seeking to close all motion picture theatres in the State on Sunday. The League took up the cudgels and as a result when the session closed last night the bill was still in the Assembly rules committee. The Flynn bill, pertaining to operators, was also held in committee. The Davenport bill met a like fate.

The Kelly bill, which really defines what constitutes a guardian in accompanying children under 16 years of age to the motion picture theatre, had rather a hard time of it in the Assembly. In fact, the bill was defeated Friday night by a vote of 76 to 50 after a thirty-minute discussion. It was apparent that many of the Assemblymen did not fully understand the meaning and intent of the bill. Efforts to bring about its reconsideration and vote were successful and at 9 o'clock last night the bill was passed by a vote of 130 to 12 and went to the Governor.

According to word which came from the Executive Chamber last Monday, there is a probability that Governor Smith, desirous of becoming better acquainted, not only with the Cotillo bill but with the other two measures, will call for a hearing during the next thirty days, at which time both sides will be heard. There has been so much opposition on the part of manufacturers and producers to the Cotillo bill that it is said, the Governor, wishing to be fair and square to each side, wishes to learn the merits first hand.

Fox International Convention to Open May 24th

Branch Managers from Foreign and local Offices Will Meet in New York

AN announcement from Fox Film Corporation heralds the sixth annual convention of the Fox sales forces, which will be held at the Commodore Hotel, New York City, and will bring together the Fox branch managers, district superintendents, special representatives and sales heads from every Fox office in the world. It will be held from May 24th to 29th.

Herman Robbins, general sales manager of Fox Film Corporation, has sent out a call to all branch offices of the firm—including all foreign exchanges of the organization, which now encircles the earth. Representatives of the firm will come from all the principal cities of the United States and from the various branches located in the Dominion of Canada. London, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle, Glasgow, Cardiff, Leeds, Birmingham and Dublin will furnish the quota of Fox officials from Great Britain. The Australasian field will send managers from Sydney, Melbourne, Brisbane, Adelaide and Wellington, New Zealand, and the South American field will contribute its share from the Fox exchanges in Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo, Buenos Aires, Rosario, Montevideo and Lima.

Fox Film Corporation for some time has maintained offices in France at Paris, Marseilles, Strassbourg, Lyons, Lille and Bordeaux. Additional branches have recently been established in Treves, Nancy and Toulouse. The managers of these new branches are not expected to attend the convention, in view of the fact that these are sub-divisions of the territory covered by the Paris branch.

The other Fox foreign branches which will be represented include the Brussels office in Belgium, the Amsterdam branch in Holland and the Italian exchanges in Rome and Turin.

William Fox, one of the pioneers among film producers to gather together in convention the heads of his exchanges, brings his sales force together this year for the most important business meeting in the history of the corporation. Six years ago William Fox issued a nation wide call to his managers which is said to have marked the beginning of sales conventions in the film industry.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, who is in Europe, will return in time to take charge of the convention, as in the past. According to the most recent advices from Mr. Sheehan, he will be in the United States about the middle of May to perfect plans for the meeting and the subjects which are to come up for discussion.

Mr. Sheehan, upon his return, will be thoroughly equipped for an exhaustive conference with Mr. Fox regarding the results of his tour and the conditions of the foreign market with relation to Fox Films. Thus far, the reports received from him have been most encouraging.

William Fox himself will open the convention, and will outline to his sales organization the policy to be adopted by the corporation for the ensuing year as regards the distribution of Fox Specials, Sunshine Comedies, Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons and other Fox entertainments. It is expected that the plans to be laid before the salesmen will show a notable development in the entire system from both the producing and distributing view points.

Those who will attend the convention from various sections of the United States and Canada are listed below and will represent thirty five or more branches of the Fox organization in this country and at least a half dozen in the Dominion of Canada.

District superintendents with headquarters are as follows: Harry F. Campbell, Boston; Clayton P. Sheehan, Buffalo; George Allison, Atlanta; E. H. Wachter, Kansas City; Howard J. Sheehan, Los Angeles; Vincent L. McCabe, Toronto.

Dominion branch managers: Maurice West, Montreal; L. M. Devaney, Toronto; Jos. Lieberman, St. John, N. B.; R. A. Scott, Vancouver; William Spencer Jones, Winnipeg; Mitchell Rose, Calgary.

Famous Players Studio Ball a Success

THE Eastern Studios Employes of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Ball was held at the Hotel Commodore, New York, on the evening of April 28, and proved to be a brilliant affair. General Sir Charles Townshend, Commander of the British forces in Asia Minor, was the guest of honor, and occupied a box with Daniel Frohman, upon whose personal invitation he was present. Other boxes were occupied by prominent film magnates.

Miss Elsie Ferguson led the Grand March at midnight, during which Mr. Frohman and Alfred Cheney Johnston, as judges of the Beautiful Girl Contest, selected the three lucky aspirants who would subsequently have tests made at the studio, in order to determine their eligibility for moving picture engagements with Famous Players. Arc lights had been installed, and the cameramen were busy "shooting" many feet of film during the march.

Blue Sunday Movement Grows in Oklahoma

A blue Sunday ordinance, prohibiting the operation of picture shows, vaudeville, tent shows and other public amusements of any kind on Sunday was passed by the City Commissioners at Norman, Oklahoma, last week. A section of the ordinance also calls for a board of censorship.

Ascher Bros. Acquire Big Theatre in Milwaukee

Ascher Brothers of Chicago, through Nathan Ascher, have acquired the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, one of that city's leading downtown houses, and expects to take it over on May 1st. No immediate change in policy of operating the Merrill is contemplated, according to Mr. Ascher, as the theatre already is one of the most successful in the Middle West.

The Ascher Brothers already control many of the biggest houses in Chicago and are building large theatres in several other important cities of the Central West.

No United Artists Head Named by Directors

No president was elected by the directors of United Artists Corporation at their recent meeting to succeed Oscar A. Price, who resigned as head of the company. Dennis F. O'Brien, attorney for Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, was elected vice-president, and it is expected that the president will be chosen at some future meeting, the date of which is undecided.

Grauman Denies Rumor of Friction

In a telegram from Los Angeles on April 29, Sid Grauman made unqualified denial of rumors he said had spread to the effect that there were strained relations existing between himself and Famous Players-Lasky.

Throngs See Carpentier Box in Studio

Cameras Grind as French Pugilist Dons Gloves, and New Yorkers Applaud

THE Solax studio in Fort Lee was packed to the doors on the night of April 26th, by crowds who made the ferries and New Jersey trolleys carry double loads in their desire to watch Georges Carpentier, the French pugilist, and Robertson-Cole screen star, don his fighting costume for the first time since his arrival in America.

The occasion was the "shooting" of some of the fighting scenes for the fighter's first Robertson-Cole picture. Invitations were sent out by the producers and as a result the big arena was flooded with fight fans and others who are interested in this gentleman-fighter, who has created such a great interest since his arrival in America several weeks ago to make a Robertson-Cole picture. The number who made the journey to the wilds of Jersey reflects the warm reception given to this latest star by all New York, and also the amount of publicity given him by the daily press.

It was a typical New York crowd except in the matter of dress. For practically the entire audience appeared in evening dress, and as a result an enthusiastic and well groomed set of extras was obtained by Director Adolfi, who, megaphone in hand, directed the fast and furious action that Monsieur Georges displayed in the ring while three cameramen turned their cranks. John Barrett was the unlucky opponent, and was knocked out at the end of the fourth round. This, of course, was ordained long beforehand by the scenario writer.

Sporting writers of the New York dailies gave a great deal of space the next morning to reporting the first impressions which they have been able to obtain of the coming heavyweight contender. And Carpentier, although the studio lights did not allow him to forget that he was only "play acting," gave the light fans plenty of thrills and the sporting editors enough material to judge his ability. His reputed fast footwork was very much in evidence, and in the knockout picture, he evinced an honest to goodness righthand cross that laid Barrett out on the mat in a realistic manner.

Of course M. Georges pulled his punches a bit. Barrett after all was only a movie actor, and was not there to be knocked entirely dead. But in the final scene in was a "no fooling" punch that made the actor take the count. Smelling salts were necessary to bring him back, and it was not in the picture either.

Robertson Cole will probably have in this picture one of the most distinguished sets of extras that ever sat before a camera, for some prominent New York City officials were lined about the ring, their stiff white fronts and sparkling studs gleaming under the heavy lights.

Carpentier proved also that Robertson Cole has also acquired an actor as well as a fighter. In the third round he feigned grogginess. He made for the wrong corner and then staggered to his haven of rest. It was a pretty bit of acting, and the cameraman ground feverishly, while Director Adolfi bawled forth instructions.

Mrs. Carpentier sat in the gallery and applauded her Georges. As the scene in the film called for men only as extras, Mrs Carpentier will be obliged to wait for another opportunity to get closer to the camera.

Many New Companies in New York State

AN unusually large number of concerns were incorporated during the past week or ten days in New York State for the purpose of embarking in the motion picture business. Wilkinson, New York; the Ultimate Productions, Inc., $200,000, Harry Rosenbaum, Nan Esterman and Almon C. Kellogg, New York; Killester Films, Inc., $100,000, James A. Rafferty, John J. Famous Players Defends Stage Invasion

By Jesse L. Lasky

"THE action of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in helping to finance plays and in securing the control of various theatres is not going to hurt the stage, as some people profess to think, but, on the contrary, is going to help it.

"Persons who have said our entrance into the legitimate producing field would debase the standard of the drama seem to forget that the most artistically successful legitimate plays in recent years have been made into motion pictures. The fact that a play is artistic in no way bars it as film material. On the contrary, if any Broadway producer puts on a production that is artistic, no matter what its commercial success may be, he will find the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation the first to bid for its motion picture rights. Instead of seeking to lower the standards of the legitimate drama, we want to raise those standards.

"Our critics also seem to ignore the fact, well known in the theatrical business, that no Broadway manager will accept a play for stage production unless he also can have the motion picture rights to that play, for disposal, at a big profit to him, to the motion picture producers. No matter how high an artistic standard a given play may set, not a producer on Broadway will put it on the stage unless he has the motion picture rights. Are these producers who are so loud in their defense of the drama seeking themselves to drag it into the mire?

"Moreover, in the past many an artistic and praiseworthy play has been denied a hearing because its theme was one which the prospective producer feared might prevent it from becoming a popular success. Has any Broadway manager produced 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' since Mansfield? Has any Broadway manager produced 'The Admirable Crichton' in recent years? The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has produced both these famous works in motion pictures.

"Dramatic critics for years have been assailing the managers for having an eye only to the box-office. These are the managers who have raised the American drama to the dizzy heights of the bedroom farce, the crook melodrama, the sex play. And these are the managers who now loudly protest that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is seeking to drag the drama down from this high estate!

"The entrance of the Famous Players Lasky Corporation into the legitimate field cannot but have a salutary effect on the American drama. It stands to reason that if an arrangement is made between a producer and a motion picture organization whereby the former is assured against loss, he can select his plays on artistic merit alone, and cast with big stars."

Chicago and the Mid-West

Covered By L. H. MASON

C. L. Philkins, who has been salesman for the American Film Company in the Chicago district for the last eight months, has resigned to go with the Chicago exchange of National as a salesman.

Director of Exchanges E. R. Pearson was in Chicago last week for several days conferring with Manager Aschmann on sales and exploitation plans for the imposing array of Pathe productions to be released during the Fall and Winter. Before returning to New York Mr. Pearson expects to visit Pathe exchanges in Minneapolis, Omaha, St. Louis, Cincinnati and a number of other cities.

R. C. Cropper, president of the recently formed Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, is in Chicago and will be at his old offices in the Film Exchange Building, formerly the Beehive Exchange but now Chicago exchange of Reelcraft for a week before returning to New York. He is enthusiastic over the substantial progress already made by the new company.

Western Division Manager J. T. Rogers and Phil H. Solomon, manager of the Chicago office of the Masterpiece Film Distributing Corporation, are proud of the remarkable record they have made in getting their exchange under way. The Masterpiece office at 207 S. Wabash avenue was opened on April 7th and on April 23rd, sixteen days afterwards, an office force and sales staff were organized, booking contracts made with sixty theatres and Masterpiece releases were being shown in Lubliner & Trinz houses. Mr. Rogers states he regards this accomplishment as showing that the exhibitor appreciates the fair deal for all and no deposit policy of Masterpiece.

Unity Photoplays Company have acquired a number of important new productions for release in the near future and President Zambrino is enthusiastic over the outlook for big business. Among the pictures purchased for Illinois and Indiana territory are: "Hawk's Trail," a serial; "Frivolous Wives," a six-reel feature made by Fidelity, twelve five reel "Tex" mystery stories produced by William Steiner and which will be released one a month. Mr. Zambrino has also bought "The Window Opposite" for the states of Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin and obtained the rights to "The Fall of Babylon" and "The Mother and the Law" for Illinois, exclusive of Cook County.

Tom Saxe, it is reported, has bought the Strand theatre in Milwaukee and will retain Frank Cook as manager of that house.

Peter L. Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, is a golf fan of the first magnitude and has had himself put in A-1 physical condition for the season on the links. He recently discovered that a soreness in his left knee was interfering with his stance and as this was an important thing, hastened to a doctor who advised him it was caused by trouble with his tonsils. "If tonsils interfere with golf they have to go," was Mr. Schaefer's decision and had himself to the Presbyterian Hospital where he had them removed. He is out again now and with all handicaps eliminated is prepared to land on the pill as never before.

John Bowman, widely known in local motion picture circles, will be in charge of the Chicago office of Arthur James, who recently resigned from the Fox Film Corporation as director of publicity and advertising to go into business for himself. The new firm will specialize on publicity and advertising campaigns for the big pictures. Mr. James, it is understood, will have his headquarters in New York.

The ushers at the Castle Theatre are up to the minute and have joined the overall brigade in fighting the high cost of clothing. Clad in overall costumes, they handled the crowds which visited this theatre where Clara Kimball Young in "The Forbidden Woman" was the screen attraction.

District Manager Hansen of Robertson-Cole has returned from a trip to the southwest during which he appointed P. K. Johnston, formerly of Triangle, as Robertson-Cole manager at Dallas, and R. S. Mosely, formerly with Sherman Williams, publicity director. Mr. Hansen reports the business showing satisfactory increase in the Dallas territory and one of the best evidences of it is the necessity of placing much larger print by orders. At Kansas City he arranged to move the office from the Gloyd Building into larger quarters in the Ozark Building and appointed a new assistant manager and publicity man, Mr. Feildman, formerly salesman working out of the Kansas City exchange.

Gumbiner Brothers have added another theatre to their chain of Chicago movie houses. It is the Belle situated at Milwaukee and North avenues. Mr. Retchen has been appointed manager of the new Gumbiner house and it is his intention to install a large symphony orchestra and run only latest and biggest pictures.

One of the biggest contracts of the week in the Chicago territory was closed by Manager Max Levy of Robertson-Cole with Lubliner & Trinz. Mr. Levy reports that beginning September, he has arranged for all Robertson-Cole feature releases to be shown in all of the Lubliner & Trinz theatres for one year. He has also booked "The White Dove" into the same firm's houses for an early showing.

George Weinberg has joined the sales staff of Masterpiece Film Distributing Corporation and will cover Illinois territory.

Frank Flaherty, sales manager for Unity Photoplays Company, was speaking in a whisper last week and claimed that he had lost his voice talking to exhibitors who were anxious to book "Lightning Bryce."

L. T. Rogers was in New York for a conference this week on new pictures and to take up advertising and exploitation matters with the eastern representatives of Masterpiece.

Philip H. Solomon, whose appointment as manager of the Chicago office of Masterpiece Film Distributing Corporation was recently announced, has added the following sales representatives to his staff. Daniel Ryan, formerly with Republic and also Wisconsin Film Distributing Corporation; Harold Loeb, formerly attached to the selling force of Republic and George Weinberg, formerly with the Beehive Film Corporation. The first releases noted by Masterpiece, are "The Trap," "Friday The 13th," "Souls Adrift," "The Pawn of Fate," "The Dancer's Peril" and "The Man of the Hour." The stars being presented are: Alice Brady, Robert Warwick, George Beban and Ethel Clayton.

L. A. Roselle, four years with World, has been appointed manager of Triangle's exchange. Jack O'Toole has retired as manager of United in Chicago and it is understood that Triangle will handle all United pictures released up to date. No announcement has yet been made as to how United pictures not yet released will be taken care of in the Chicago territory. Joe Unger, sales manager, and W. Hughes, special representative of United were in Chicago this week conferring with Mr. Roselle as to sales plans.

Harry Cassidy, widely known as theatrical and circus exploitation man, has joined the staff of Famous Players-Lasky and will work with Publicity Director Roche in exploiting their productions in this territory.

Doyle & Winans have opened the Majestic at Peoria, which formerly was a vaudeville house, as a high-class moving picture theatre. "Male & Female" was the picture chosen as the premier feature and Messrs. Doyle and Winans' policy will be to show super specials exclusively. Publicity Director Roche of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Chicago office, went to Peoria to take charge of the exploitation in connection with the showing of "Male & Female" and found himself confronted with a paper shortage which prevented him from getting newspaper advertising space. He, however, located a job printer who had a large amount of book paper of newspaper size on hand and succeeded in buying enough of this to have 20,000 inserts carrying a full page ad run in the Transcript Journal's Sunday edition. He sold the back page of the insert to a Peoria merchant at a price which practically paid for the "Male & Female" page ad, all of which was some advertising achievement.

The Reelcraft Exchanges located at Chicago, Indianapolis and Milwaukee are now releasing the Helen Gibson two-reel thrillers for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. Manager Harthill reports that they are going strong.

Manager Jack Graumont of Metro's Chicago Exchange has returned from honeymooning at Colorado Springs and jumped into one of the busiest booking seasons ever experienced at the Metro exchange.

R. T. Smith, formerly manager of the Triangle Chicago office and later sales manager of United's Chicago exchange is now associated with Superior Screen Service, the distributing corporation recently organized by Harry Weiss.

Among the Illinois exhibitors seen around Chicago exchanges this week were Pete Wales, who runs a string of houses in Lanark, Kirkland and other Western Illinois towns; D. S. Smith of the Opera House, Hoopestown, Ill., and W. H. Cadort of La Petite theatre, Kankakee.

J. M. Jacobs of the First National, Indianapolis, Ind., was in Chicago last week on business connected with his organization. J. F. Cubberly of the Minneapolis office of First National also was a Chicago visitor and spent Sunday with Harry Weiss, leaving Monday for New York where he expected to remain for a week.

Prints of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," Vitagraph's big super special, have been received in Chicago and Manager Fred Aiken is arranging for a special exhibitors' showing of the picture which he regards as one of the most important of the year.

A. H. Haagen announces that arrangements have been completed with Superior Screen Service to handle "The Confession" for the states of Illinois and Indiana

Kinema, Los Angeles, Originates Prologue For "Sex"

The engagement of "Sex" at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, was marked by an exploitation campaign that left nothing undone to make the picture a success. Among the exploitation stunts employed was the placing of large oil paintings of Miss Glaum mounted in expensive frames in the leading hotels of Los Angeles and in the lobby of the theatre.

A colorful prologue, accompanying the picture, was arranged by Producer Read and Manager Calicott of the Kinema theatre. A reproduction on the stage of the famous "Spider Dance" which was one of the sensations of the picture was used as the prologue. The original "Spider gown" worn by Miss Glaum in "Sex" and which has been displayed in nearly all the newspaper rotogravure sections in the country was worn by a Denishawn dancer in the prologue.

The results of the entire exploitation campaign were registered at the Kinema Box Office in a way that pleased both the producer and the Kinema Management.

Newspaper Prints Story of Feature for Pittsburgh Exhibitors

WHAT is declared to be one of the most unique and enterprising bits of exploitation ever accomplished in Pennsylvania has been recently brought to a close with gratifying success for the Pittsburgh Sun and the Rowland and Clark theatres.

The genuine and definite box office results which Samuel Sivitz, director of advertising for the Rowland and Clark houses, obtained for "A Daughter of Two Worlds," is important and interesting in its possibilities for other exhibitors.

The arrangement worked out harmoniously both for the newspaper and for the theatre interests and to such an extent that an explanation of this promotion is justified in view of the fact that its very plausibility makes it extremely desirable for other exhibitors to undertake.

Several weeks before "The Daughter of Two Worlds" was scheduled for release in Pittsburgh, the Sun, approached by Mr. Sivitz, agreed to print a four-page section carrying ten chapters of "The Daughter of Two Worlds." This section was amply illustrated with scenes from Miss Talmadge's production. The ten chapters and the special edition were brought forth on a Sunday, calling attention to the fact that the screen version of the story would soon be ready for release and asking those who read the special ten-chapter installment to begin following the remaining chapters as they would appear in the Pittsburgh Sun beginning the Monday thereafter.

This special edition was printed in a lot of 100,000 and distributed by the Pittsburgh First National Exchange. The natural advantage to the Sun was the fact that in the edition of 100,000 many people hitherto not readers of the Sun, would be reached. The number allotted to Pittsburgh was 30,000 of which 15,000 were distributed among the Grand and Liberty theatres. The balance of 70,000 was distributed in towns in Western Pennsylvania.

On the Monday following the ten-chapter installment, the Sun, true to promise, carried the next chapter of the story of "The Daughter of Two Worlds." And just at the time the concluding chapters of the story were being published the picture was ready for release.

Hy Mayer's Travelaugh Worth Showing

THE Capitol theatre is showing a reel occasionally made especially for this theatre under the title of "Hy Mayer's Capitol Travelaugh" which has so much merit that it seems a shame that it is not released for showing in other theatres.

The offering on the bill this week is titled "Such Is Life in The Great Melting Pot." It is the best thing of its kind we ever saw, when the novelty of the idea, the combining of the cartoon and current events number is considered.

Enterprising managers in other cities who are on the lookout for short stuff which is different will do well to inquire of the Capitol management if these reels could not be secured for showing in their houses.

Good Idea for Exploiting "Stamboul"

SAM W. B. COHN, director of exploitation for the Allen Theatre Enterprises, of Canada, has recently turned out special stunt campaigns covering the exploitation of such productions as "The Virgin of Stamboul," "Partners of the Night" and "Dangerous Days." These campaigns are first employed at the Allen theatre in Toronto, Ontario, and are then passed on to the seven suburban houses of the same circuit, in the city, and also the other fifty theatres comprising the Allen chain throughout the Dominion.

In connection with the exploitation of "The Virgin of Stamboul" a victoria carriage drawn by a team of showy horses, conveyed "the virgin of Stamboul" and her sheik escort on the downtown streets of Toronto. There was no advertising matter on the outfit and the only way of ascertaining the identity of the gay couple was to approach them, whenever the carriage stopped in front of one of the prominent shops, where cards which stated "Introducing Sari, the Virgin of Stamboul, at home at the Allen theatre" were distributed.

The stunt was carried out in a dignified manner. The wardrobe worn by the occupants of the victoria was of the highest order, as was the livery of the coachman. The carriage and team were spick and span and the horses were decked out in plumes and fly nets.

It is needless to state that this stunt created much comment and thereby obtained the desired results.

New Angle For Exploiting "Pollyanna"

H. T. Moore Makes Some Observations on the Psychology of Exploitation

"THE psychology of the exploitation of a big feature is to follow in its every degree the spirit of the production, not only in the dress of your house, your bill-boarding, your newspaper advertising and publicity, but also in the dress and actions of your ushers and attendants.

That's the final analysis of the exploiting of big features, according to H. T. Moore, General Manager for Jensen-Von Herberg's Colonial theatre, of Tacoma, Wash., who has been giving the subject considerable study during the past few years, since exploitation has become one of the paramount requirements in the successful management of the theatre he has had under his supervision.

"The 'keeping in the spirit' idea was excellently exemplified recently when we presented 'Pollyanna,' in which production the spirit is that of being glad. No one can exploit gladness unless they themselves are glad, and it was this fact that I impressed upon each and every member of our theatre staff during the staff meetings that are regularly held every few days prior to the opening of a new production.

"It was pointed out to them that all around us were people sorely in need of 'the glad girl' medicine, for there were in our very community the prim and crabbed and loveless people who needed the glad heart to bring to the fore a heart fully as glad and loving, the recluses who need the persistent rays of affection's sunshine for the layers of ice about their hearts to melt away; the joyless and hopeless invalids, who need but the sunny eye and heart about them to reopen their own eyes and hearts to the sunshine of life; and in pointing out these facts I made it very plain that it was to be part of their province about the theatre during the week of 'Pollyanna' that they help the 'glad game' along.

"And this is what we did. Every employee was taught how to smile and keep on smiling. To see the bright side of everything, that, when the crowds started to push, they were not to get mad, but to remember that it could have been worse if it were a riot, and so on and on. They soon got the idea, and after they started to do the glad thing, they were happier themselves than ever before, and it was the easiest thing in the world. It worked admirably, and it certainly did add to the atmosphere of the theatre and helped in the exploitation of the picture.

"For the picture we extended our advertising, our bill-boarding and got in touch with all the school children in the community. The usherettes were dressed in dresses similar to that worn by Miss Pickford in the production, and as a prologue a small tot from the town, known to all lovers of music and elocution, did a number of characteristic songs, blending very well with the spirit of the production.

"The result of it all was that the Colonial did one of the biggest week's business in its career and the picture brought much joy and happiness to their townsfolk.

Wm. Cutts Gives "Virgin of Stamboul" Fine Showing

On this page is shown some of the stunts which William Cutts, manager of the Kinema theatre, Salt Lake City, used to put over "The Virgin of Stamboul". At the top is the lobby display built for the occasion. In the larger circle is a window display in which a "Turk" advertised the picture during the showing. In the smaller circle is shown a street ballyhoo in the form of the "Turkish" girl who rode about the streets of the city on a horse. At the bottom is a view of the Kinema lobby with "Sari" in her "harem"

Exhibitor Must Be Diplomat Says Pittsburgh Exhibitor

Mason Cites Qualities Which Insure Real Success in the Photoplay Field

"THE man with czar instincts has no place in the show business. The well-remembered 'opry house' manager who could assume the go-to-hell-if-you-don't-like-it attitude has ruled himself into the class of deposed monarchs. The combination that unlocks the door to exhibitor success will snare itself into an indestructible and immovable object when forced by czar tactics. Time and the public have made many changes."

Such are the convictions of W. F. Mason, manager of the Grand theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., who recently demonstrated how an exhibitor, by making friends, could work wonders in the way of successfully putting over a special feature attraction. No man in the world has a right to be a better diplomat than an exhibitor, says Mr. Mason. If he is not a diplomat, he is generally a failure. There is only one choice, and the dividing line must be drawn short and sharp. The bigger the diplomat, the more successful the exhibitor.

"Diplomacy," claims Mr. Mason, "when tempered with good judgment can help the exhibitor pack his house. The exhibitor of today is the exact paradox of the opera house manager of yesterday. The very existence of the former depends upon his friendliness for humanity in general. His exploitation is a basic ingredient in his very existence, and successful exploitation cannot be accomplished without co-operation. It takes friends to insure hearty co-operation. It takes diplomacy to make and keep friends.

"The small-town 'opry house' manager made more enemies for the show business than he did pennies for himself.

"An exhibitor must have a good standing in his city. A good standing is impossible without friends. Particularly in the smaller cities is this so. The motion picture exhibitor is looked upon in somewhat the same light as the town post-master. It is up to him to give the town proper theatrical representation. An unpopular exhibitor in a town of less than 200,000 would stand about as much chance as a celluloid dog who was chased through h—l by the asbestos cat. And as little as it seems probable, the same essential facts hold true for the big city exploitation. The city is an outgrowth of the village. Every city is simply an overgrown cow-path, where the population once upon a time was as gullible as modern day villagers are said to be and usually are not.

"Any business man in the world will tell you that he tries to make friends. That is why a business man will spend so much of his valuable time at the different civic clubs—to insure his standing with his fellow citizens; to show them that he is one of them; and incidentally to remind them that when they need a suit of clothes or a pair of shoes or whatever the required article happens to be, he is selling that article. An exhibitor should place himself in the same position. In my opinion, the exhibitor is a business man, the same as the grocer, or the butcher. Perhaps his stock is not as entirely essential to the existence of the community—but close up all the motion picture houses in a city of 700,000 for one week and then ask the people what they think about it. It would take a very short time to ascertain the fact that the motion picture exhibitor DOES supply a want, a need, an hiatus, an exigency, a demand, a requirement that no other business man fills.

"It also can be observed that the motion picture exhibitor in your city who is making the clean-up, who enjoys the patronage of the high-class citizenship, is a fellow who understands and appreciates the value of patronage-friendship—a man who goes out of his way at every opportunity to nod to or chat with his patrons. You will never find a grouch at the manager's desk of a successful motion picture house.

"I believe that this system of patron-friendship, which I have tried to cultivate, especially since I have been at the helm of the Grand theatre is one of the big things that have built up the patronage of the theatre. There are hundreds of ways the spirit of managerial friendship makes itself known to the patron. The usher system, the temperature and ventilation of the theatre, the prohibition of 'waits' in the performance, a clear and unhampered projection and a hundred other little things, mean volumes to the patron, who has always been the easiest person in the world to offend.

"A good percentage of people, whether for the purpose of viewing a theatrical attraction or buying a pair of sox, carry their feelings on their sleeves and a chip on their shoulder. And they are panting for someone (preferably the executive of the joint) to knock the chip off. That is why the careful exhibitor would rather have one friendly patron than ten whom he has taught to 'look for a row.'

"I'm betting on the exhibitor who has foresight enough to pin this sign on his desk: 'RIGHT OR WRONG, THE PATRON IS ALWAYS RIGHT. IF YOU CAN'T SUIT HIM THERE'S SOMETHING WRONG WITH YOU.'"

Criterion Showing Specially Compiled "Beautiful" Reel

UNDER the title of "Beautiful Things" managing director of the Criterion theatre, New York, Hugo Reisenfeld is presenting a reel of especially selected bits of film from various scenics, educational, etc., made up in the same way as it is now the custom to compile a special news weekly.

The result accomplished is an offering that probably has never been equaled in one reel of film when "Beautiful Things" as the appropriate title states is considered.

Whether such a reel is a practicable thing for weekly change houses is a matter of considerable doubt, but for a long run engagement it is an idea well worth remembering. Many a person is going out of the Criterion more impressed with this single reel than they are with the feature.

People who do this may not be termed "fans" but there is a certain percentage of such "highbrow" souls in every audience which makes it worth while to spend a little time and effort in arranging something on the program for them.

Omaha Theater Gets Publicity From Local Aeroplane

The aeroplane is getting to be an old story but that does not prevent street crowds from straining their necks every time the hum of a motor is heard overhead. An aeroplane will attract more attention than a fire, any day. Perhaps people watch aeroplanes in the hope that something will happen and the machine will fall.

Even Omaha is not aeroplane proof, as the management of the Moon theatre recently proved when they exploited "The Great Air Robbery." C. E. Tuttle, an amateur aviator of Red Oak, Iowa, flew over Omaha for the Moon theatre. He scattered handbills, dropped 500 passes to the theatre and pulled a series of air-stunts for the edification of the interested spectators below.

The Moon further capitalized the local interest in aviation. They borrowed a weird machine constructed by Guy Smith, a resident of Omaha. It was a hybrid, with an automobile body and aeroplane wings. It was "driven" down to the theatre where it was "parked." Crowds continually pressed about it, thinking it was a new invention—a helicopter, a gyrocopter or some other such strange bird-machine.

Window and Lobby Displays That Merit Great Praise

Gordon Wrighter, the live wire manager of Poli's Palace theatre, Springfield, Mass., is the originator of the exploitation idea illustrated to the left for "The Flame of the Desert."

An Egyptian hour glass strongly constructed and standing nine feet high was placed directly in front of the lobby. The upper compartment of the hour glass was filled with sand which flowed slowly into the lower glass. A large compo board frame surrounding the glass carried the question, "How long will it take sand to pass to lower glass?" Then at the bottom of the frame, "Free tickets to nearest correct guesses." A cut-out of Geraldine Farrar was placed at the top of the stand.

Prologue Author Receives Ovation

The unique occurrence of a crowded theatre calling for the author of a prologue of a moving picture feature was witnessed at the Russell theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, at the close of the final presentation of "Pollyanna," starring Mary Pickford, on Saturday evening, April 10. The theatre was packed to the roof and the evening's show had been received with considerable enthusiasm. The climax in this respect came when the audience made repeated demands for the appearance on the stage of Will McLaughlin, Photoplay Editor of the Ottawa Journal, who had written the exceptionally clever and interesting prologue for the picture. Mr. McLaughlin eventually responded to the insistent calls by stepping out from the wings to address the gathering briefly.

Mr. McLaughlin's prologue, which was entitled "Pollyanna at the Court of Happiness," bore an important relation to the success of the engagement at the Russell during Easter Week. Many local dancers, who had been trained by Prof. Sinclair, a dancing tutor of Ottawa, participated in the sketch which was used as an introduction to the film feature. The prologue consisted of three appropriate scenes, the theme of which was a dream by a "Pollyanna" in human form in the person of an Ottawa young lady. The tiny tots who took part in the dance of the fairies were particularly effective in arousing the admiration of the crowds.

In addition to the fine prologue, the character and magnitude of which had never been seen in the Canadian capital before, the newspaper advertising for the presentation was highly creditable.

Prologues of this kind always have been and always will be a credit to the theatre producing them, and are also a stimulant to the minds of an audience and an attraction which is constantly looked for.

A little stunt in connection with the "Pollyanna" engagement was the use of a small pony and cart to parade the downtown streets, with appropriate banners.

De Mille Features Presented at Criterion Theatre

"WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE?" at the Criterion theatre for an indefinite engagement is being proceeded by a specially written prologue which adds to the entertainment of the feature.

Following the screening of the scenic the drapes are drawn for a moment to be again parted when Helen Shipman and four dancers attired in short skirt gowns present a singing and dancing act extolling the virtues of the feature to be shown and reciting some lines concerning the moral it is supposed to convey. A tuneful song under the title of "Why Change Your Wife?" is sung by Miss Shipman and company. At the finish of the picture the company again appears on the stage with more of the song which admonishes the audience not to change wives under penalty of having an experience similar to that of the characters of the picture. The singers then leave the stage and repeat the song from the aisles of the theatre standing under spot lights in the orchestra pit.

The Criterion stage has been improved for picture purposes by the installation of a pretty screen border well up center. Right and left stage is screened by drapes. The orchestra is invisible as is also the organist. For the screening of the short reels shown first, a piano is used, this being placed in view of the audience down stage right.

This is another illustration of the successful way Hugo Reisenfeld has of featuring his programs.

Give Prizes to Locate Non-Attendants

Charles Krebs, whose Cherokee theatre is one of the live ones in the suburbs of Louisville, Ky., is going after business.

Krebs has started a daring, little stunt that any neighborhood theatre man may follow. He is delving his patrons to locate ten persons in his community who have never been in the Cherokee theatre. He offers ticket prizes for the ten names. Result: The children of the neighborhood are galloping from house to house, with pad and pencil, trying to get those ten persons who never were in the Cherokee.

"Have you been to the Cherokee?" is the slogan in Krebs' neighborhood.

Not a bad business-building slogan, is it?

And when Krebs gets the names of those who have not been in his theatre what a great mailing list it will make! He can make a special drive to get those "back-numbers" and make fans of them.

Sellman Recognizes His Opportunity

Manager Sellman of the Strand theatre, Waterbury, Conn., grasped his opportunity to give the "Daredevil Jack" serial a good send off when he presented on the bill showing the first episode a local aspirant to boxing honors, Buddy Faulkes with a sparring partner in a boxing bout. The combined attraction of the world champion in pictures and the fistic encounter was a winning stroke, "Daredevil Jack" was introduced to an unusually large percentage of Waterbury theatregoers and that is the main thing to be considered in starting a serial. Get 'em in on the first episode.

How Libson Killed the Holy Week Jinx

"Everywoman" and An Exploitation Campaign Win for Cincinnati Manager

"EVERYWOMAN" was the picture Manager Libson of the Strand theatre, Cincinnati chose to buck the "Holy Week" jinx, and exploitation was the aid he gave the production to overcome the handicap of the worst show week in the year. The Strand campaign was begun several weeks in advance of the showing and was centralized in the newspapers.

Among the newspaper stunts used were: Three weeks in advance a search was started for "original movie fans"—those who saw "Miss Jerry" on the screen twenty-five years ago. A number of the "first fans" were found and were given a party at the Strand. This stunt resulted in a dozen stories covering several weeks. The idea was tied up with "Everywoman" by explaining that the "original fans" were to be shown this most lavish, up-to-the-minute photoplay in contrast with "Miss Jerry," a reproduction of which is in the Paramount Magazine released February 15. One of the original fans wrote a letter, lauding "Everywoman."

The Commercial-Tribune put on a stunt in which five questions were asked regarding several members of the "Everywoman" cast. Prizes were awarded to the best set of answers. This attracted attention and got space. The Commercial-Tribune also ran a quarter page feature, illustrated, entitled "What Becomes of the Gowns Worn Only Once in Moving Pictures." The supposed fate of "Everywoman" gowns was revealed.

The Cincinnati Post put on the most elaborate feature, which brought first page publicity for three days and two columns space inside for a week. It was a simple classified ad page stunt—one of the best read pages in any metropolitan newspaper. Tickets to "Everywoman" were offered for women of Cincinnati who sent in letters telling what the Post want ads had done for them. The stunt gave the newspaper many good testimonials for classified ads and much publicity for "Everywoman."

The newspaper advertising campaign was made distinctive with hand-drawn ads and the space was about twice that used on the usual attractions at the Strand.

Window displays were secured in several of the Dow Drug Stores chain, in the finest locations in Cincinnati. The toilet accessory idea was carried out in these windows with beautiful photo-illuminated cards by Display Manager Fleshman of the Dow Company. Florist windows were tied-up with cut-outs showing Everywoman looking into a vase of flowers and with stills showing the Garden of Contentment. The drug store used newspaper space with a scene cut from "Everywoman" to tie up the toilet requisite idea.

Brand New Exploitatoin For Small Towns

A brand new method of exploitation for towns under 4,000 population and guaranteed by Lieutenant A. R. Thomas, owner and manager of the Argone theatre, Colton, Calif., recently put over a special feature attraction with the greatest success and least cost in the history of the theatre.

This new form of promotion as used by Lieutenant Thomas had its beginning during the presentation of "Auction of Souls," starring Aurora Mardiganian.

The exhibitor explained his campaign in the following manner: "I realized that the best way to start current discussion is to just whisper something in the form of a secret. Following this procedure I apparently 'tipped' off some of the local folks about the unusual scenes to be shown in 'Auction of Souls' and cautioned them not to miss seeing women sold for eighty-five cents.

"In turn those people whom I told about the production told others until, the first thing we knew, the town was talking about it. I whispered the information that America interfered in this war in time to assist in securing civilization from just such atrocities as are shown in the picture. This was big news to lots of the townsfolk and it spread rapidly. I also whispered the fact that one of the girls who passed through the horrors of that terrible Armenian catastrophe was shown in the picture and that the story would tell my friends about town how gilrs were treated before they were made slaves and also how they were treated after they got into the hands of the Turks.

"There are a little less than 4,000 people in Colton and if I had blazed away at billboards and painted up the streets and sidewalks I couldn't have got better results or aroused any more interest. It seemed that the majority of the people thought they were taking advantage of a confidential tip in seeing the picture."

Although Mr. Thomas maintains that his "whispering" stunt was largely responsible for the remarkable box office success he attained with "Auction of Souls," there is little doubt that his unstinted billboard and newspaper exploitation aided in the final result. Unusual care in the arranging of his display matter and the featuring of interesting details was plainly evidenced.

"Lohengrin" Being Sung at Capitol

THE Capitol theatre grand opera company is giving Wagner's famous romantic drama "Lohengrin" a splendid production this week with some exceptional voices singing the leading roles.

The costuming and scenic investure is perhaps the most elaborate of any given the bills presented under the opera policy at the Capitol. John Wenger's stage setting is a marvel of beautifully blended colors, which combined with the wealth of colorful costumes makes the offering a truly inspiring spectacle.

The music of this opera is probably as well known as that of any of the classics and for this reason if for no other, "Lohengrin" is being royally received by Capitol audiences.

The role of "Lohengrin" is being sung by Karl Jorn with Wilfred Glenn as "King," William Beck as "Telramund," and Irene Williams and Gladys Martell as "Elsa."

New Idea in Inexpensive Exploitation

AN instance of the clever showmanship that distinguishes the exploitation efforts of Harry J. Troxell, Jr., manager of the Photo Play theatre, Gettysburg, Pa., is afforded by one of his recent campaigns which with almost little or no extra expense stirred up an unprecedented amount of local comment.

At the same time Mr. Troxell's idea offers to exhibitors a new idea in inexpensive exploitation. The main idea he brought out is that it is a good idea for exhibitors to watch the cast names of the person appearing in the various screen dramas they present.

To illustrate, in Gettysburg there lives a man named Hon. John Keith, prominent for his integrity and civic interest and well known through his prominent connection with the Adams County bar. Mr Keith has a multitude of friends in Gettysburg.

"Free Ticket" Advertising Idea

Fred W. Postle, manager of the Victoria theatre, Columbus, Ohio, is the originator of the following bit of advertising, used in his case for "Eve in Exile," but as good for any other attraction.

A neat blue ticket which at first glance purported to be a free ticket but which wasn't extolled the merits of the film in the following manner:

"This is not a FREE TICKET, but you will be willing to ADMIT ONE thing about 'Eve in Exile,' that it is the best acted, most fascinating, dramatic and artistic picture you've seen this year."

Style Show Staged by Huntington House

C. E. Tipton, Manager of the Orpheum, Ties Up With Dealer in Woman's Apparel

HUNTINGTON, WEST VA., probably never saw an exploitation campaign for pictures which equalled that which Manager C. E. Tipton of the Orpheum put over for "Male and Female" and which brought the theatre record-breaking business.

The most spectacular feature of his exploitation was the staging of a style show in co-operation with the Zenner-Bradshaw Co., leading dealers in women's apparel. The store had its spring style exhibit, using live models. For the show the Zenner-Bradshaw company arranged a stage setting of wonderful beauty and effect. More than $500 was spent on this feature alone; everything on the stage being real—draperies, rugs, flowers, etc. Six models were used and each day the gowns worn were changed, causing many to return again and again to the theatre. Each day the Zenner-Bradshaw company used nearly half a page ad to announce the styles to be exhibited at the Orpheum. At the store entrance a large booth of attractive design and with a mechanical electrical device attracted attention and tied up with the theatre presentation. In the store windows—mammoth windows—oil paintings and cards announced the Orpheum "Male and Female Style Show." Across the street, in front of the theatre, Manager Tipton rigged up in cut-out letters "Male and Female Style Show," stretching across the thoroughfare and visible for miles in each direction. The style show was given at the theatre in conjunction with "Male and Female" three times a day. The women came to see the gowns; the men came to see the models; both came to see "Male and Female."

The style was only the climax of the campaign. Leading up to it was a drive that puts Mr. Tipton in the forefront of showmen. He started off with an immense amount of lithographs and window cards. He augmented the latter with especially hand-painted cards, embellished with "stills." These gained entree into windows otherwise closed to exploitation material.

The newspaper campaign reached its biggest smash with the Male and Female Section in the Sunday edition of the Herald-Dispatch. Twelve pages comprised the section and even then the publicity matter and tieup ads ran over into another section. More than 20 advertisers hooked up with "Male and Female." Interesting publicity stories filled in the section where the ads didn't crowd them out. A "missing word" contest was run through all the ads in the section, compelling the reader-interest for the entire section.

Prior to the Sunday splash, the Herald-Dispatch ran a series of six illustrated stories on "A Day With Gloria Swanson," attracting keen interest.

Mr. Tipton used the traction card to carry his message to other towns and also used space in the local papers of those places.

"The Great Reward" Is New Burston Serial

The original working title of Frances Lords newest serial, "The Great Reward," is to be retained as the permanent title of the production after all. This chapter-picture, just completed by Louis Burston, is fifteen episodes in length. Hopeful that a sprightlier name than the production's working title might be conceived, Burston some weeks since offered honors and other compensation to anyone who might submit an acceptable name for the serial. The competition that Burston started via the trade periodicals brought him quantities of mail, but despite "amazingly wide variety of suggestions," not one of the many thousands of names sent in elicited the majority favor of the committee elected to pass upon the submissions. The story has to do principally with a young adventurer who boldly steps into the shoes of an errant monarch, with the result that he is received joyously by the populace of the king he resembles.

Charles H. Hoyt Farces Praised by Comedian

Otis Harlan, the noted comedian who first became famous as star of the Charles H. Hoyt farce comedies, which were recently purchased by the Charles Ray Productions, Inc., paid a visit to the Ray studios in Los Angeles this week to congratulate the First National star on the acquisition of a wealth of unusual screen material in the Hoyt plays. Mr. Harlan first appeared in a Hoyt comedy at the age of seventeen, and during his career acted in eleven of these stage pieces.

Polar Film in First Runs

Large Houses Book "Bottom of the World," South Pole Picture

IN the engagement of the film for appearances on Boadway, and in the largest first run houses of the country, Robertson-Cole believes it has received an endorsement of "The Bottom of the World,' the Sir Ernest Shackleton South Polar expedition picture, which is unsurpassed. All indications point to this official record of the last great South Polar dash being capitalized by exhibitors of the most discriminating class as no similar picture has been taken advantage of in years.

Perhaps the most significant booking in the country is that by Hugo Riesenfeld, the managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres both on Broadway, New York. San Francisco will see "The Bottom of the World" first run, in the California theatre, one of the most important houses on the Coast. The Stanley theatre, one of the leading houses in Philadelphia, has also booked it. In Detroit the picture is to be shown at the Madison theatre, Michigan's finest house, and a center which holds to the best ideals of pictures in the Middle West. Ohio's great theatre, the Euclid, of Cleveland, will show the Shackleton picture first run, and in Minneapolis it has invaded the Auditorium, which is owned and operated by a competing company.

Sennett Comedy Scoring

United Artists Tell of Good Reports on "Down on the Farm"

EXHIBITORS from all over the country have been sending good reports to United Artists telling of the success of the new Mack Sennet five-reel comedy, "Down on the Farm," according to an announcement of the distributors.

"The picture has proven nothing less than a comedy sensation," says United Artists. "With its preshowings in nearly a dozen communities and its general release in over fifty cities during the past week, the praises that have been bestowed upon this production are unprecedented in comedy circles, for exhibitors, critics, reviewers and public alike, record it as the most attractively interesting and hilariously funny five-reeler that has ever come from the studios of Mack Sennett, who has won for himself the enviable reputation of "the comedy king."

Mr. Abrams' messages have come from every section of the country, from exhibitors, writers, individuals and prominent film people; all agreeing it is said, that it is Mack Sennett's most pretentious, speedy and genuinely funny picture that has ever been screened, and one that lends itself wonderfully to exploitation of a distinctive type.

Drew Comics Moved to Chicago Studios

John Cumberland, starring in Sidney Drew's two reel comedy series has been having such success in his stage offering, "The Girl in the Limousine," that he has been unable to leave the show to devote himself exclusively to picture work. Because of this, Mrs. Drew has been compelled to move her production activities from New York to Chicago, where for a month Cumberland will appear in his stage attraction.

Mrs. Drew took over part of the Essanay Studio, and left New York on Saturday, April 24th to resume work on her "After Thirty" series, written by Julian Street. Part of the technical crew which aided in the three previous productions accompanied Mrs. Drew to Chicago. So did Eleanor Custis, who has been playing opposite Mr. Cumberland.

"Tillie" Draws Crowd at Broadway Theatre

A significant precedent in showmanship was established at the Broadway theatre, New York, last week with "Tillie's Punctured Romance." Featured on the bill at the Broadway theatre were two other attractions in addition to "Tillie's Punctured Romance." This comedy, however, was given no special prominence or display at the beginning.

The opening that week brought a record crowd the first day, with nine out of every ten people, it is said, inquiring as they purchased their tickets when "Tillie's Punctured Romance" would be on the screen.

Bessie Hayakawa and Rhea Mitchell in Robertson-Cole's dramatic feature, "The Devil's Claim No. 14"

Two Big Features Are Ready For Release

Robertson-Cole announces Sessue Hayakawa's starring vehicle to be "The Devil's Claim." It is described as a story of love, mystery and adventure, in which an American society girl sets her wits against those of a Hindu novelist, played by Hayakawa. The story opens in New York and later extends to the East and Paris. Hayakawa and the two leading women, Rhea Mitchell and Colleen Moore, play dual roles.

"The Notorious Mrs. Sands," starring Bessie Barriscale, is a drama of high society in which the star is said to have made the best of her opportunities to display attractive gowns, sixteen in all, and demonstrate her talent for emotional acting. Lavish settings, including a gorgeous ballroom scene, are also stated to be a feature of the production. The release dates of these two pictures will be announced shortly, says Robertson-Cole.

Peters Heads Far East Film Expedition

Consummating five years of detailed preparation, a photographic exploring expedition will leave New York early next month for a four years' sojourn in the remote regions of Asia and the South Sea Islands. The party will be headed by T. Kimmwood Peters, far Eastern traveller and photographic expert, who has only recently been released from scientific work for the Government aircraft production.

Leaving New York early in May, the first stopping point of the expedition will be at Honolulu. A tour of the Hawaiian Islands will be made and detailed scenes of the life of the Islanders will be taken. The industrial life of our Pacific Island territory should well repay its portrayal, and the Kamaka cowboys, fishermen and sugar growers will be filmed.

Japan, China, Korea, Java, the Philippines, New Zealand, Australia, India, Arabia, Persia, Egypt, Abyssinia and the Holy Land are among the other countries to be visited.

Betty Blythe Cast for First National Role

Farrar Vehicle Announced

Associated Exhibitors to Present "The Riddle: Woman"; Jose Directs

GERALDINE FARRAR'S initial production for Associated Exhibitors, Inc., will be "The Riddle: Woman," adapted from the highly successful stage play in which Mme Bertha Kalich starred. The picture will be directed by Edward Jose and will be given such production as to make it, from every angle, one of the biggest box-office pictures of the year, says the Associated's statement.

"The Riddle: Woman," was purchased from the Shubert theatrical interests. The play was written by C. M. Jacoby and polished by Charlotte Wells and Dorothy Donnelly. It ran for more than nine months on Broadway, seven months in Chicago and five months in Boston. Since its New York premiere a little more than two years ago, "The Riddle: Woman" road companies have been traveling the country constantly.

"The Riddle: Woman" is a present-day drama of realism and absorbing power, and the leading role is such as to allow Geraldine Farrar full scope to blend her beauty and dramatic abilities with it to such a degree as to make the picture play a vast improvement over the spoken piece.

Concerning the forthcoming production, the following statement has been issued: "The heroine is tigerish, tantalizing, impassioned and calculatingly cool by turns. Fire turns to ice and frigidity to flames in the psychological make-up of the woman who is the pivotal figure in a tragic complexity of emotions. The story has frankness, speed and a flaming run of passion, seasoned with a love interest and ultimate justification that make it the nucleus of a truly big attraction.

"'The Riddle: Woman' is a play that will appeal particularly to women. It is a modern story with a society setting. The subject matter and title are rife with exploitation possibilities. This fact, coupled with the further fact that the picture will be produced as well as it is possible for human endeavor to produce a picture with everything necessary at command, promises that 'The Riddle: Woman' in picture form will be one of the biggest pictures of the season."

Selig Serial Selling Fast

"Vanishing Trails" Arouses Interest; Several States Already Sold

HARDLY had the advertising campaign been started on "Vanishing Trails," the Colonel Wm. N. Selig serial featuring Franklyn Farnum and Mary Anderson, when the Canyon Pictures Corporation, which is state righting this production, started receiving a great number of inquiries in the form of wires and long distance calls.

J. M. Goldstein, treasurer of Canyon, is handling the sales from the New York office, while Jack Weinberg, president of the concern will visit many state right buyers enroute while making a trip to the coast.

Mr. Goldstein has already sold several important territories to some prominent buyers, names of which he is at present withholding, and he has also entered into negotiations for other territories. He confidently expects to have the entire country sold within the next thirty days. The foreign rights are controlled by Donald Campbell.

A definite release date has not been set for the serial, and will be decided upon when Mr. Weinberg returns from the coast, where he is conferring with Col. Selig for future productions featuring Franklyn Farnum.

In addition to the serial, Mr. Goldstein plans to make an announcement very shortly on several other well known features which he expects to issue shortly on the open market.

"The Third Eye" was produced at the Astra studios and co-stars Warner Oland and Eileen Percy in a mystery story written by H. H. Van Loan. James W. Horne, who directed Ruth Roland in "Hands Up," is credited with the direction of "The Third Eye."

This is the first serial by H. H. Van Loan, whose numerous screen plays produced of late have brought him forward suddenly as one of the most prominent and successful contemporary scenarioists.

"Deep Purple" to Have New York Premiere

"The Deep Purple," adapted from Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner's notable stage success, prepared and directed for Mayflower by R. A. Walsh and distributed by Realart, will have its premiere screen presentation at the Capital Theatre, New York City on May 2nd. According to the Mayflower announcement, the thrilling scenes in the gilt-edged and underworld life of New York, which enabled the play to hold the stage in one metropolitan theatre for more than a year are produced on a scale for the screen that is out of reach of possible stage presentation.

Albert Cowles Holds to the Practical

Albert Cowles, director of the Law of the Yukon," is spoken of as a practical sort of person. His studio uniform would lend support to the opinion, for Mr. Cowles's working rig consists of olive drab jeans, overall and shirt snappily surmounted by a khaki-tinted celluloid collar. Mr. Cowles again shows his practical streak in the conviction that a director should at all times conduct his work with a twofold purpose in view—to impart the spirit of the author to the picture and at the same time to see and guide the production in "the critical spirit of the audience." Not only the story, but its presentation, mode of titling, and similar details are scrutinized by Mr. Cowles.

New York crowds were attracted by window displays in local stores of Georges Carpentier, who is now at work on a feature film sponsored by Robertson-Cole

Carpentier Exploitation Scores

Painting of Carpentier Attracts in Shop Windows

THE eagerness with which New York merchants seized upon the opportunity to exhibit in their windows handsome oil paintings of Georges Carpentier, "the Idol of France," now making his American society drama in the Solax Studio, Fort Lee, N. J., for release by Robertson-Cole, has a message of deepest importance to every exhibitor in the country, states the producers. It is an index of the tremendous interest there is in this fine-looking gentlemanly athlete.

Backing up the avidity with which these New York business men grasped the opportunity to show in their windows the picture of a man they knew would draw great crowds, was the unmistakable conduct of the people attracted by the pictures. In several instances police had actually to give attention to crowds before the windows to make sure that traffic was not impeded. This in particular occurred in Nassau street, that narrow canyon-like slit through which enormous crowds pour daily into the financial district.

Robertson-Cole, in conducting this publicity campaign, did it as much as an experiment in feeling the public pulse as to show off the pictures of Carpentier. For the public press has given the young man in the past month many columns of space. The company desired, therefore, to find out how the man who is dependent upon the public—in this instance the merchant—felt about Carpentier as an attraction, and how the actual man on the street felt.

Not more than three or four places were approached on the idea of placing the paintings in windows when it became evident that hundreds of the paintings could be placed, if it were advisable. Robertson-Cole, however, did not wish in any wise to cheapen the stunt, and so selected only the cream of the locations, in the best of stores. After placing one in the United Cigar Store, at Twenty-third street, overlooking the famous Madison Square, the main Spalding store, at 523 Fifth avenue, was supplied.

While remembering famous streets, Broadway was not forgotten. In the windows of Davega, an exclusive men's haberdasher, which is in the very heart of the great wholesale and clothing district, was located one of the paintings. A little farther up Broadway, in the center of the gigantic department store district which skirts Herald Square, the Gimbel Stores, one of the greatest organizations of its kind in the world, welcomed another of the pictures.

The companies which handle gunnery were not overlooked, and far down Broadway, at No. 314, in the district around Worth and Warren streets, the Folsom Arms Company received another picture. Below it, at Broadway and Fulton street, in the upper part of the financial district, among banks and bonding houses, the L. E. Waterman Fountain Pen Company gave window space to a picture.

One more store, further south still, the Spalding store at 126 Nassau street, close to the heart of the world's financial center, at Broad and Wall streets, opened its doors for one of the big pictures, and business New York was covered.

These paintings are to be sent by Robertson-Cole into every one of its twenty-five exchanges, and will soon be placed in the windows of leading merchants in all the more important windows. There promises to be a lively contest for them, as provincial America is likely to make an even greater show of enthusiasm than the remarkable demonstration of the metropolis. Robertson-Cole tried out many artists in New York City to obtain the best possible oil paintings, reproductions of the lighting poses of Carpentier, made since his arrival in this country, and showing him as he will appear in his American society drama.

Martha Mansfield in Leading Part

Wilfred North, a representative figure in directorial circles, has been engaged by the American Cinema Corporation to direct a new production for them, work to be started Monday of next week. An original script by N. Brewster Morse is the vehicle, a story founded on the timely and vital theme of the control of mind over matter.

"One of the Greatest" Says Jesse Lasky

"One of the greatest photoplays I have ever seen," is the comment of Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Famous Players Lasky Corporation, on the second special production which George Fitzmaurice has made for Paramount Artcraft. Mr. Lasky has given "The Right to Love" as the title of the picture, which he predicts will be even a greater success than the first George Fitzmaurice production, "On With the Dance."

"I firmly believe," said Mr. Lasky this week, after having seen "The Right to Love" at a private screening, "that, in the picture, Mr. Fitzmaurice has taken the motion picture art a long step forward. I have seldom seen a photoplay which combines so excellently all the elements that go into the artistic production."

Victor Seastrom Seen At Broadway Theatre

The Radiosould Film, Ind., have come forward with the determination to make Victor Seastrom the "prince of the screen" in America, as he is in Europe. And the unusual warm reception accorded to Seastrom by the critics of the trade press, which recognized him not only as a great actor but as a great director as well, is, Radiosould believes, a good start in the battle.

"A Man There Was," starring Seastrom, is now playing at the B. S. Moss Broadway theatre, New York, together with Mack Sennett's comedy, "Down on the Farm." This play by Henrik Ibsen is said to be one that can be enjoyed by those who are somewhat contemptuously known as "high-brows" as well as the average movie fan.

George Fitzmaurice on His Third Special

George Fitzmaurice, who recently completed a special production, as yet unnamed, has taken an entire company to Florida to take exteriors for his third special for Paramount-Artcraft. The title of this is "Idols of Clay," an original story of Onida Bergere. Mae Murray and David Powell will be the principal players in "Idols of Clay."

First National Plans Los Angeles House

As the outcome of conferences between Sol Lesser, owner of the First National franchise for Los Angeles, and J. D. Williams, manager of First National Exhibitors Circuit, a new theatre is to be built in Los Angeles by First National. The building expense, estimated approximately at $3,000,000 will be borne by First National. The outstanding feature of all First National houses, throughout the country will be incorporated in the new structure, it is stated. The theatre will be used as a non-competing house; it will stage the premier showings of the First National attractions. The location, which has not been announced definitely as yet, will be in the downtown district. The new picture palace, say officials of First National, will represent a beautiful tribute to Los Angeles on the part of the franchise holders of First National, who are scattered throughout every section of the country.

Ince Special Will Be F. P.-Lasky Release

"Homespun Folks," the new Thomas H. Ince super-special presenting Lloyd Hughes, a recent Ince discovery, as the leading masculine player of an all-star cast, will be distributed by Famous-Players Lasky Corporation through Paramount-Artcraft exchanges, it was announced this week by Thomas H. Ince.

"Homespun Folks" is an original story from the pen of the Thomas H. Ince staff author, Julien Josephson.

Bosworth Writes Own Story for Screen

"Bucko MacAllister," a vivid and colorful tale of the South Sea Islands from the pens of Hobart Bosworth and Charman K. London, is now being unrolled before the camera on an island one hundred miles out in the Pacific Ocean. According to J. Parker Read, who is producing the picture, no expense will be spared to make this an elaborate production.

Shipman Has Option on Ralph Connor's Stories

Ernest Shipman announced recently that he had secured an option on the well-known stories of Ralph Connor, the majority of which deal with woodland romance. Among stories now being considered are "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," by Mr. Connor, and "The Forge in the Forest," by Charles G. D. Roberts.

The consideration and perfecting of plans for future activities of Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., will probably occupy Mr. Shipman's attention for the next five weeks. A considerable portion of this time will be spent in Canada.

Small Town Exhibitor Books Big Features

Once in a while the small town exhibitor, commonly referred to in a general way as the 'backbone of the industry," comes in for his proper share of glory, as in the case of H. E. Rodell, owner of the Crystal Theatre in Mitchell, Neb., who gets credit as the pacemaker in Realart's end-of-season campaign.

Mr. Rodell, through Realart's Denver manager, booked "Soldiers of Fortune" and "The Luck of the Irish" and other Realart features. Mitchell is a town of 840 people, and this is considered to be proportionately the biggest deal ever put through by Realart.

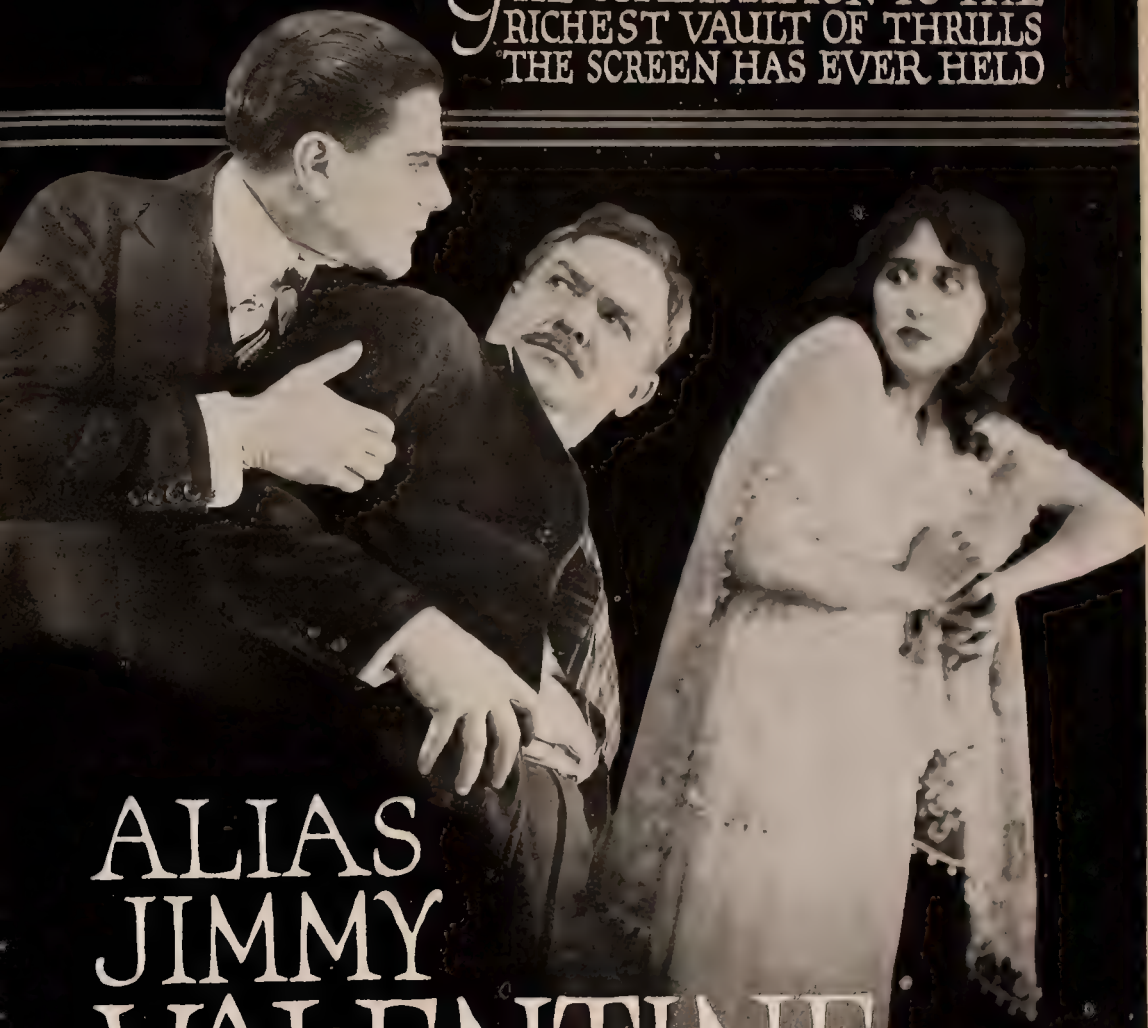
Rothacker Site May Be Made into City Park

Construction on the Rothacker Coast laboratory in Hollywood has been held up until the city council decides whether it wants to make a park out of the site Mr. Rothacker has purchased on Sunset Boulevard. Mr. Addons, treasurer of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, leaves for Los Angeles next week to let contracts for the laboratory construction. The contracts will be let immediately, and if the city council takes the boulevard site for a park the laboratory will be erected on another site which is under option.

Serials Said to Be in the Ascendant

The announcement that just as William Duncan is preparing to stage the twelfth episode of "The Silent Avenger," Vitagraph has booked two-thousand-four-hundred contracts with theatres that never before booked a William Duncan serial, and hundreds that never ran a serial of any kind, is regarded as significant. The indications are that the total number of theatre contracts signed for "The Silent Avenger" within the next thirty days will exceed six-thousand, declares Vitagraph.

The change of sentiment on the part of so many exhibitors formerly opposed or indifferent to the serial will have a big effect on the motion-picture going public, it is believed. "Smashing Barriers," Duncan's previous serial, did its part in the elevation of this type of film entertainment, as at one time it was showing in over five thousand theatres in the United States and Canada.



"Flying A" Breaks Own Business Record

"American Film broke the big business record the first week of the S. S. Hutchinson Tribute Month—did more business than ever before in the history of the company, and the second week we did more than the first so there's no question but we'll go over big," said C. A. Stimson, general sales manager. "There's no reason why we shouldn't put it over in good shape. There isn't anything on the screen today that has a wider appeal than "The Honey Bee," "The Story of a Woman in Revolt," as told by Samuel Merwin; "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver" is without question one of the best stories ever put on the screen. "Slam Bang Jim" is selling to the best houses all over the country for extended runs. "The Dangerous Talent" received the highest praise from the critics and pleases everywhere; "Eve in Exile" and "The Hellion"—two strong dramas of greater contrast could scarcely be imagined—have already proved their worth."

Good Support for Miss Young in Her Next

"Simple Souls" is Pathe's

Blanche Sweet Production Completed on West Coast

THE widespread comment caused by the appearance in the trade papers in the past few weeks of the teaser advertising on "Simple Souls" came to a denouement with the announcement that "Simple Souls" is the title of the latest Blanche Sweet production to be completed for release by Pathe. Production experts who have been permitted to see the film state that it is one of the finest productions of the West Coast studios and is undoubtedly the best of Blanche Sweet's career.

Supported in this opinion it has been determined by Pathe to back the production with an exceptional campaign of advertising and exploitation. Nothing will be spared to make clear the merits of the production to the end that the thousands of exhibitors who have been steadily building a Blanche Sweet clientele in their houses may clearly realize on this latest superb picture.

The story is from the novel by John Hastings Turner and tells the romance of Molly Shine, a show girl of lowly birth, and the Duke of Wyninghame. They were two simple souls, delighting in their youth and simplicity. Their ideals and dreams made them kindred spirits but their attachment could not be understood by his rich relatives or her poor folks and scandal brought its sting into their lives.

In the direction Richard Thornby again distinguished himself. He has scored in all of the Blanche Sweet pictures, "The Woman of Pleasure," "Fighting Cressy," and "The Deadlier Sex." In selecting a cast he showed excellent judgment in picking types and he strengthened the production with such excellent performers as Charles Meredith, Herbert Grimwood, Mayme Kelso, Herbert Standing, and Kate Lester.

The settings range from the modest home of a shopgirl to the palace and yacht of the Duke and throughout are many beautiful exterior scenes. London streets, a park, scenes in the country, an ocean trip on a yacht all give the picture that healthy atmosphere of the outdoors so urgently sought by the exhibitors who are endeavoring to meet the public demand today.

The work of Miss Sweet herself is said to be distinguished for the delicious sense of humor blended with emotional talent which she displays. She wins laughter with sympathy and never resorts to clowning for her effects. Her humor is shown in a keen expression of the really unusual situations in which she finds herself placed as the forgotten bride of an absent-minded Duke. She is forgotten by the Duke for a time but never for a moment is she overlooked by his relatives.

In announcing the latest Blanche Sweet production the Pathe Exchange, Inc., calls attention to the remarkable success of the star in her last pictures, "The Woman of Pleasure" and "Fighting Cressy" are strong features in every part of the country and have not begun to show up in the least in bookings in any part of the country. They are two great outdoor pictures with a wealth of action

"Master-Key" Near Ready

Earle Williams Puts Finishing Touches on Vitagraph Picture

EARLE WILLIAMS is just putting the finishing touches, out on the coast, to his newest Vitagraph production which has been named "A Master Stroke." The working title of this picture was "The Three Keys," this having been the title of Frederick Van Rensselaer Dey's well known novel from which the picture was adapted by H. Thompson Rich and Lucien Hubbard. The direction of the picture has been in charge of Chester Bennett.

"A Master Stroke" is announced as a clever comedy drama of wits, women and Wall Street. That Williams can handle the comedy touches deftly has been proved it is said, by his work in Winchell Smith's comedy, "The Fortune Hunter," in which he portrayed the John Barrymore role, and big things are expected of him in the role of Yale Durant in "A Master Stroke." A little idea of the original touches may be formed from the knowledge that the "Safe and money" action runs in a more picturesque vein than given a novel twist. The action centers not at all about taking money from a safe, but on getting the money back into the safe after it has been taken.

Viola Vale appears as Mr. Williams' leading woman, and other prominent members of the cast are H. A. Barrows, Ethel Shannon, John Elliott and Frank Crayne.

The exteriors of the production were taken at Santa Barbara, California, where several beautiful estates and the noted country club were used.

"The Idol Dancer" was so successful that Mr. Griffith had arranged for a special scenario to be written for Miss Seymour

Anita Stewart Picture Gets Under Way

Anita Stewart's new picture, "Harriet and the Piper," went into production recently at the Louis B. Mayer studio with Bertram Bracken at the directorial post. The story, by Kathleen Norris, originally appeared as a serial in the Pictorial Review. The screen version was arranged by Monte M Katterjohn.

Among the cast supporting Miss Stewart are: Ward Crane, Irving Cummings, Charles Richman, Margaret Landis, Barbara La Marr Deely and Byron Munson. Rene Guissart is in charge of the photography and effects. The picture is being made as a Louis B. Mayer-First National attraction.

Pioneer Appoints New General Manager

Last week the Pioneer general staff appointed C. A. (Buck) Taylor general manager of the Buffalo district, who took up his duties immediately. Mr Murphy still remains in charge as office manager under the direction of Mr. Taylor, who was formerly connected with Pathe exchange.

To Continue Serial Policy

Pathe Will Release Two Serials at a Time as Decided Last Fall

PAUL Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announced this week that the policy of two serials at a time, inaugurated last fall, when the "Bound and Gagged" serial and "The Black Secret" were released at practically the same date, has been successfully established and that the plans for the balance of this year and 1921 with regard to serials were to be drawn on the "two at a time" basis.

It is stated that the success of "Trailed by Three," released early in April, in obtaining bookings in practically every house that ran "The Adventures of Ruth," has been accepted by Pathe as final and conclusive evidence that the scheme introduced October last has now been established, and that there is an active demand for serials great enough to warrant the continuance of a schedule offering exhibitors two serial episodes per week.

Reports of increased demand for serial plays during the latter half of last year and in 1920 have been insistent, and the announcement from Pathe takes on added significance as proof that these reports were based on facts.

The records of Pathe's serial department show that "The Adventures of Ruth" was contracted for by nearly every theatre that ran "Bound and Gagged," and made considerable gains over its predecessor on the release chart. In turn "Trailed by Three," has succeeded to the screens on which "The Adventures of Ruth" were projected with few exceptions, and has added a number of new theatres to the list of users of Pathe serials.

The "Trailed by Three" picture is understood to be reaping some of the benefits of the increased field for serials built up by the Pathe organization since the inauguration of the present schedule.

June Mathis Speedy Writer

Completes Four Scenarios in Four Months; Has Written Many Successes

WHEN June Mathis, head of the scenario department of Metro Pictures Corporation, finished her adaptation of the spectacular Drury Lane melodrama, "Hearts Are Trumps," by Cecil Raleigh, which will be picturized for release by Loew Metro with an all-star cast, Miss Mathis signalized the completion of her fourth continuity in something like four months This accomplishment furnished fresh evidence of the rapidity with which this scenarist is able, when the necessity demands, to turn out finished work in a minimum of time.

Miss Mathis scenarioized "The Right of Way," from Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, for Bert Lytell, as the first of the quartet. She followed that with "The Saphead," done from "The New Henrietta," by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes, and "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," from the stage comedy by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan, the latter in collaboration with A. P. Younger. Miss Mathis is an exceptionally facile worker, and although she frequently re-writes her scripts entirely, has been known to complete one in two weeks, it is stated.

When Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the famous Spanish novelist, visited California several weeks ago, June Mathis was selected as the transposer to the screen of his world-famous novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." Metro has purchased the film rights to this, one of the most sensational books of the decade, and will make an all-star picturization of it in the East.

June Mathis has been regarded as the prop and mainstay of the Metro scenario department for more than four years, having been with the company almost from its very beginning. She has a formidable list of successes to her credit.

Bert Lytell Cast For Role of Outcast

"The Price of Redemption" will be the title of Bert Lytell's next Metro special production. This picture has hitherto been known as "The Temple of Dawn," the name of I. A. R. Wylie's novel from which the feature was adapted. The story is the narrative of a man who fights his way back through adversity to regeneration. The picture is said to be rich in the barbaric splendor of its East Indian settings.

Bert Lytell plays the part of an English outcast. The director is Dallas M. Fitzgerald. The cast, supporting Mr. Lytell, includes Seena Owen, as leading woman; Cleo Madison, Landers Stevens, Edward Secil, Arthur Morrison and Wilbur Higby.

"Original Photoplay to Come Into Its Own"

Marshall Neilan believes that producers are about to revert to the practice of looking to the original photoplay for picturization material. "When a few years ago some producers sought material among past stage successes and works of famcus authors, their lead was quickly followed by nearly all of the manufacturing companies," says Neilan, "with the result that competition became very keen between them for the procuring of well-known stories and plays adaptable to the screen. Now these sources have become almost depleted as the result of the heavy drain upon them for the last few years. The scanty supply of desirable books and stage plays available can be bought only at prices prchibitive to the average independent producer. The result," says Mr. Neilan, "is that the producer will have to select his material from the fund of original scripts.

David Kirkland Leaves For Europe May 15

David Kirkland, director for Constance Talmadge, will sail for Europe on May 15th. On that date he will have finished work upon "The Perfect Woman," which is the sixth of Miss Talmadge's First National Productions. Kirkland will take with him a compact "travelling camera," to secure pictures of European locales for reproduction in American studios.

"Bonds of Fate" Bought by Metro for Screen

"Bonds of Fate," a novel by John E. Wilkie, for sixteen years chief of the United States Secret Service, has been purchased by Metro for production on the screen. The acquisition of Chief Wilkie's tale of master criminals is in line with Metro's aim to buy appropriate subjects from the literary market in its quest for desirable material.

These festive females, one being Eileen Percy, members of Pathe's "The Third Eye" company seem to forget Warner Oland's (screen) reputation of being a villain

Chester Speeding Up On New Plant in West

Dispatches from Los Angeles this week announced the practical completion of the physical organization of C. L. Chester Productions, Inc., whose entire product will be released through Educational Films Corporation. Only the laboratory and permanent offices remain to be finished before the entire plant will be in operation.

Mr. Chester is in personal charge of all the activities on the Coast, having offices for the present at 6372 Hollywood Boulevard. Until the new Chester laboratory is completed, the cutting and projection room will be located in the William Horsley Laboratories at 6060 Sunset Boulevard.

The Chester studios, where the comedies are being produced, are located near Lincoln Park, not far from the Selig Zoo. William S. Campbell is in charge of activities. Adjoining the studios is the Chester Zoo, which affords unusual facilities for the production of animal scenes. Animals figure as prominently in the second of the Chester comedies, now nearing completion, as they did in "Four Times Foiled," the initial production, which recently had its pre-release showings in New York.

Simplex Notes

IN keeping with the progressive policy that has characterized the Precision Machine Company since its inception, a newly organized division is now part of this popular projector-building plant known as the non-theatrical division.

Mr. E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company has for some time been preparing an analysis of the groups included in the fields outside of the theatrical one, and so promising does the future for Simplex installations in churches, schools, industrial plants and other public buildings look, that it was decided to create a separate division for the cultivation of this productive future marketing place for Simplex.

Mr. Leon L. Horstman has been placed in charge of the Simplex Non-Theatrical Division.

Mr. E. M. Porter expresses himself as being particularly pleased with this latest branch of the Simplex organization, the installation of which had been planned for the new year but was rather held back through other pressing manufacturing problems.

The Criterion theatre, Long Acre Square, New York, which has been devoted to legitimate drama since the Vitagraph Company last showed their productions upon its screen, has again succumbed to the popular call for more Broadway motion picture shows.

Under the direction of Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, two type "S" Simplex projectors were installed immediately following the close of the latest of the legitimate performances which were playing at this theatre until Wednesday. Mr. John Krulish of the Simplex factory, supervised the installation, which includes two 90 ampere rheostats and a 100 ampere spot-light.

Mayflower's Releasing Tie-Up

First National Will Handle All Future Productions

ALL rumors and reports concerning the distribution plans of Mayflower were definitely set at rest early this week by the announcement of Benjamin P. Prager, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, that a releasing contract had been signed with Associated First National Exhibitors whereby the bulk of Mayflower's future productions will be distributed through the First National organization.

In consummating these negotiations, the Associated First National Exhibitors were represented by Harry Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer, while President Prager and General Manager John W. McKay acted for Mayflower.

Under the terms of the contract, Associated First National will take over the distribution of the Allan Dwan features; all future R. A. Walsh productions and the picture now being completed in Los Angeles by Sidney A. Franklin. Of the Dwan series, the first subject, "A Splendid Hazard," from the Harold McGrath novel, has been completed and is now ready for release. When viewed by First National officials, great enthusiasm was expressed regarding this picture and it is predicted that it will be a splendid box-office attraction. The other Dwan pictures are "In the Heart of a Fool," based on William Allen White's book of that name, and "The Scoffer," from a magazine story by Val Cleveland. Both of these pictures will soon be available, and preparations are now being made by Dwan for another production, as yet unnamed, which he is scheduled to start shooting May 1st.

With the exception of "The Deep Purple," which is being handled by Realart, all of Walsh's product will go through First National in the future.

It is expected that Franklin will be finished shortly with "Athalie," his current production, which is an adaptation of the Robert W. Chambers' novel, and according to the tentative program, this will be the second Mayflower production to go through the First National channel.

For a considerable time the film industry has been much agog over the movements of Mayflower. Announcements regarding releasing affiliations have been expected for more than a month. At one time it was reported that Associated Exhibitors would handle Mayflower films, and of late there have been persistent rumors of a continued relationship with Realart. It is believed now that the latter report grew out of the fact that an arrangement was made with Realart for the handling of Miller's "Law of the Yukon" and Walsh's "The Deep Purple."

"In contracting with First National for the distribution of our pictures," said President Prager, "I believe the Mayflower company has put into effect an arrangement which will enable it to reach the photoplay public through the very best medium in the film industry. First National has demonstrated by results the practicability of its system."

It is recognized by the trade that the alignment of Mayflower with Associated First National Exhibitors brings together two potent factors in the fields of production and distribution. Mayflower, despite its youth, has achieved phenomenal growth. Its initial contribution, "The Miracle Man" proved a startling revelation of the financial and artistic forces behind this organization. Following "The Miracle Man" came "Soldiers of Fortune," "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," and "The Luck of the Irish," and it is expected that at least half a dozen new productions will be added to the Mayflower total before the end of the year.

"Riders of the Dawn" Ready

Picturization of Zane Grey Novel Awaits Exhibitors

ANOTHER challenging Benjamin B. Hampton-Elinge F. Warner production is ready for exhibitors following four previous pictures made under the Benj. B. Hampton imprint which were introduced to the industry by the W. W. Hodkinson organization last year. The noted publisher-producer's newest and probably greatest achievement is "Riders of the Dawn," from Zane Grey's world-known novel, "The Desert of Wheat."

"Riders of the Dawn," a worthy successor to Zane Grey's "Desert Gold," had the advantages of every attribute that made Benj B. Hampton's first Zane Grey picture one of the most talked about productions in years. All during the course of production, a matter of eight months, the producer had the detailed assistance of the author, and the value that a writer of Zane Grey's repute contributes to a screen version by taking an active part in the picturization of his novel, will be amply demonstrated to the world of Zane Grey readers by the remarkable power and beauty of "Riders of the Dawn."

Shipment of prints of the new production to all Hodkinson branches is now being made and during the forthcoming ten days "Riders of the Dawn" will be shown to exhibitors in all the first run cities of the country, particularly the scores of prominent showmen for whom "The Westerners," "Desert Gold" and "The Sagebrusher," the previous Benj. B. Hampton successes scored new house records during their sweep of America.

The success achieved by Benjamin B. Hampton, known as "the producer without a failure," in revealing the tremendous hold that finely made romantic melodrama has upon the affections of picture patrons. And Hodkinson executives are firm in the belief that "Riders of the Dawn" ranks nearer perfection than any production yet made by Mr. Hampton.

"Riders of the Dawn" was produced under the direction of Hugh Ryan Conway, director of a score of cinema successes, and as is customary in a production made by Benj. B. Hampton, a powerful cast was assembled for the screen translation of the Zane Grey novel. Roy Stewart, who contributed much to the success of "The Westerners" and "The Sagebrusher," has an equally powerful role in "Riders of the Dawn." Beautiful and talented Claire Adams, an ingenue artist of unquestionable merit, is seen as the heroine, and Robert McKim, the noted heavy, forcefully injects a new brand of villainy.

Joseph J. Dowling, of "The Miracle Man" fame, supplies one of his beloved characterizations. Other notables in the roster of "Riders of the Dawn" are: Marc Robbins, Frederick Starr, Violet Schram, Marie Messenger, Frank Brownlee and Arthur Morrison, who also achieved no little distinction in "Desert Gold" and "The Sagebrusher."

Lew Cody Forecasts Good

Early Showings Indicate Success; Special Campaign Book Is Issued

EARLY showings of "The Butterfly Man," the latest special production in which Lew Cody is starred by Robertson Cole, is said to indicate that the predictions made by the distributing corporation as to the drawing power of this picture are being amply borne out. Messages which are coming to the executive offices from the twenty-five branches in the country tell of an even greater success than was won by Mr. Cody in "The Beloved Cheater," which was the first of his new series produced by Gasnier for distribution by Robertson-Cole.

To back up the acting of Mr. Cody, which is at its best in "The Butterfly Man," there is presented to the exhibitor a great diversity of exploitation opportunities on this picture. Feeling confident that this phase of the production would mean an even greater success than its mere merits as a dramatic screen production, Robertson Cole lost no time in preparing a most sumptuous campaign book to suggest to the exhibitor methods of exploiting film.

Advantage is taken, first of all, of the great publicity which this story enjoyed in its novelized version. Written by George Barr McCutcheon, "The Butterfly Man" enjoyed a great vogue among American readers. Several methods of cashing in on the popularity of the writer are suggested in the press book, including a tie-up with book stores on the McCutcheon novel.

Adopt Commission Regime

Three Commissioners Will Guide Activities of Universal City

UNIVERSAL CITY, California, the home of Universal films, has adopted a commission form of government, it was announced this week at Universal's New York headquarters. Following the lead of other American communities, a committee of three men has been appointed to administer the affairs of the little screen municipality. They are Isadore Bernstein, Sam Van Ronkel and Louis E. Loeb, all three well-known in the film world. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal company, will hold rank as mayor of Universal City and be an ex-officio member of the commission. In his absence, the Commission of Three will be supreme.

Since its inception in 1913, Universal City has been under a one-man government. The general manager, representing the Universal company, has in the past been mayor, controller, police judge and everything else. The affairs of the curious city have grown beyond the scope of one man, however, causing the change to the commission system.

The three commissioners will share the burdens of administration equally. Bernstein will be known as production manager, Van Ronkel as studio manager and Loeb as business manager. All phases of activity within the gates of Universal City have been catalogued under one of these three heads.

Bernstein was the first general manager of Universal City. He left Universal about five years ago and produced pictures of his own. Van Ronkel has been associated with the film industry for many years, although he has never been identified directly in the production of pictures. Loeb comes to Universal from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Keenan Picture Due May 2

Strong Cast Announced for Pathe Star in His "Dollar for Dollar"

THE first of the Pathe features to be released in the month of May is "Dollar for Dollar," a Frank Keenan production, said to be one of the finest pictures in which the noted star has ever appeared. It will be released on May 2, and hundreds of exhibitors who have shared in the success of previous Keenan pictures have already booked it.

A strong cast is seen in support of Mr. Keenan, Kathleen Kirkham, Kate Van Buren, Jay Belasco and Gertrude Clair are among the well known faces in the supporting cast. Miss Kirkham will be remembered for her work in "The Master Mind." Kate Van Buren and Jay Belasco were the youthful lovers in "Smouldering Embers," and they have similar roles in this picture. Gertrude Clair duplicates her splendid work in "Brothers Divided." Others in the cast are Harry Van Meter, Larry Steers and Harry Kendall.

All the strength that has characterized the previous work of Mr. Keenan is said to be found in "Dollar for Dollar." Several of the exteriors were staged at Bear Valley in the mountains of Southern California, and some unusual effects were achieved. The interiors are of the usual Keenan standard.

As may be inferred from the title the theme is developed from the theory that as we sow we reap. A woman in this case turns blackmailer to avenge the death of her husband. One of the men she blackmailed became her enemy. Another becomes her sympathetic friend. The author, Ethel Watts Mumford, gracefully unfolds her situation with Keenan as Marcus Gard, disclosed as a power in the world of finance and politics. This man with power over the lives and fortunes of many people reveals many of the grim qualities of a strong man of business; and when he discovers the woman blackmailer in her operations, a battle of wits between the two is created.

Wesley Barry to Be Starred

Neilan Will Make Series of Boy Stories; "Penrod" to Be Filmed

MARSHALL NEILAN last week announced plans in connection with starring little Wesley Barry, the freckle faced youth who appears in "Don't Ever Marry," "Daddy Long Legs" and other Neilan-directed pictures.

The story in which Wesley will be featured is an adaptation from an original boy story by Mr. Neilan and Reed Heustis. No title has as yet been selected but it will be the first of a number of kid pictures in which Mr. Neilan plans to star young Barry during the coming year. Among the subjects in which Wesley will be seen on the screen for Mr. Neilan, will be an adaptation of Booth Tarkington's famous "Penrod."

For the past year little Barry has been studying for stardom under Mr. Neilan's tuition. Aside from detailed lessons effecting his conduct before the camera, Mr. Neilan has provided the boy with daily lessons in riding, boxing, swimming and in fact all forms of athletics besides which the youngster is receiving his general education at home under the expert eye of a private tutor.

To co-direct the initial Wesley Barry story, Marshall Neilan has just engaged Jack McDermott, considered one of the most promising young directors among Hollywood producing circles. Mr. McDermott is very well known in the trade, having been a director of excellent repute with the Christie Comedy Company and prior to that, with Universal. Reed Heustis, who as above mentioned is co-author with Mr. Neilan of the story, will write the continuity.

Selling Force Is Increased

Heavy Business Causes Enlarged Staff in Hodkinson Organization

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces its intention of immediately enlarging its selling staff by fifty per cent. Mr. Hodkinson in speaking of the proposed increase, called attention to the circumstances which have made the enlargement of the selling organization an imperative necessity.

"The progress of our organization and the constant improvement in the quality of our pictures," said Mr. Hodkinson, "have naturally resulted in an increased volume of business, with which the present selling force is scarcely able to cope. We are, therefore, looking for the best material which can be found in the selling field of the industry. I want to take this occasion to point out the unusual opportunity offered to young men gifted with energy and vision. These qualities are as essential as experience and much harder to find.

"I hope that every man in the selling field who is looking for a career, rather than a mere job will send me his name. I want the best brains in the selling field, as well as every other department of our organization. The motion picture industry today offers a maximum of reward to a young man with ambition and the ability to think and look ahead."

Charles Miller, director of "The Law of the Yukon," an adaptation of the Robert W. Service poem of the same name. The picture is a Mayflower production released through Realart

Releasing Plans for Butler Picture

Contracts are now in New York for the signing by one of the big distributing organizations for the distribution of the D. N. Schwab Productions starring David Butler. The first production of this recently organized company, "Sitting on the World," has been shown, and so favorable were the comments that the picture was sold immediately, and contract for future releases negotiated.

Work has already been started on the second of the Butler subjects which is "Smiling All the Way," an adaptation from a recent magazine article prepared by Paul Schofield.

"Humoresque" Showing in Ritz-Carlton

"Humoresque," Cosmopolitan Productions' new feature picture, featuring Alma Rubens, directed by Frank Borzage, which is scheduled for release by Paramount-Artcraft on June 6, will be given a special private showing in the big ball room of the Ritz Carlton Hotel, New York, on May 4. Prominent men and women will be invited, among whom will be such noted philanthropists and captains of industry and finance as Jacob Schiff, Oscar S. Straus and many others.

To Produce on A Bigger Scale

Canadian Photoplays to Release Big Picture in the Fall

IN a statement just issued by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, the announcement is made that the Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., which produced "Back to God's Country," has adopted plans for extensive production work in the future. Most of the details are being taken care of by Ernest Shipman, who upon the completion of the First National Convention this week in Chicago will leave for Canada to "sit in" with the Board of Directors of the Canadian Photoplays. According to the present plans of this producing organization, a "super feature" will be ready for release by First National in the fall.

It is the opinion of the First National that the entrance of the men controlling Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., into the field of picture production is another argument in favor of the contention that producing forces in the picture industry at the present time include figures of responsible financial and political positions, not "get-rich-quick" adventurers, "wild-cat" promoters and kindred kinds of fortune-hunters. With this point in mind First National reviews the opening chapter that led to the formation of Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., in the following statement. Speaking of the company's decision to continue production of even bigger pictures than "Back to God's Country," the First National statement begins:

"This decision by the Canadian company represents far more than an announcement of the continuation of its production plans. And perhaps the keynote of the situation is the fact that the men who decided to proceed in the producing 'bigger and better pictures' are new to the motion picture business, and represent the soundest business men and economists of the Dominion.

"It was on February 19, 1919, that the men who have repudiated even the faintest accusations that motion picture production is a branch of wild-cat promotion, unreliable, not advantageous for the men with capital and that it best typifies the get-rich-quick investor, first met in Calgary, Canada, to consider plans for the making of motion pictures in that dominion.

"Among those who attended the first meeting were members of Parliament, multi-millionaires, bankers and prominent business men of the Province of Alberta. The consensus of opinion at the outset fixed the purpose definitely in the minds of those who were to be entrusted with the production of the initial feature to bring forth a picture that would reflect credit on Canadian activity in this line.

"Credulous speculators who regarded the first meeting of this group of business men and financiers with extreme doubt were surprised to find in the newspaper accounts next morning that Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., had no intention of making an exorbitant profit percentage that could not be expected in any other enterprise. The men who backed up the effort with their dollars had no interest in amassing profits. Unless the proposition was sound, logical and businesslike, their support would not be forthcoming. Fair profits, a picture that would carry out their high ideals and the most modern and thorough business methods carried through out every detail were their requirements.

"Before the charter members of Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., was brought the efforts of many leading authors. And out of the many literary works was selected the story, 'Back to God's Country,' by James Oliver Curwood, who had devoted a great part of his time and writings to Canadian locale. And when the time came for the production of his story, its most remarkable scenes were filmed on the bosom of Lesser Slave Lake, north of parallel 56, in a temperature of 60 degrees below the zero mark.

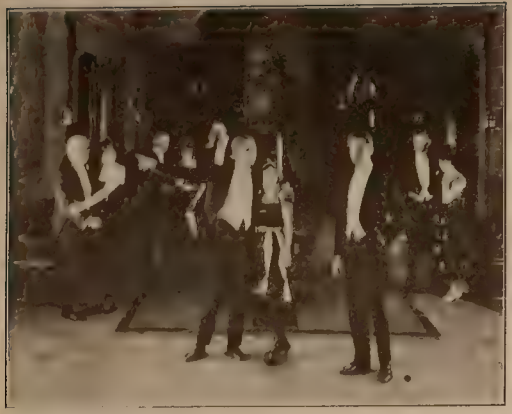
"The sale of its distribution right to First National Exhibitors' Circuit was then effected. And the gratifying returns made on this production through First National's distributing chain is largely responsible for the enthusiastic verdict of Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., to continue producing."

Will Produce in England

Famous Players to Work in London with British Stories and Locales

FILMING of British stage successes in England for distribution in this country, England and on the Continent will begin at once by a Famous Players-Lasky, British producing company, it was declared by Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, upon his arrival aboard the Mauretania.

The plays include all of Sir James M. Barrie's successes, including "Peter Pan," "What Every Woman Knows," and "The Little Minister." A new play being written by Henry Arthur Jones, and the Drury Lane spectacle, "The Great Day," also are among the British stage successes which will be converted into motion pictures under the direction of Jesse L. Lasky, producing head of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Hugh Ford, a director of the company, is already on his way to London to open the new Famous Players-Lasky studio in that city with the production of Marie Corelli's novel, "The Sorrows of Satan."



These plays, Mr. Zukor stated, will be enacted by British casts in British settings, and more than any thing else will serve to bring the Old World closer to America.

While in London Mr. Zukor conferred with several leaders of British life, it is stated, and he says he received many indications that the British people are greatly pleased, because American motion picture producers were going to film British plays in British settings for American consumption.

"When I was in England," he asserted, "I received letters by the score congratulating me and my associates on our enterprise. The British people like American photoplays, which are having a tremendous success throughout the British Isles as well as on the continent. But, naturally, they want to see photoplays in English settings, and with our new London studio we are in a position to supply them."

Hugh Ford Goes to Europe

To Take Charge of European Studios of F. P.-Lasky Corporation

HUGH FORD, director general of European Sudios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, left New York last week for London aboard the White star liner Cedric. Since the first of the year his trip has been postponed many times, due to the building conditions in England and the impossibility of preparing the new London studio of Famous Players Lasky British Producers, Ltd., for immediate production of pictures. Everything is now ready, and the first picture to be done by Mr. Ford will be "The Sorrows of Satan," by Marie Corelli.

Mr. Ford has many things to say in regard to his contemplated activities with the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd.

"My particular work will be in assisting to establish a British institution to develop British talent and produce pictures with an international appeal," he stated. "It is my firm belief that motion pictures will play a big part in keeping up the spirit of friendliness and good feeling between the United States and Great Britain by the production of pictures with an international appeal. By developing new British talent and writers, and interchanging them between our New York and West Coast studios, and having our leading stars working in the European studios, it is bound to bring about a common interest in motion pictures between the two countries and a common interest in any one thing is bound to increase the friendliness and good feeling.

"A complete lighting system has been sent abroad to introduce the American lighting system, the possibilities of which have not been capitalized upon by the British. They do not use the Cooper-Hewitt banks, and the Sunlight arc is a comparatively recent invention, so it was necessary to send a shipment of these lights ahead of us.

"I am very enthusiastic over the possibilities of the natural settings offered by Britain in the springtime, and very eager to get started."

S-L Production is Started

Work Begins on "Love, Honor and Obey" at Metro's New York Studio

WITH Maxwell Karger, director general, in full charge, Metro's New York studios at No. 3 West Sixty-first street resumed picture-making this week. The first production to get under way is Eugene Walter's picturization of "The Tyranny of Weakness," the successful novel by Charles Neville Buck. This picture, an S-L Production which Metro will distribute, is being made under the working title of "Love, Honor and Obey."

Eugene Walter recently joined Metro's staff of distinguished authors, and "Love, Honor and Obey" is the famous playwright's first screen dramatization under Metro auspices.

"Love, Honor and Obey" is to be interpreted by an all-star cast and every effort is being devoted to making this, the first of the five S-L pictures for Metro release this year, a notable special production de luxe. Mr. Walter, as photo-dramatist, is giving personal assistance in the staging and direction of the story, being "on the set" throughout the day while the cast is at work.

Wilda Bennett, the prima donna of the current stage success, "Apple Blossoms," has the leading feminine roles in "Love, Honor and Obey."

Speeding up on Big Special

Robertson-Cole Expects to Have Carpentier Picture Ready May 30

URGED by continuous demands from exhibitors who are anticipating beating all records with the production, Robertson-Cole is putting forward every effort to complete details of the Georges Carpentier "million dollar production" in full time for the pre-release, which is scheduled for May 30th.

In the studio at Fort Lee, N. J., where the interiors are being made, the company under the direction of John G. Adolfi is working morning, noon and night. Carpentier has cancelled engagement after engagement so that he can devote nearly every one of his waking hours to furthering the desires of all those interested, it is stated by Robertson-Cole.

Notwithstanding the speedy work, nothing is being left undone and the production, according to those around the studio, will be as polished as Carpentier himself. The latter is reported to be showing an extraordinary aptitude for motion picture acting, and every day reveals some new phase of the man's unusual versatility, it is said. Throughout last week, M. Carpentier and the principals in the supporting cast were busy making some of the dramatic episodes of the feature society drama.

The picture has not yet been named. So many elements enter into the story and such a striking character is played by Carpentier that Robertson-Cole is giving the matter the very gravest of consideration, recognizing it is no small task to chose a title of sufficient brevity that carries with it the characteristics of the story and the star.

Today, nothing but interior settings have been "shot," but Director Adolfi anticipates beginning exterior production next week. Some locations have been selected at Lakewood, N. J. It is expected that the final scene will be taken on or about May 8th, and cutting will be begun immediately after that date.

The Robertson-Cole Exchanges throughout the country have been unable to answer all inquiries regarding the production owing to their volume, it is stated; but every letter is being answered in the order that it is received. Extra help is being engaged in all offices to handle the additional work that has resulted from the Carpentier production, and everybody is said to be working at top speed.

More Time to Two-Reelers

Unusual Time, Energy and Expense Given Short-Lengths by Universal

ACCORDING to Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, who is at present giving his attention to the affairs of the studios at Universal City, there is an ever-increasing demand for short material of the highest grade, and his organization will be the first to heed the call of the big exhibitors.

"The managers of the cinema theatres have discovered that the five-reel feature is the most desirable length, as almost any story can be told in that footage," says a statement from the Universal offices. "This leaves considerable room for program fillers, and the public desires the quality of the short subjects to be on a par with that of the feature productions.

"Universal has therefore decided to devote unusual time, energy and expense to the production of two-reel subjects of the highest quality—tabloid features that will occupy the same position in the picture world that the one-act drama does on the stage or the high class short story does in the field of literature. Some of the best directors on the Universal lot will devote the next two months to the filming of two-reel productions that will be features in every respect except footage."

Jack Ford, who produced Harry Carey's biggest success, "Marked Men," is now at work on a two-reel story entitled "Two from Texas," with a cast of unusual strength. This miniature drama is being enacted by J. Farrell McDonald, Ethel Ritchie, Hennie Lee, Dick Cummings, John Walters, and Jack Woods.

Philip Rosen, the man who filmed "The Miracle Man," and who recently produced "The Road to Divorce," with Mary MacLaren, and "The Path She Chose," with Anne Cornwall, has started on a two-reel pastoral drama entitled "'Neath Purple Skies," from the pen of Alma Hearn. Chief in the cast will be Magda Lane, Alfred Regnier, Clarence Hodge, and Joseph Neary.

Charming Priscilla Dean who has created a sensation in her latest Universal picture, "The Virgin of Stamboul"

Believe Curwood Story Will Smash Records

That the booking records of any previous Vitagraph special production will be smashed by the forthcoming James Oliver Curwood production, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," is becoming more apparent each day, according to the producers. Every mail brings contracts from the larger cities served by that companies' various exchanges. The advance exploitation received by this film, however, seems to have created interest everywhere, and several hundred managers of theatres in the smaller centers have also booked it.

Vitagraph officials say that there is every evidence that even the records hung up by "Over the Top" will be smashed. This prediction was based on the figures totalled this week, which showed that in addition to the big city bookings, several hundred smaller town theatres had booked the film.

Ruby De Remer Dines Marcus Loew

Ruby De Remer gave a Swedish supper party at her home, 33 West Sixty-seventh street, on Friday evening of last week, at which Marcus Loew was the guest of honor. The party was in the nature of a "reunion" of those who accompanied Mr. Loew during his tour of the South some time ago. Two reels of motion pictures taken during the course of the Southern trip were shown to the guests. Doraldino, who was also a member of the traveling party, entertained by dancing in Hawaiian costume, accompanied by her four Hawaiian musicians.

In this role Miss Bennett will make her first screen appearance.

Vitagraph's Releases for May

Four Starring Vehicles on List; Larry Semon in Own Story

AMONG the Vitagraph productions scheduled for release during the month of May are:

Larry Semon in "School Days,' which was written and directed by the star; Harry T. Morey in "The Sea Raider," written by Harry T. Dittmar and directed by Edwin L. Hollywood; Alice Joyce in "Dollars and the Woman," a special production from the story by Albert Payson Terhune, directed by George Terwilliger, and Earle Williams in "A Master Stroke," from the novel by Frederick Van Rensselaer Dey, directed by Chester Bennett.

It is believed by Vitagraph that these plays represent an exceptionally good selection from the exhibitor's point of view.

Vitagraph has issued the following statement concerning the character of the productions scheduled for release during May:

"As in his former comedies Larry Semon has a well connected story in his new comedy, 'School Days.' The earlier scenes show Larry and his boyhood friends learning their three R's at the little one-room district school. The bad boy, the fat boy, the teacher's pet and all the others dear to school days are present. Then the action jumps to several years later and shows what become of the school boys and girls. Of course, none is what he expected to be, not even Larry.

"In 'The Sea Raider,' Mr. Morey has assumed an entirely new type of character, but one that fits perfectly his robust physique. As the title indicates, he is seen as a seaman, the master of a big fishing schooner. Nearly all the scenes are of the great outdoors, either on land or sea. It is a strenuous story with many exciting scenes, including the burning of the schooner at sea, and has taxed the ingenuity of both camera men and director. The two leading feminine roles, of practically equal importance, are played by Alice Calhoun and Louiszeti Valentine.

"The new Alice Joyce special production, 'Dollars and the Woman,' affords the Vitagraph star one of the most emotional roles she has assumed for some time, one that shows her in a variety of moods and takes her from the daughter of luxury type, in which she has met with such great success, to poverty and then back again to wealth, which she cannot fully enjoy through her fear of meeting straightened circumstances. Aside from the strong dramatic story, the picture preaches an excellent sermon on thrift. Robert Gordon is Miss Joyce's leading man in this picture.

"'A Master Stroke' again presents Earle Williams in a role that is partly serious and some time light comedy, although not so out-and-out comedy as Winchell Smith's play, 'The Fortune Hunter,' in which he recently met with such great success. It is a comedy drama of wits, women and Wall Street. There are many original touches in the story, one of the unexpected situations being the attempt to 'crack' a safe to return money, not to steal it. Vola Vale is Mr. Williams' leading woman."

Equity Advertising Heavily

Entire Campaign Book Inserted in Trade Paper; "Stunt" Gets Notice

AS an instance of the advertising that the Equity Pictures Corporation is carrying on for "The Forbidden Woman," the insertion of an entire campaign book in "The Exhibitor," a trade journal, is described in a statement just received from the Equity offices. The statement follows:

"It has long been conceded that the motion picture industry has within its personnel some of the most energetic, vital and wide-awake business men in the country —men who are accustomed to tackling the very hardest sort of propositions and accomplishing the apparent 'impossible'—but the most daring proposition that has come up, to date, is the insertion by Ben Amsterdam, of Equity Productions, Philadelphia, of the entire publicity and advertising campaign book of 'The Forbidden Woman' as an advertisement in 'The Exhibitor,' a trade paper with a circulation of many thousands.

"Mr. Amsterdam certainly hit the ball on the head when he decided to place the colored insert of thirty-six pages — Equity's lock, stock and barrel—intact, and when exhibitors opened their April 15th trade issue to find Equity's complete volume, cover included, waiting to greet them, they were hit squarely between the eyes. No ad has ever created such a sensation among exhibitors, and the achievement adds one more to the already long list gained by Equity for dynamic exploitation of their Clara Kimball Young output.

"The success of the Clara Kimball Young 'Mystery Style Model,' who suddenly came to light in Birmingham, Ala., for the showing of 'The Forbidden Woman' under the auspices of the Trianon theatre, is only another sample of the live-wire advertising used in the exploitation of Equity Pictures. This stunt was most successfully put through by M. A. Lightman, Equity franchise holder for the states of North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama, and the management of the Trianon theatre, where 'The Forbidden Woman' was shown the week of April 4.

Irving Schwab Leaves Vitagraph Office

Irving C. Schwab has resigned from the advertising staff of Vitagraph. Mr. Schwab has been associated with Vitagraph for the past two years.

Each room is furnished with a telephone.

More Prints Necessary to Satisfy Demand

The demand for "Sex," J Parker Read, Jr.'s-Louise Glaum production, from every section of the country has necessitated the shipment of additional prints the past week to twenty-two of the Hodkinson exchanges.

Last week "Sex" created two picture records in Des Moines, playing to the largest business ever done on a picture in the Iowa metropolis.

Among the smaller first run houses that have arranged to stray temporarily from their usual two-a-week policy to give the Louise Glaum production a week's presentation are: The Mecca Palace, Saginaw, Mich.; the Grand, Rutland, Vt.; the Grand Jamestown, N. Whiting is secretary and Paul Cazstellaine, treasurer. The board of directors is made up of capitalists and business men. The advisory board is chosen from the stockholders, and the whole concern is stated to be backed by big moneyed men.

"Flying A" Release to Star Mary Minter

"Peggy Rebels," starring Mary Miles Minter, will soon be put on the market by the American Film Company. The "Flying A" statement on the forthcoming release maintains that in this picture Miss Minter "is unquestionably at her best as a bewitching water sprite" and later as a "dream of a girl arrayed for her first ball, with the manners and vocabulary of an old tar." The drama, in five acts, includes in its cast Alan Forrest, George Periolat, Jack Connolly and Adele Farrington. The scenario was written by Elizabeth Mahoney and the direction was by Henry King.

Edgar Lewis Assembles Strong Line-Up

Pathe announces that a strong cast marks the line-up for Edgar Lewis's newest production, "Sherry," which is to be released via the Pathe exchanges. The Most IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT EQUITY ever made

THE Motion Picture Industry at large is aware of the fact that EQUITY is not in the habit of making promiscuous or meaningless announcements.

Exhibitors especially, knowing EQUITY'S policy of truth, will understand the full meaning of what follows.

We are about to release our latest Clara Kimball Young picture—"FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL," Marah Ellis Ryan's love story of old California.

"FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL" surpasses "Eyes of Youth" in dramatic action and box office power, attested to by the action of Mr. Sidney Grauman of Los Angeles, who broke his long established policy of playing no pictures other than those of one prominent Producing Company, and who further, for the first time in the history of his house, booked any outside picture for an indefinite run—thus, it is with pleasure we announce that—

HARRY GARSON presents

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG

"For the Soul of Rafael"

Marah Ellis Ryan's Magnificent Love Story of Old California

"FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL" had its premiere at Grauman's Rialto Theatre in Los Angeles, Sunday, April 21st.

Congratulatory telegraphic reports, too long for publication here, contain such statements as "Opened to capacity---smashing success," etc.

If you recall the nation-wide success of "Eyes of Youth" you can perhaps imagine what "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL" must be when we state that "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL" is a finer picture than "Eyes of Youth."

Elaborate exploitation, such as has never been seen for any picture, has been prepared for "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL."

Playing engagements are now being arranged through all Equity Franchise Holders.

Watch for further announcements.

The Palace and Princess theatres, Merryville, Tenn., are also owned by the Signal.

The foregoing houses are represented as an indication of the rapid expansion and progress of the Signal Company, for at the present time there are said to be under construction several theatres in various cities and plans formed for more.

F. H. Dowler, Jr., vice-president and general manager of the Signal Amusement Company, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Too much pep to write the letter in the back of the book this week. Keep your eye peeled for it. It is coming next week.

"Foreigners Are Catching Up"

THAT the American film industry has just as much to fear from foreign competition as any other branch of American commercial life, is the opinion of Erich von Stroheim, director of Universal-Jewel pictures. Foreign producers rapidly are catching up, in cinematographic technique, with the strides made by American producers while Europe's film business was halted by war, he says. European films soon will vie with American films, not only in Europe and other parts of the world, but also in America, he forecasts.

"American producers had better look out for foreign picture makers," said Stroheim recently, upon his arrival in New York to supervise the final editing of his latest Universal-Jewel production, "The Devil's Pass Key." "In France, England, Italy, and even in Germany today, film producers rapidly are advancing to the position they held before the war. They have learned the lessons of America's film advancement quickly, and soon will master all of the latest arts and crafts in the business.

"Just as foreign literature is different from American literature, so are foreign picture plays different from American pictues," he says. "Foreign writers go more into the deeper relationships of mankind than do American authors. They depict more motion and less of the frivolities of life. This is reflected on the European screen.

"oreign film producers also have learned that in a five-reel picture you cannot build up the niceties of characterization and the logical development of a complicated plot such as is found in literature. As a result, there is no limit on footage for master film productions. Eight and ten reel photoplays are not unusual in the present European market.

"Thus they are able to work towards a literature of the screen. Their work is receiving recognition by all classes, even the most learned and particular classes of society. Moving pictures in Europe are get "Foreign film producers also have ting a class of select patronage that in this country has a tendency to look askance at the screen.

Eric Von Stroheim, who jumped to national fame with his production of "Blind Husbands," has a new success to his credit in "The Devil's Pass Key," also a Universal picture

"It is my conviction that the photoplay is destined to approach the legitimate theatre and other arts in selective appeal. At present a photoplay is produced to please the greatest possible number of patrons. There is no decided attempt to recognize that moving picture patrons, like theatre patrons and patrons of other arts, are divided into classes by their mutual likes and dislikes.

"Just as tragedy on the stage or in novel form has its following, it will have it on the screen. Just as high class drama, comedy and even burlesque has its stage following, so similar screen products will have theirs. This will not be generally apparent, however, until there is selective presentation until certain moving picture theatres are recognized as the home of certain classes of screen productions.

"When this takes place in America, and there are theatres where the most critical patrons will know they can see artistic, high class and advanced photo plays, and nothing else, then American producers will produce selected pictures for selective classes. Then the class which now scoffs at the screen will be able to see what it wants, and the lover of slap stick comedy will be able to go elsewhere and see what he likes.

"This is what has come about to a great extent in Europe. The danger is that the European producers will gain an advantage along this line over American producers. They already are gaining it in Europe. They are working fast to gain it in other countries. Finally they will try to gain it in this country."

Conservation Films are Coming

Educational Will Release Pictures for State Commission

STARTING with the opening of its new exchanges, Educational Films Corporation will release the motion picture productions of the Conservation Commission of the State of New York. In making this announcement this week, E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager, pointed out that it had special significance.

"These pictures will have a great drawing power," said Mr. Hammons, "and a general appeal to audiences, but it is more important that their acquisition gives more evidence that Educational Films Corporation is recognized by official and semi-public bodies everywhere as the proper medium for release. These organizations see in Educational not only the mechanical arrangements for distribution, but a company that maintains the atmosphere of the high class product.

"Educational is the first and only company to distribute pictures of the National Geographic Society, an organization that has shunned association with any other film organization. For some months we have been distributing the official pictures of the American Red Cross, which are being made abroad, and two expeditions are out for the Interchurch World Movement and these pictures will be supplied through Educational exchanges. We have very close relations with several other organizations. It should be pointed out that these arrangements are not commercial but that the organizations have selected Educational because it offers the assurance that the pictures will go to the class of people that it is desired to reach."

The New York Conservation Commission has been engaged in making motion pictures for its own special uses for several years, under the active supervision of Warwick S. Carpenter, secretary of the commission. This work has not only supplied the necessary information for the proper production, but has convinced the members of the commission of the desirability of having proper distribution methods through the nation. The pictures will be offered for general release, in single reel, starting in June.

New York State has not been exploited well for its scenic possibilities. The beauties of the Adirondacks and Catskills, the attractive water scenery around Lakes Placid, George and Champlain, and the myriad of smaller lakes of the state, are little known except to visitors. Many declare that this state offers more attractive "vacation journeys" than any portion of America, but that they are often neglected for longer railroad trips because they are so little known.

However, these pictures will by no means be confined to scenic beauties. Mr. Carpenter has access to every portion of the state and a full appreciation of the value of its exploitation for purely tate purposes. Included in the pictures that have been made are some unusually fine pictures of bird and animals in their native habitat, many of which were taken in the state's own preserves, will bring joy to the heart of the poet man.

Much attention will be paid in these pictures to the educational and development angle. There will be attention given to the hatcheries, to the conservation where our hearty annual and game bird are reared. Forest Conservation Commissioner Pratt almost the legendary theory and one angle which will supply variety to the product.

Twelve Plan Book Reviews in This Issue

One of Realart's ingenue stars, Mary Miles Minter

Minter's Next Announced

Realart Star Will Be Seen in Picturization of Society Novel

FOLLOWING its policy of presenting Mary Miles Minter in roles that will emphasize her dramatic talents, Realart Pictures Corporation announces this week that the star's next appearance will be in the title role of "Jenny Be Good," Wilbur Finley Easley's novel of New York City social life.

The picture will be available sometime in May. In it Miss Minter assumes a strong dramatic part, which is said to be in line with her youthful character but one that, nevertheless, marks a definite step forward in the steady progress she has displayed in her Realart productions of "Anne of Green Gables," "Judy of Rogues Harbor" and "Nurse Marjorie."

The production was directed by William Desmond Taylor, who directed Miss Minter in "Nurse Marjorie," and who is engaged in making his own productions. Miss Minter is supported by a Realart cast which includes Lu Belasco, cousin of the famous American producer, as leading man, and the star's sister, Margaret Shelby, in an important role. Others in the cast are Frederick Stanton, Sylvia Ashton, Edwin Brown, Lillian Rambeau, Catherine Wallace, Fanny Cossar, Maggie Halloway Fisher and Grace Pike.

Julia Crawford Ivers, who wrote the scenarios for "Huck and Tom," "Tom Sawyer," "Huckleberry Finn" and "Nurse Marjorie," made the adaptation of the story. James C. Van Trees, who has been Miss Minter's camera man in most of her recent productions, had charge of the photography in this picture.

That letter in the back of the book is coming next week. Too busy this week to attend to it.

Clara Young Has Second Big Week in West

Equity Pictures' latest Clara Kimball Young's production, "For the Soul of Rafael," an adaptation from Mariah Ellis Ryan's novel of the golden days of Southern California, is nearing the completion of its second big week at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles. The production has broken all box-office records of the theatre, where capacity attendance is evident at every performance, says Equity Pictures.

The story offers an exceptional love theme of old California, presented in a way that is designed to both startle and fascinate, and it is readily conceded to be Clara Kimball Young's crowning achievement greater, indeed, than "Eyes of Youth" or "The Forbidden Woman."

Criterion Theatre Opened

Hugo Riesenfeld Gives "Unified Program"; Interior Is Improved

THE Criterion theatre ushered in another chapter of its career at 7.30 p.m. last Saturday, when it opened its doors under new management and presented the first of Hugo Riesenfeld's programs in that house. Max Cooper is manager of the Criterion under the Riesenfeld regime. The entire performance was a demonstration of what Mr. Riesenfeld calls "the unified program"; either by suggestion, music or color effects, Mr. Riesenfeld aimed to link up every part of the presentation with De Mille's production, "Why Change Your Wife."

The program, including the overture, the forty-five minutes of incidental "shots" and entertainment, and the feature picture, "Why Change Your Wife," occupied two hours. The work of the orchestra both in accompanying the picture with music selected by Hugo Riesenfeld, and in playing the overture, deserves commendation. The conductor of the Criterion orchestra, Victor Wagner, who has been associated with Mr. Riesenfeld both abroad and here for many years, and was cellolst of the Rialto orchestra, is not new to the conducting field. He was conductor of the Irving Place theatre orchestra during its halcyon days. His work naturally discloses the fact that he is no novice. The orchestra though concealed is a strengthening and integral part of the novel picture presentation.

Preliminary to the feature picture there was flashed on the screen a series of small bits from various scenics. Hugo Riesenfeld titled it, "Beautiful Things," and the general name was deserved. Then came "The Tale of a Terrier," a Paramount-Post offering, that introduced the audience to a land of beauty with a runaway pup for a guide. The Criterion quintette, which did a little dancing before and after the picture, was good to look upon. Helen Shipman, who sang the solo part of "Why Change Your Wife," won applause.

Sixty thousand dollars in four days, which the Criterion had advertised as its new record for building alteration work, was apparently well spent. The lobby, which once had been hopeless, gave place to one in which there was more than elbow room. The dangerous steps in various parts of the theatre had disappeared. And the stage with its drops and decorations by Willy Pogany seemed strange to those who had known the dim, dull Criterion.

H. H. Van Loan in New York

Youthful Screen Writer Confers with Producers on Future Work

H. H. Van Loan, author of many photoplays, whose latest success is the Universal feature starring Priscilla Dean, "The Virgin of Stamboul"

THE arrival of H. H. Van Loan in New York was the cue for all the leading motion picture producers whose offices are located in this city to get in touch with this ex-newspaper man, who is ranked among the very foremost scenario writers of the day. A list of those who called up or came to see Van Loan reads like a producers' roster and is an eloquent tribute to the persistency which he displayed in the years gone by when all that stood between him and failure was a lot of courage and a battered typewriter.

In the fortnight that he has been in town, Van Loan has already sold all of the manuscripts which he brought with him from the West Coast, and has arranged to write several others for prominent stars. Among the deals which have been closed is the purchase of a tremendous story for Hope Hampton, the screen's latest stellar sensation. In addition, Van Loan is here to discuss with the producers the stories which he has in mind, and which have already been contracted for by Norma Talmadge, Tom Mix, Bessie Barriscale and several other stars.

Although a young man, Van Loan has reached the pinnacle of his profession and lays his success to his exceptional experiences and his persistency in continuing to put forth stories until motion picture producers recognized their value, and then the rest was easy sailing.

"In Old Kentucky" Continues to Score

Anita Stewart's massive production, "In Old Kentucky," continues to smash theatre box office records throughout the country, it is stated. In Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, last week the gross receipts are said to have reached a figure never before approached by any attraction. Nearly $3,500 was taken in Sunday, according to reports, and business all week was absolute capacity.

Sennett Comedy Goes Over in Frisco

Mack Sennett's "Down on the Farm," his new big five-reel comedy which is being released by United Artists Corporation, made a tremendous hit with the critics of San Francisco, upon its first showing in this country at the Imperial theatre, announces a report from the United Artists' offices.

The Imperial theatre set aside the week as its comedy week for the year and presented "Down on the Farm" in a lavish manner, bringing to the theatre capacity business during the entire week, it is stated.

Thomas Nunan of the San Francisco Examiner in his review of the production said: "This is funny week at the Imperial theatre and if your doctor says it will kill you to laugh, be sure that you stay away from the Imperial. Mack Sennett's 'Down on the Farm' is the funniest comedy I have ever seen on the screen."

Gordon on the Alert for "Boy" Stories

Supplementing the recent announcement of the proposed organization of the Robert Gordon Productions Company, featurin Robert Gordon, comes the statement that Gordon has been the recipient of a great many letters, requesting more pictures in which the heart interest is centered in a boy character. It is the announced policy of the forces, contemplating an independent Gordon company, to feature the actor in stories of this sort as far as available material will permit. Mr. Gordon, in the course of a recent statement, said that while he has an interest in roles depicting young manhood, he has become strongly impressed with the demand for boy characterizations.

"The Splendid Hazard" Seen by Executives

The film adaptation of Harold MacGrath's novel, "The Splendid Hazard," produced and directed by Allan Dwan at the Brunton studios at Los Angeles, was privately shown in New York last week to the executives of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. Louis F. Gottschalk, orchestral compiler, has prepared a special operatic score from the masters of music which gives an added dignity to the production.

South American Rights Sold

UNDER an arrangement just concluded with Metro Pictures Corporation, Jacobo Glucksmann, acting for his brother Max, has obtained control of Metro's entire output of de luxe specials for 1920, together with some two score of Metro's "program" pictures, for all of South America. The Glucksmanns prior to closing the new contract had Metro releases for Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru and Bolivia Now they have the rights for the entire continent of Latin America, embracing in addition to the republics named, Ecuador, Colombia, Venezuela, the Guianas and Brazil.

Negotiations for the contract were conducted by Harry J. Cohen, manager of Metro's foreign department and Jacobo Glucksmann. The contract was signed by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro.

Jacobo Glucksmann was one of the pioneers of the new era in motion pictures for South America. He had formerly been associated with his brother, Max, in Buenos Ayres, where Max had his beginning as Pathe representative about seventeen years ago Jacobo came to the United States in 1917 to study for a few months the methods of exchange and exhibition here He saw such wide opportunities for development that he decided to stay and opened an office at 110 West Fortieth street, later moving to the Candler Building, at No. 220 West Forty Second street. He made one visit to South America some months ago.

According to Jacobo Glucksmann, South America this year is enjoying unprecedented prosperity in the motion picture industry. That prosperity, he declares, is due almost entirely to the popularity of American photoplays down there.

Marguerite De La Motte, who is featured in Metro's production of the Drury Lane melodrama, "The Hope"

"I venture to estimate," he said, "that ninety five per cent of all pictures shown throughout South America to day are made in the United States. American productions have almost cornered the market whereas, before the war, I don't think the United States had as much as five per cent of the pictures in the market there. Nearly ninety-five per cent came from France and Spain.

"I never could have imagined such rapid development in the industry as has taken place there So far as the exhibitors are concerned, South America is keeping right abreast of the United States. In the big cities, theatres are being erected that are right on par with the best on Broadway, New York, and the demand for good pictures is growing all the time

"The prices average very much the same as in the United States, a little cheaper if anything The runs of the shows are about the same as here One feature that's different, however, is the division of the shows into sections For instance, you can buy, we'll say for 20 centavos, a seat for the first section of the performance, starting at 8:45. That would include the news pictures and a part of the feature picture The next section, starting at 9:30, would include the rest of the feature picture The 10:15 section would be devoted to a comedy. In this way a person can time himself and see the part of the show he wants without having to see the whole business But most of the audience comes and stays throughout the show
